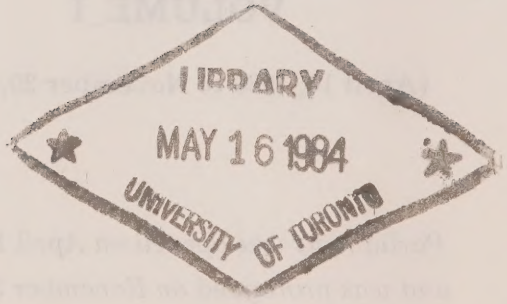
The Speaker



THE HONOURABLE JEAN MARCHAND, P.C.

The Leader of the Government

THE HONOURABLE HORACE ANDREW OLSON, P.C.

The Leader of the Opposition

THE HONOURABLE JACQUES FLYNN, P.C.

THE SENATE

Monday, April 14, 1980

OPENING OF FIRST SESSION

THIRTY-SECOND PARLIAMENT

Parliament having been summoned by Proclamation to meet this day for the dispatch of business—

The Senate met at 9.00 a.m.

SPEAKER OF THE SENATE

READING OF COMMISSION APPOINTING THE HONOURABLE JEAN MARCHAND, P.C.

The Honourable Jean Marchand, P.C., having taken the Clerk's chair, rose and informed the Senate that a Commission had been issued under the Great Seal of Canada, appointing him Speaker of the Senate.

The said Commission was then read by the Clerk.

The Hon. the Speaker then took the Chair at the foot of the Throne, to which he was conducted by the Honourable Senator Perrault, P.C., and the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod preceding.

Prayers.

COMMUNICATION FROM GOVERNOR GENERAL'S ADMINISTRATIVE SECRETARY

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a communication had been received from the Administrative Secretary to the Governor General, as follows:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

April 14, 1980

Sir,

I am commanded to inform you that the Right Honourable Bora Laskin, Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber to open the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament of Canada on this day, Monday, the fourteenth of April 1980, at 9.30 a.m.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY GOVERNOR GENERAL

The Right Honourable Bora Laskin, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne—

The Hon. the Speaker commanded the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to proceed to the House of Commons and acquaint that House that:

> It is the desire of the Honourable the Deputy Governor General that they attend him immediately in the Senate Chamber.

The House of Commons being come,

The Hon. the Speaker said:

> Honourable Members of the Senate:
> I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under his sign Manual and Signet constituting the Right Honourable Bora Laskin, Chief Justice of Canada, his Deputy, to do in His Excellency's name all acts on his part necessary to be done during His Excellency's pleasure.

The said Commission was then read by the Clerk.

The Hon. the Speaker said:

> Honourable Members of the Senate:
> I have it in command to let you know that His Excellency the Governor General does not see fit to declare the causes of his summoning the present Parliament of Canada until a Speaker of the House of Commons shall have been chosen, according to law; but this morning at the hour of 10.45 o'clock His Excellency will declare the causes of his calling Parliament.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Right Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

COMMUNICATION FROM GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SECRETARY

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a communication had been received from the Secretary to the Governor General, as follows:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

April 14, 1980

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will arrive at the Main Entrance of the Parliament Buildings at 10.45 a.m. on this day, Monday, the 14th of April 1980, and when it has been signified that all is in readiness, will proceed to the Chamber of the Senate to open formally the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament of Canada.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Esmond Butler
Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

The Senate adjourned until 10.30 a.m.

SECOND SITTING

The Senate met at 10.30 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

The Hon. the Speaker: As there is no business before the Senate, is it your pleasure, honourable senators, that the Senate do now adjourn during pleasure to await the arrival of His Excellency the Governor General?

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

At 10.45 a.m. His Excellency the Governor General having come and being seated upon the Throne—

The Hon. the Speaker said:

Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod,

You will proceed to the House of Commons and acquaint that House that it is the pleasure of His Excellency the Governor General that they attend him immediately in the Senate Chamber.

The House of Commons being come,

Their Speaker, the Hon. Jeanne Sauvé, said:

May it please Your Excellency,

The House of Commons has elected me their Speaker, though I am but little able to fulfil the important duties thus assigned to me.

If, in the performance of those duties, I should at any time fall into error, I pray that the fault may be imputed to me, and not to the Commons, whose servant I am, and who, through me, the better to enable them to discharge their duty to their Queen and Country, humbly claim all their undoubted rights and privileges, especially that they may have freedom of speech in their debates, access to Your Excellency's person at all seasonable times, and that their proceedings may receive from Your Excellency the most favourable construction.

The Hon. the Speaker of the Senate answered:

Madam Speaker, I am commanded by His Excellency the Governor General to declare to you that he freely confides in the duty and attachment of the House of Commons to Her Majesty's Person and Government, and not doubting that their proceedings will be conducted with wisdom, temper and prudence, he grants, and upon all occasions will recognize and allow, their constitutional privileges. I am commanded also to assure you that the Commons shall have ready access to His Excellency upon all seasonable occasions and that their proceedings, as well as your words and actions, will constantly receive from him the most favourable construction.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

His Excellency the Governor General was then pleased to open the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament with the following Speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

I have the honour to welcome you to the First Session of the 32nd Parliament of Canada.

During the course of the last few weeks, both my wife and I have come through a period of convalescence and I take this opportunity to express our deep gratitude for the good wishes we received from fellow-Canadians from all parts of the country.

Canada recently received the visit of The Prince of Wales, who undertook engagements in Vancouver and Victoria two weeks ago. In May, The Duke of Edinburgh will attend the Fifth Commonwealth Study Conference which opens in Kingston on May 18th. In July, Princess Margaret will take part in celebrations marking the 75th Anniversary of the entry into Confederation of the Provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Canada has very close and enduring ties with the Netherlands and I am greatly looking forward to representing our country at the accession to the Throne of Her Royal Highness Princess Beatrix of the Netherlands in Amsterdam on April 30th.

I have had the pleasure of visiting all the provincial capitals and the Northwest Territories during my first year in office. My wife and I are now looking forward to certain engagements in the Yukon and in smaller communities across our vast and beautiful land. Discovering Canada and meeting Canadians increases daily our awareness of the great natural and human resources of the country in which we are privileged to live.

We observe today not only the beginning of a new Parliament but the start of a new era. As Canada enters the 1980s, we confront serious challenges, but we look forward to even greater opportunities. Like our forbears, this generation of Canadians will be equal to the test. We will meet and overcome the challenges ahead, for the history of this land has proven, again and again, that everything is possible if our will to go on building together is strong.

Canadians expect much of this Parliament. The country asks for action and action now. The first task is to clear the accumulation of essential legislation left from previous Parliaments. This backlog must be dispatched expeditiously so that the affairs of the state may be put in good order. To that end, my Government is relying on the good will of members and senators of all parties.

This Parliament must also act quickly to put in place a program for the future. In the recent general election, my Ministers received a mandate for a program which will provide security, equity, and opportunity for the Canada of the 1980s. In the course of that campaign, my Ministers made a number of pledges which will form the core of this Parliament's work. You will be asked to consider a program of action designed:

—to respond to individual needs by promoting greater security for the elderly, expanded opportunities for the young, and equality for women;

—to achieve security of energy supply at a fair price for all Canadians;

—to promote a national development policy that will provide jobs, stimulate growth, build upon regional strengths, and increase Canadian ownership and control of our economy;

—to strengthen national institutions, while at the same time making them more responsive to provincial and regional goals;

—to ensure that Canada plays a vigorous part in the world beyond our borders.

All these commitments will be kept; these pledges redeemed; the mandate fulfilled.

The character of our people should inspire confidence in the ability of Canada to meet the challenges of the 1980s. We have the capacity and the imagination to make this a decade of opportunity rather than a decade of doubt. But there is one question which clouds the horizon and obstructs the view. It is the question of the unity of our country.

Will Canada still exist as a country at the end of this decade, or will it have been broken up by the tensions of our past and recent history? Will we continue to build our future together as Canadians, or will we give in to the siren song of regional isolationism?

In every part of Canada there are forces which are driving us apart rather than bringing us together. Canada's tradition is one of sharing, but in every region this principle is under assault. In the Atlantic, disadvantaged for so long, the promise of new resource riches has already led to squabbles about their future distribution. In Central Canada there are some who fear that the economic strength of this region is somehow slipping away, and this in turn has led to envy and bitterness. In the West, many believe that their problems are ignored, their voices are unheard, and their contribution is unrecognized.

To all these forces of discontent my Government has one clear response. Canada will endure, grow and prosper. The men and women of this country have always realized that their participation in a society that spans the northern half of North America is infinitely more exciting and enriching than confining themselves in any one province or one region. The renewed federalism, to which my Government makes a fundamental and all-embracing commitment, will not only strengthen individual and collective rights and freedoms, it will also ensure that Canada remains:

—a strong country, with first claim on the loyalty of all its citizens;

—a country that regards diversity as an asset, not a liability;

—a country whose people share their wealth first with those who need it most;

—a country that encourages initiative, welcomes daring, and promotes enterprise;

—a country that opens its eyes, its mind, and its heart to the larger community of nations, refusing to regard its own national borders as the outward limits of the universe.

Doubt must be cast aside, uncertainty must end, the forces of disintegration—whether they be economic or political in origin—must be opposed in every part of the land. That is why my Government hopes that the referendum, to be held in Quebec sometime during the coming weeks, will be a time when Quebecers affirm their will and their right to be fully Canadian, a time when all Canadians will reaffirm their desire to live together in the country to which we all belong, and which belongs to all of us.

Because my Government wants to strengthen the spirit of Canadian unity and nurture the seeds of renewal, it promises to interpret a vote of "no" to sovereignty-association as a vote for the rebuilding of the Canadian federation. My Government also promises to give effect to a "no" vote by mobilizing all the forces at its command in order to ensure the renewal of the Federation in a spirit of respect and justice for all.

I. Putting People First

Canadians are a sensible people. They understand that these are difficult economic times throughout the world. They know too that Canada cannot insulate itself completely from the effects of global inflation coupled with recession. In responding to these turbulent conditions, my Government will be guided by the two main principles at the core of the program my Ministers placed before the people.

The first is that Canadians will accept sacrifice to meet the economic challenges of the 1980s, but they will not accept injustice. Canadians have always faced up to difficult decisions—and if necessary they will do so in the future—but only if the burden is shared equitably.

The second principle is equally critical. Canadians recognize the need to live within their national means and they understand that in doing so the state cannot meet every demand or satisfy every group. Therefore, in employing the limited resources available, my Ministers will help first those who need help most.

In particular, my Government recognizes the need to protect those Canadians most affected by unacceptably high interest rates. My Government will act to assist those unable to bear the burden of re-negotiating their home mortgages in the present abnormal situation so that the spectre of foreclosure will be avoided. My Ministers are convinced that this objective can be achieved without the government embarking upon a major subsidy program. Farmers and small businessmen are also hit especially hard by rising costs, and my Government is sensitive to their plight. To assist the individual entrepreneur, the ceiling for loans under the Small Business Loans Act and the Farm Improvement Loans Act will be raised to $100,000. Other measures of assistance will also be introduced.

Inflation strikes hardest at the old and those least able to take care of themselves. You will be asked to give urgent consideration to legislation raising the Guaranteed Income Supplement to the Old Age Security pension by $35 a month per household by July 1st of this year. This measure will primarily benefit single pensioners, the vast majority of whom are women. By fulfilling this commitment, Parliament will be providing needed assistance to over 1.3 million elderly Canadians.

Beyond providing immediate relief for elderly people with low incomes, my Government intends to convene a National Pension Conference in the fall of 1980. Work must begin immediately to design better methods of providing flexible, portable, and secure pensions both in the private and public sectors. To start this process, my Government will soon release a major study on the Canadian pension system.

One of the essential objectives of this Government is to put more people to work. Young people, women, natives, and the handicapped face special problems in finding jobs. To meet the needs of these groups, my Government will expand its employment program while using its resources more efficiently. There will be an increased effort to develop critical trade skills so as to better prepare today's labour force for tomorrow's jobs.

Expanding native opportunities and training women for new occupations will receive strong emphasis.

Members of Parliament will have a major role in advising on the selection of job creation projects, and my Government will enter into a new partnership with voluntary agencies and local organizations in a program of community service.

Additional attention will be paid to the employment problems of the handicapped whose special difficulties cross all regional, sexual, and cultural boundaries. Amendments to protect the rights of the handicapped will be made to the Human Rights Act.

The role of women in Canadian society is undergoing marked improvement, and government initiatives must reflect and support that change. As a major employer in Canada, my Government will play a leadership role by implementing affirmative action measures in the public service. My Government believes that there is no room in Canada for sexual discrimination of any kind.

The serious problem of violence against women will also be addressed along with other amendments to the Criminal Code, and efforts will be made in concert with the provincial and territorial governments to improve health and social services for women who are victims of violence. It is time, too, to move cannabis offences to the Food and Drugs Act and remove the possibility of imprisonment for simple possession.

II. Security of Energy, at a Fair Price

My Government's energy policy is critical to the success of all its economic policies. Energy policy is as important for Canada in the 1980s as railway policy was in the 1880s. Like railway policy in that earlier era, energy development has the potential to create growth and prosperity across Canada.

My Government believes that the price of oil in Canada must be based upon Canadian conditions and circumstances, and not upon the vagaries of a turbulent and unpredictable world market. We need a made-in-Canada price. A new blended price will therefore be established, which will progressively incorporate the costs of the Oil Import Compensation Program, while at the same time maintaining a single national price for consumers. The blended price will reflect the right of producing provinces and corporations to a fair return for their resources and their investment.

Discussions have already begun with the governments of the producing provinces and will be vigorously pursued toward an agreement consistent with my Government's energy policy commitment, as endorsed by the people of Canada. My Ministers do not intend to impose an 18¢ increase in the excise tax on transportation fuels, and the made-in-Canada price will result in a lower price to consumers than the one proposed in the budget of the previous administration.

A Petroleum Price Auditing Agency will be established to investigate and report to the government and people of Canada on oil company costs, profits, capital expenditures, and levels of Canadian ownership.

In spite of Canada's large energy resources, which put this country in the extremely favourable position of being a major energy exporter, we remain partially dependent upon imported oil. My Government is determined to reduce that dependence by promoting conservation and by stimulating the production of new domestic energy supplies.

To improve conservation of oil and gasoline in transportation, you will be asked to approve legislation setting mandatory fuel efficiency standards for automobiles. Measures will also be introduced to encourage higher standards of home insulation, and the existing home insulation program will be improved.

In co-operation with provincial governments, other steps will be taken to encourage more rapid substitution from oil to other energy sources in order to substantially reduce the significance of oil in meeting our energy needs. Policies will be introduced to encourage consumers to switch from oil to natural gas or electricity for home heating. My Government equally favors the earliest possible construction of a natural gas pipeline to Quebec City and the Maritime Provinces, and awaits with interest the report of the National Energy Board on this project.

Petro-Canada will be maintained and expanded as an instrument of public policy. My Government has already increased the budget of the Corporation by $80 million this year, and our national oil company will also receive a renewed mandate to engage vigorously in oil purchase negotiations and agreements with foreign suppliers.

You will be asked to approve a new Canada Oil and Gas Act, which will provide new preferential rights for Petro-Canada and other Canadian companies on federal lands, and establish new and more demanding requirements for exploration and development of these promising frontier areas.

An alternative energy corporation will be created with a mandate to stimulate the development of new and renewable energy sources to replace oil.

My Ministers believe that, if given the opportunity, Canadian companies and investors would involve themselves more heavily in the energy field. My Government, therefore, adopts the specific goal of at least 50% Canadian ownership of the petroleum industry by 1990, and will soon take the first steps to achieve this objective.

III. Developing our Economic Potential

Canada's resource base will be used as the basic building block of a vigorous industrial policy. A paramount objective of my Ministers is to develop economic policies that will provide jobs, spur growth, improve regional balance, and promote Canadian ownership and control of the economy.

It is the intention of my Ministers to continue the policies of expenditure restraint and improved government administration which were suggested by the Lambert Report and initiated by the previous Liberal administration. My Government will reduce the federal deficit in a planned and orderly manner, but not to the exclusion of other objectives such as reducing unemployment and promoting industrial growth. Improving the efficiency of the federal government is as important an objective of these reforms as reducing the deficit. My Ministers believe that Canadians want more effective government, not necessarily less government.

Food and agriculture are going to be increasingly important to the Canadian economy in the 1980s. To further strengthen the industry, my Government plans to create a Canadian Agricultural Export Corporation to expand markets for Canadian producers. A Meat Import Act will be introduced to protect both consumers and producers.

Transportation is a vital part of industrial strategy. My Government will ensure that the Canadian transportation system has the capacity to meet the economic challenges of the 1980s. My Government regards the production, transportation, handling, and marketing of Prairie grain as a national priority. Rail facilities will be upgraded, and port facilities improved. You will also be asked to consider, on an urgent basis, legislation concerning the transportation of dangerous goods.

In the fisheries sector, Canada's harvest is expected to increase substantially in the years ahead. To ensure the maximum return to fishermen and fish-processing companies, my Government will undertake major initiatives to further enhance the quality of fish products and to ensure orderly marketing.

Licensing regulations will be changed to permit fishermen to benefit fully from the resources of the 200-mile zone, and legislation will be introduced to guarantee adequate investment in the fishing sector through partial cost recovery and reinvestment of enhanced earnings. To further assist fishermen, the ceiling for individual loans under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act will be raised to $150,000.

Canada's capabilities in science and technology lie at the heart of our competitiveness as a trading nation. My Government will encourage more young people to pursue a career in research through a new technology employment program, and will encourage and insist that industry do more research and development work in Canada. My Government reaffirms its commitment to increase Canada's overall expenditures on research and development to 1.5% of the value of the Gross National Product.

To improve the ability of Canadian industry to compete abroad in order to create jobs at home, my Government will establish a national trading company. My Government also intends to make assistance programs more accessible to small business, to simplify application procedures, and to better co-ordinate programs.

To improve our system of collective bargaining, a Labour Information Bureau will be created to provide an impartial clearing house for the statistics and data required for negotiations. A fresh start will be made in the labour management relations of the Post Office by turning that department into a crown corporation.

My Ministers believe that the stake of Canadians in their own economic destiny must be strengthened. Government procurement will be used vigorously, in a manner consistent with our international commitments, to encourage the creation and expansion of independent Canadian-owned enterprises.

The Foreign Investment Review Act will be amended to provide for performance reviews of how large foreign firms are meeting the test of bringing substantial benefits to Canada. As well, amendments will be introduced to ensure that major acquisition proposals by foreign companies will be publicized prior to a government decision on their acceptability. The Government will assist Canadian companies wishing to repatriate assets or to bid for ownership or control of companies subject to takeover offers by non-Canadians.

IV. Strengthening National Institutions

To increase the confidence of Canadians that their national institutions can respond effectively to their needs, my Government will propose a program to make Parliament both more efficient and more responsive.

You will be asked to appoint a committee of Parliament to examine the electoral system in order to ensure that the highest degree of representativeness and responsibility is achieved and that the confidence of Canadians in parliamentary institutions is strengthened.

As part of its commitment to renewed federalism, my Government will revive the process of constitutional reform. My Ministers are committed to the full development of Canada's two major linguistic communities and to the enhancement of our mosaic of cultures. My Government will seek to constitutionally entrench a bill of civil and human rights, including language rights.

Members of Parliament, whatever their party, agree on the need to guarantee to Canadians greater access to information of concern to them. Freedom of information legislation will be introduced to provide wide access to government documents. The right accorded to Ministers to withhold government documents from courts of law under Section 41(2) of the Federal Court Act will be removed.

[The Governor General.]

Legislation will also be presented to extend the rights of access by individuals to their personal information held by the government and to provide greater protection for privacy by further restricting the use that may be made of that information.

Also, in response to the recommendations of the Marin Commission, the RCMP Act will be amended to formalize internal discipline and grievance procedures, and to provide for an external authority to review public complaints about the behaviour of any member of the RCMP.

It is my Government's hope that these measures will serve in the years ahead as a fundamental bond of trust between government and people.

V. An Active Foreign Policy

My Government takes office against the most sombre international background of recent years. Events in Iran and Afghanistan have done great damage to international laws and institutions and have undermined confidence and stability.

In response, my Government intends to conduct an active foreign policy. Canada will rely upon its strong ties of friendship throughout the world. Part of our international response must be a determination to increase the ability of the NATO Alliance to provide security for its members and to advance the cause of peace, and my Government is committed to doing its full part. In keeping with that commitment, my Government has decided to proceed with the purchase of a new fighter aircraft.

But while recognizing the need for Canada to strengthen alliance security, the dangers of nuclear holocaust cannot simply be forgotten. If anything, these dangers are heightened by current tensions and by the continuation of the arms race. Canada's imperative is clear. This Government must continue its strategy to suffocate the deadly growth in the nuclear arsenals of the world. We must, and we will, actively co-operate in international efforts to negotiate agreements on verifiable means of arms control and disarmament, and seek to rally others to a cause that is no less than human survival on this planet. To assist in this process, a new position of Ambassador for Disarmament will be created within the Department of External Affairs.

Before concluding, I address a special message to members of the House of Commons from the three westernmost provinces.

It has been said in recent weeks that the three westernmost provinces have no elected voice in the governing of this country. That is not true. Parliament is the supreme law-making assembly of Canada, and every Canadian is represented in the House of Commons by his or her duly elected member.

Like all of your colleagues in the House of Commons, you who represent the people of Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, have a responsibility to represent your constituents to the nation. You also have an extra responsibility in the present circumstances to represent the nation to your constituents. It is a task no one else can fulfill. My Government is prepared to co-operate fully in helping you to achieve this.

Members of the House of Commons:

You will be asked to appropriate the funds required to carry on the services and expenditures authorized by Parliament.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

May Divine Providence guide you in your deliberations.

The House of Commons withdrew.

His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

RAILWAYS BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) presented Bill S-1, relating to railways.

Bill read first time.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONSIDERATION NEXT SITTING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General has caused to be placed in my hands a copy of his Speech delivered this day from the Throne to the two Houses of Parliament. It is as follows—

Hon. Senators: Dispense.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this Speech be taken into consideration?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved:

That the Speech delivered this day from the Throne to the two Houses of Parliament be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

That, pursuant to rule 66, the following senators, to wit: the Honourable Senators Bélisle, Denis, Flynn, Frith, Inman, Langlois, Macdonald, Muir, Perrault, Petten and Roblin, be appointed a Committee of Selection to nominate senators to serve on the several select committees during the present session; and to report with all convenient speed the names of the senators so nominated.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, April 15, 1980

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE HON. A. HAMILTON McDONALD

TRIBUTES

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is with deep sadness that I rise today to pay tribute to our friend and colleague the late Hammy McDonald. A large number of his friends and acquaintances attended the late Senator McDonald's funeral in Saskatchewan a few days ago. Those attending the funeral represented a great cross-section of Canada and Canadians. There were representatives from all political parties. Senator McDonald had won the undoubted respect of people of all political affiliations.

We in this chamber are certainly well aware of his service to his province and to his country. Politically, of course, he served in the Saskatchewan provincial legislature during the turbulent 1950s, where he was a distinguished representative and party leader. He was then appointed to this chamber, where he served in various posts including that of Government Whip. He played an important and leading role in interparliamentary matters, particularly the NATO parliamentary association.

As well, all of us are aware of his distinguished wartime service. The late Senator McDonald knew the horrors of war at first hand. That is why he never lost sight of the need to work for world peace, but at the same time he worked tirelessly for the protection of Canadian sovereignty and to ensure that Canada had adequate defence forces.

Indeed, his untimely end, as honourable senators are aware, came at a function held in connection with a meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization here in Ottawa. He had just concluded a magnificent speech on the subject of NATO and the importance of the Western nations working together. He always felt that in unity there was strength. He died at the conclusion of that fine speech.

We shall miss Senator McDonald in this place. He was a superb senator and a great Canadian, and our nation is poorer for his passing. Our condolences go to all the members of his family.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I join with the government leader in mourning the death of Senator Hammy McDonald.

Senator McDonald was a fearless and outspoken Liberal of the classical variety. Unlike many of his cohorts in the government party, he felt that it was not enough for government to be more efficient. He remained convinced that what, in fact, was needed was less government.

A forthright man of strong convictions, unaccustomed to varnishing the truth, Hammy was the bane of all that is sham and pretense. He could be merciless in his criticism of the half-baked pseudo-intellectual ideas that often surface in Parliament, and the vigour of his argument was in no way tempered by the fact that the nonsense may have emanated from his own side of the house.

That is what everyone appreciated and admired in Hammy: he spoke his mind; but he did so without making enemies. Blunt as he may have been in telling people what he thought of their ideas, he was always kind in his assessment of the people themselves.

As mentioned by the Leader of the Government, Hammy had an impressive military career and never lost interest in matters dealing with Canada's defence capability. He took an active interest in NATO and was eloquent in his analysis of our responsibility in the joint effort to protect the free world. Hammy McDonald will be missed because few come along of his type: able, humble, courteous and amiable.

To his friends and to the loved ones he leaves behind we offer our most heartfelt condolences.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, as a Saskatchewan colleague of our late, lamented Senator Hammy McDonald, I rise also to express my deep regret at his untimely passing, and to express the views of the people of Saskatchewan, who honoured and respected Senator McDonald so very, very deeply.

I saw Senator McDonald just a few days before he passed away. I had left Saskatchewan by plane to attend a military meeting in St. Hubert. The plane landed in Ottawa before going on to Mirabel, and Senator McDonald got on the plane in Ottawa and sat next to me. He was on his way to attend a NATO meeting in Portugal, and he was to get his overseas flight in Mirabel. We spent the short flight discussing certain aspects of the military situation in Canada, a subject in which he was extremely interested. It seems, I suppose, almost a predestination that Hammy was not able to carry out some of the objectives that he so much believed in, namely, the strength and security of our country and the co-operation that we need to provide to our allies in NATO.

I am sure our leader will not object if I indicate some of the things that Senator McDonald discussed in our own caucus. He asked that the Senate consider appointing a committee on national defence, which could deal with the serious military problems that face this country.

Many of us, along with Senator McDonald, felt that we had neglected the military in this country, and that it was time a parliamentary committee of permanent status be constituted to look at the military situation and perhaps influence the policies of the government in this regard. That was one of the greatest wishes of Senator McDonald. I am sorry he is not alive to see it come about.

I speak for all of the people of Saskatchewan when I say that we will miss him very much, as will his colleagues in the Senate.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, I join with the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition and Senator Buckwold in paying a few words of tribute to the late Senator McDonald. I first started working with Hammy McDonald in 1948 when he ran for the leadership of our party in Saskatchewan. I sat with him in the government, in opposition, and I sat with him for a short time here in the Senate.

● (1410)

We all miss Hammy and mourn his passing, but I do not think he would want us to be unhappy. Hammy had a good life. He was, indeed, "a happy warrior"—a description applied to another great politician. As the Leader of the Opposition said, Hammy McDonald was tough. He asked for no quarter and he gave none. He spent some of the great moments of his life fighting battles in the tough political arena in Saskatchewan. He did not win many times, but I think he enjoyed losing as much as winning.

He was a happy and dedicated man. He was keen to serve his country in war and in peace. I join with others in an expression of condolence to his family and friends.

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow: Honourable senators, I want to pay tribute to the memory of Senator Hammy McDonald, who introduced me to the members of this chamber 12 years ago. I have a special place in my heart for Hammy, and I have great admiration for the contribution he made to his country in wartime, and to the citizens of Saskatchewan, whom he served for a number of years in the Legislative Assembly. He also made an outstanding contribution to Canada as a member of this chamber, and to the international scene through his close association with NATO. He served this chamber well. He took a special interest in the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and, of course, was very knowledgeable about the province of Saskatchewan, particularly its agriculture.

On my own behalf and on behalf of the people I represent in the province of Saskatchewan, I wish to express my sincere condolences to Hammy McDonald's family and to tell them that we loved him, and we are very appreciative of the time they allowed him to be with us.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I wish to join with the Leader of the Government, the Leader of the Opposition, and my colleagues from Saskatchewan in expressing deep sympathy to the family of Senator Hammy McDonald.

Hammy was well known to all of us. He was a great parliamentarian, a great debater, and a great friend. I have seen him at many meetings when the debating of a subject was tough, and the forces seemed quite evenly divided. Hammy would come in, take his position, make a rousing speech, and invariably he would change the opinion of that meeting and bring them over to his side.

Hammy McDonald was a product of Saskatchewan. He was a veteran who had sacrificed much for the welfare of his country.

I had the privilege of attending his funeral where one could see the panorama of Hammy's life—Fleming, where he was born and close to there where he went to school; his neighbours and friends at the funeral who were part of his recreational athletic life; his neighbours, farmers, business people, friends, his family, his four stalwart sons, who were pallbearers, his daughters, his aged mother, who is a very fine person with very regal bearing.

● (1415)

On the sad occasion when Hammy McDonald was laid to rest in his community, his neighbours came out to pay final tribute to him, and, as well, many Canadians from all across the nation attended the funeral to pay their respects.

I wish at this time to associate myself with others in extending to the family our sincere condolences on the passing of Senator Hammy McDonald.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, perhaps a word should be said from Atlantic Canada as an addition to the tributes that have been paid by Senator McDonald's fellow senators from the province of Saskatchewan.

My term as Leader of the Liberal Party in Nova Scotia overlapped the period of the leadership of the late Senator McDonald of the Liberal Party in Saskatchewan, so I knew him before I came to this chamber. I always had the greatest respect for the late Senator McDonald, and I endorse all the things that have been said about him by previous speakers, but I rise to emphasize one important aspect of his career. Of all the private members of Parliament of both houses Senator McDonald had, I think, a keener awareness of problems of national defence, and of the military services and their contribution to Canada, than anyone else. In this respect, he will be sorely missed, not only by his family, friends and colleagues in Saskatchewan, but by the nation.

I hope, honourable senators, that there will emerge in Parliament, and particularly in this house of Parliament, someone who will carry that torch and continue that interest in national defence matters about which Senator McDonald continually reminded us. This is of vital importance in the kind of difficult world in which we live today. I hope that some of us—and I include myself—will regard it our duty to carry on the good work that Senator McDonald so unhesitatingly and unfalteringly pursued on every possible occasion.

I join in extending condolences to the members of his family, and regret that Canada has lost an important member of Parliament and an outstanding citizen.

THE HONOURABLE ROBERT RENÉ DE COTRET, P.C.

TRIBUTES ON RESIGNATION FROM SENATE

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I rise to address myself to the resignation of Senator Robert René de Cotret from this chamber. Although he was with us for only a brief period of time, it has to be said in candour that he gave unstintingly of his talent and considerable abilities and added to the debates, proceedings and achievements of this house. We on this side genuinely regret that he will not be here and will not be serving on the opposition side in this Parliament.

While the electoral events of recent weeks have altered the seating positions of a number of us in this chamber, I wish to say that we on this side look forward to working with the loyal opposition for the good of the nation. These are not easy times for Canada, and while invested with the responsibility of government, the present Leader of the Opposition and the Deputy Leader of the Opposition acted in the best parliamentary tradition. They observed meticulously the traditions and practices which have built this great parliamentary system. I thank them for their courtesy to me when I was Leader of the Opposition in this place, and I pledge to them courtesy and co-operation in kind during the important time ahead.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the absence of Robert René de Cotret in this house is felt more I think on this side of the House than anywhere else.

As the Leader of the Government pointed out, during the time he sat here in his capacity as Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of State for Economic Development, I think he showed exceptional qualities which were appreciated by all. I remember certain remarks made by senators on the other side of the house which indicate indeed the admiration and respect our colleague de Cotret was able to win.

It is unfortunate that the loss of the Senate did not become the gain of the House of Commons, first because he had been blamed, of course, when he had been defeated in the 1979 election, for coming here to the Senate and not having any credibility as a minister. That is the kind of cruelty you are exposed to in political life. That is unfortunate, I would say less for him because how many people, how many corporations, how many institutions will want to avail themselves of his services.

However, the loss suffered by Parliament will hopefully be repaired by other more favourable circumstances. To me, the defeat of de Cotret during the February 18 election was the greatest hardship of all; that the government should have been defeated, I had anticipated. I was expecting it. It is the tradition of this country that the Liberals always be in power and that the Conservative Party be given only a little time to try and make you think. I do not think you had enough time this time.

[Senator Hicks.]

I regret the defeat of Robert René de Cotret for my party, but I regret it particularly for the Parliament of Canada, and for my country.

LORI ANN LALLOUET

TRIBUTES TO FORMER PAGE

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to pay tribute to a person well known to many of us, a former servant of this house, the late Lori Ann Lallouet.

May I say that we are well served in this chamber by the pages. They are fine young people.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: As honourable senators know, many of our pages serve here as a prelude to careers in public life and public service. All of them are interested in improving their training skills and acquiring education. Many work assiduously to further that education.

No page has ever served us better than Lori Ann Lallouet, who died tragically in an automobile accident on December 29, 1979. Known to all of us, she was the senior female page in this house. She was efficient and cheerful, and well liked. She was unfailingly conscientious in everything she did.

One wonders why a fine life like Lori's, with so much to offer her country, was taken at such a young age. Lori was a graduate of the University of Ottawa, having obtained an honours degree in public administration and a degree in labour-management relations. She was working on her master's degree in public administration, looking forward to a fine career in public service.

We regret deeply her passing and we offer heartfelt condolences to her family—Lori was the only child. Our prayers go with them at this very difficult time.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to echo the sentiments expressed by the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

It is really tragic to see such a young girl die when her life is just beginning. Of course, this is not a unique occurrence, but such events are always very cruel.

I wish to offer to the family of our devoted page the sincere condolences of all members of the opposition.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

TERMINATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY ON EIGHTH SITTING DAY

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the proceedings on the order of the day for resuming the debate on the motion for an Address in reply to His Excellency the Governor General's Speech from the Throne addressed to both Houses of Parliament be concluded on the eighth sitting day on which the order is debated.

Motion agreed to.

RETIREMENT AGE POLICIES

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, the Special Senate Committee on Retirement Age Policies was ready to table its report Retirement Without Tears on December 18 last, and plans had been made accordingly. It so happened that on December 14 Parliament was dissolved and the committee ceased to exist.

The committee then applied to the Intersessional Authority for permission to release the report which was already in the hands of the distributors. That Authority, consisting of Senator Flynn, Senator Perrault and Senator Grosart, gave the necessary permission, and we proceeded accordingly, with, I might add, some rather good results. I shall speak further on that later, but not today.

Now, honourable senators, we have to table that report, but how does a committee that is not in existence table a report? This is a new situation, so we went to the Clerk and to the legal authorities, and we asked their advice. Their advice was that I should introduce a resolution to reconstitute the committee, with the evident intention that there would be no meetings, and then later ask for permission to table the report.

I have spoken to those on both the government and opposition sides about this matter, and I will now make a motion with respect to it. I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(d):

That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and report upon

(a) the existing retirement age policies affecting workers in both the public and private sectors;

(b) the social and economic implications of mandatory retirement based on age alone;

(c) the feasibility of enabling workers, especially elderly citizens, to continue to make a worthwhile contribution to our society through flexible voluntary retirement plans to the extent of their ability and motivation;

(d) the protection for those over sixty-five against age discrimination in all employment areas; and

(e) the need for the maximum co-operation of all levels of government, labour unions, business and the public in respect of existing and future retirement age policies and retirement plans;

That the committee have power to engage the services of such technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry;

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject in the three preceding sessions be referred to the committee;

That the papers and submissions received on the subject and the work accomplished during the dissolution of the Thirtieth Parliament, as authorized by the Intersessional Authority (appointed pursuant to a resolution of the Senate on the 29th day of March, 1972) be referred to the committee;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee, to sit during adjournments of the Senate and to adjourn from place to place in Canada; and

That, notwithstanding rule 66, the committee be composed of the Honourable Senators Adams, Anderson, Bell, Benidickson, Bird, Bosa, Buckwold, Cottreau, Croll, Deschatelets, Eudes, Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Fournier (Restigouche-Gloucester), Haidasz, Inman, Lucier, Norrie, Phillips, Quart, Rowe, Steuart and Williams.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TABLED

Leave having been given to revert to Reports of Committees:

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Retirement Age Policies, and I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration on Tuesday next, April 22, 1980.

Motion agreed to.

PROPERTY QUALIFICATION OF SENATORS

RENEWAL

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That every senator who is a member of this Parliament and whose name appeared on the list of senators who had renewed their Declaration of Property Qualification in respect of the 31st Parliament, tabled in the Senate on November 7, 1979, is deemed to have made and filed with the Clerk of the Senate a renewed Declaration of Property Qualification in respect of the present Parliament; and

That rule 114 be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

THE CABINET

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY IN THE SENATE

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, of course I have a first, but not last question—

Senator Frith: Of course.

Senator Flynn: —for the government leader. As he himself did at the opening of the First Session of the 31st Parliament, one of the shortest in history—and for which history will repent, I think—I first want to congratulate him on his return to his office as government leader. I know he was bored in opposition. That is quite normal when one is used to power. He has returned to his former role and I congratulate him. I also sympathize with him, and I want to assure him of my full co-operation as well as that of all senators on this side of the chamber, with the usual meaning of that expression because there are still a few on this side who in reality are on your side. We have not had much time to restore the balance.

I also want to congratulate the other two senators who have been made members of the administration, namely, Senator Olson, as Minister of State for Economic Development, and Senator Argue, who has looked for work for many years both in the other place and here and who now has his hands full. I want to congratulate them and assure them of our co-operation.

I cannot help but note the change in Senator Olson and Senator Argue, a physical change, but which is not enough—

Senator Asselin: Only half.

Senator Flynn: But which is not enough to fool anyone.

[English]

In any event, honourable senators, my first question is to the Leader of the Government. Would he indicate to the Senate, and especially to the opposition, which has the responsibility of questioning the ministers in this place, just what their spheres of response will be?

As an aside, it is interesting to find that the present Prime Minister, who on a previous occasion had some criticism about having ministers in the Senate, found it necessary to use the same device himself, albeit perhaps not in as interesting a fashion as that of the former Prime Minister.

What are the responsibilities, then, with respect to questions for himself and each of his two colleagues? For instance, may we question Senator Olson in the general areas which he thought Senator de Cotret had to reply to? Are we limited with regard to Senator Argue to the Canadian Wheat Board or can we question him about all matters having to do with agriculture, since he is such an expert?

In all matters that go far beyond the strict responsibility of the Canadian Wheat Board, the Leader of the Government has the responsibility. I am quite sure he will be able to reply instantly to any question that does not fall within the responsibility of either Senator Olson or Senator Argue.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): As has been the case in the past, there will be an unfailing desire on the part of the government to share any information that may be available on matters facing Canadians.

Senator Roblin: If it suits you.

Senator Perrault: My two distinguished colleagues in cabinet have a profound knowledge covering a range of subjects. However, I would be prepared to make a statement to the Senate later this week with respect to those matters for which they will have direct responsibility during the Question Period. In that regard, I would be most pleased to discuss the matter with the Leader of the Opposition. We wish to be as co-operative as possible.

Senator Flynn: I do not doubt that.

ENERGY

PRICE OF DOMESTIC OIL—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to try out for size, as it were, a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. I recall that during the last session he often questioned Senator de Cotret about this matter and received replies.

The Speech from the Throne referred to negotiations to set the price of oil. I am wondering whether the minister is in a position to tell us how those negotiations are proceeding, and exactly when an agreement will be reached and a decision made so that the Canadian public will know exactly what alternatives the Liberal Party had in mind when they defeated the budget of the previous administration on December 13?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I should like to begin my reply on the first question directed to me on the floor of this chamber as Minister of State for Economic Development by saying to the Leader of the Opposition that I sincerely appreciate the remarks he made to all the new ministers in the course of his previous question.

The Leader of the Opposition asked whether we can at this stage—I believe it is five weeks since we took over the reins of government—give a precise reply—

Senator Flynn: It seems much longer to me.

Senator Olson: —to a question concerning the pricing arrangement that can be worked out with the producing provinces, particularly Alberta. I believe that the negotiations are going reasonably well. I am not the minister directly responsible for those negotiations. That is the responsibility of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

The Leader of the Opposition will know what is the basis and what are the parameters within which we intend to negotiate that energy policy, and especially those prices, in terms of what was said before, during and since the election campaign.

We believe there is a good deal of room for negotiation with respect to what Premier Lougheed has suggested as net benefits to the producing provinces. While we do not have any precision as to what those benefits will be, I am optimistic that there is room for sincere negotiation with respect to the rights of the provinces and the interests of Canadians generally.

Senator Flynn: I have a supplementary question. An agreement was practically reached by the former administration. How different is the proposal or the objective of the present administration?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, we kept hearing that same comment, that an agreement was imminent and was about to be reached. I think it is fair to say that on more than one occasion we heard that an agreement had been reached; that it was just a matter of signing it. We heard comments—I would have to say speculative comments, because it never happened—to the effect that "everything is ready except the machinery." I have been around long enough to know that if we do not have the machinery in place, nothing else matters.

I am not sure that we should revive all that speculation. Certainly, when we are negotiating on the same matter, I would not be surprised if there are some similarities. However, the point is that the earlier negotiations never quite reached the stage of an agreement; and if that point is not reached, one side or the other could take the position that everything crumbles until the agreement is signed. An agreement was never signed.

Senator Flynn: We shall see. We will give you a few more weeks.

INCOME TAX

UNINCORPORATED BUSINESSES—DEDUCTION OF SALARIES PAID TO SPOUSES

Hon. Martha P. Bielish: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. Will the minister confirm the commitment made by the Minister of Agriculture that the present government will implement the measure announced in Mr. Crosbie's budget to allow, as business expenses, salaries paid to spouses on farms? Will the minister also say whether it is the intention of the government to apply this policy to salaries of spouses in other unincorporated businesses as provided for in Mr. Crosbie's budget last December? I ask this question because there was no mention of the matter in the Speech from the Throne.

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, may I say that the Speech from the Throne is necessarily a general statement of any government's proposals for the duration of a session of Parliament. Yesterday's Speech from the Throne, like its countless predecessors, was incomplete in all its detail. I shall take the question as notice. I can say generally, however, that it is not our present intention to implement the Crosbie budget.

Senator Flynn: In all respects? Did you say in all respects?

Senator Perrault: No.

Senator Flynn: That is not what you meant? Is there a "no" in that answer?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, what I am really saying is that the mandate given the Liberal government at the time of the election was not a mandate to implement in all its detail the Crosbie budget. In saying that, I take the question as notice and I hope to have a reply shortly.

Senator Bielish: Thank you.

OLD AGE SECURITY

INCREASE IN GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate concerning the government's promise to increase by $35 the guaranteed income supplement to the old age security pension.

In view of the need for such legislation as soon as possible, can the Leader of the Government indicate what priority will be given that legislation, and when we are likely to see a bill introduced?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we regard the commitment to pay an additional $35 per household to those persons on GIS as a high priority item in the Speech from the Throne. I know that with the full co-operation of the loyal opposition, that measure can be passed with great speed.

Senator Flynn: When?

Senator Marshall: I have a supplementary. Is the government considering overcoming the inequity in the spouse's allowance for those who qualify between the ages of 60 and 65? There are many single women in Canada aged between 60 and 65 who are discriminated against because they are unmarried. Is any consideration being given to those people in order to overcome that inequity, or will that be included in the legislation?

Senator Perrault: Our current commitment is to increase the GIS. A range of ideas are being discussed to help those who are less fortunate in our society.

The Speech from the Throne clearly spells out that the government believes its primary concern, in the immediate term, is to assist those who are the worst suffering victims of inflation in the present economic circumstances. The honourable senator's idea is under study, together with many others.

NATIONAL UNITY

QUEBEC REFERENDUM

Hon. Martial Asselin: My question is for the Leader of the Government. It was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne that the government will interpret a vote of "no" to sovereignty association as a vote for the rebuilding of the Canadian federation. I would like to know from the Leader of the Government what will be the attitude of the government if a "yes" vote is given by the population of Quebec in favour of sovereignty association to the referendum question?

• (1450)

Senator Robichaud: You are asking for a speech.

Senator Asselin: This question is in order. Could the leader answer my question?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, most assuredly the proposed referendum in Quebec, and the situation generally relating to regional aspirations and unity in this country, will be the subject of much debate and discussion during the range of remarks to be made by honourable senators over the next eight debating days. Certainly, it can be expected that some ideas with respect to the government's position will be expressed at that time by the Leader of the Government in the Senate and by a number of other senators.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: A supplementary. Will this government refuse to negotiate any constitutional amendment with the government now in power in Quebec if the majority of Quebecers answer yes to sovereignty-association?

[English]

Senator Perrault: Questions of this kind are very hypothetical and theoretical. They are based upon events which have not as yet been set in train. It seems to me that we enter the dubious area of pure speculation when we attempt to assess the possible reaction of the federal government should certain events occur in any of the provinces.

Honourable senators, I do not wish to engage in a discussion, based upon events which have not taken place, and which may not take place.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: A supplementary question. Since the government has already stated the attitude it would adopt in the event of a negative answer in the referendum, I imagine that the Leader of the Government is now entitled to tell us what the government would do if a majority gave a positive answer to the referendum question.

[English]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I am sure the honourable senator, with his extensive record in Parliament and in the ministry, realizes that this is a very delicate and sensitive area. It would not advance the cause of national unity one iota for me to engage in a discussion of this topic at this time on the theoretical assumption, as I said before, of certain events occurring. I am not prepared to go beyond this reply at the present time.

ENERGY

EXCISE TAX ON TRANSPORTATION FUELS

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development in relation to a particular statement in the Speech from the Throne which appears on page 4 of the Debates of the Senate for April 14, 1980. The particular sentence reads as follows, beginning at the bottom of page 4 and continuing on page 5:

> My Ministers do not intend to impose an 18-cent ihcrease in the excise tax on transportation fuels—

My question is, is that merely a statement of intention, or is it a commitment?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I think it is pretty clear that a commitment, or a statement of intention, is probably the same thing when it appears in a Speech from the Throne. I am sure my honourable friend realizes that many of us who belong to the party which occupies this side of the house had a great deal to say about that during the election campaign, too. With regard to trying to commit a government forever, or commit any government coming in behind this one forever, I am sure that we avoid doing that. In any event, the honourable senator has read very carefully what was contained in every statement that we have made, and that is that we do not intend to re-introduce that part of the budget that calls for an 18-cent a gallon increase in the excise tax.

Senator Smith (Colchester): A supplementary question. I take it that although he did not do it in a few words, what the honourable minister is saying is that this sentence in the Speech from the Throne is in fact a commitment, and, since it is, I should like to ask him if the ministers do not intend to impose an 18-cent increase in the excise tax, do they intend to impose any increase in the excise tax on transportation fuels?

Senator Olson: Well, honourable senators, there will be a time, perhaps not far off, later in this session, when the Minister of Finance, who has considered taxation policy generally, will probably look at excise tax along with all other forms of taxation. He will be coming forward with a fiscal policy, I suppose, with respect to that.

Before my honourable colleague asks whether it will be 16 cents or some other figure than 18 cents, let me say right away that we do not play those kinds of games.

Senator Roblin: No?

Senator Asselin: You will change your mind, Bud.

Senator Smith (Colchester): When indeed did the government commit itself to any number except that which is just now the subject of our discussion?

Senator Olson: On December 13, the night the budget was defeated, I suppose the members of the other place who voted against the budget, containing that figure, declared that they were against it. For my honourable friend's information, the main debate, in some respects, was focused on that particular part of the budget. That is not to say that there were not other things in the budget that might have been useful for Canada, but we rejected that increase in the excise tax on transport fuels.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I see my honourable friend is as adept at avoiding questions as he was adept in framing questions that no one could answer previously.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Supplementary to this, the phrase to which my honourable colleague refers said:

> My Ministers do not intend to impose an 18-cent increase in the excise tax on transportation fuels, and the made-in-Canada price—

That famous phrase.

> —will result in a lower price to consumers than the one proposed in the budget of the previous administration.

How much lower? I mean, not in cents, but how much lower in proportion, is the objective of the government? "Lower" may mean 1 cent less, or 2 cents less; but surely you are not going to tell us that you defeated the government for only 2 cents a gallon over a period of three years.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I think it is a matter of interpretation of how much is a lot. I suppose it is also a matter of interpretation of what is significant and what may not be significant. I just think that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition has to accept the fact that the over-all blended price, which he never seemed to understand, will be spelled out much more clearly—

Senator Flynn: The emphasis should be put on answers.

Senator Olson: —after we have negotiated a national energy policy, especially for crude oil and natural gas, with the producing provinces, who have a great interest in that matter. I would hope that my honourable friend would give us a few days to do that, since we have been at work for only a few days. They were at work for five months, and even with regard to a situation as important as the budget they were unable to reach an agreement on energy policy, which is absolutely crucial with regard to what can appear in the budget. I am sure that ought to give some indication to my honourable friend that this is a very important economic component, and we want to talk to the producing provinces about it.

As I said a few moments ago, there is some room for negotiation, but I can tell my honourable friend that I am not going to negotiate that subject on the floor of the Senate. That will be done between the two governments.

Senator Flynn: During the last session you tried to have that discussion on the floor of the Senate. In any event, since you defeated the government on that very item of 18 cents, you must have known what you had in mind. Of course, you did not say during the course of the campaign what you had in mind, but you must have known what you had in mind at the time you defeated the government on that very item.

Senator Olson: Yes.

Senator Flynn: Would you tell us?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, we know, as does the Leader of the Opposition, that we were not privy to the negotiations that were going on between Premier Lougheed and other producing provinces. When we tried to pull that information out into the public, nothing would come except that an agreement was imminent and that the mechanics had not yet been worked out. We knew what we would have been negotiating had we been the government. We believed and stated that an 18-cent tax, on top of the fact that everyone acknowledged that energy prices were going to go up, added insult to injury and, therefore, we could not support it.

Senator Flynn: But you are very willing to settle for 16 cents.

INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE TO CHRYSLER CORPORATION

Hon. Lowell Murray: I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development. Will he say when he expects negotiations to be concluded regarding proposed financial assistance from the Government of Canada to the Chrysler Corporation? Will he also say whether the government is giving consideration to loan guarantees, as was the case in the United States, or whether outright grants from the Government of Canada to Chrysler Corporation are being considered?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I shall take the question as notice and inquire of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the minister directly involved in the negotiations with Chrysler.

Senator Flynn: You did not say "responsible"; you said "involved".

Senator Murray: At the same time, and by way of supplementary, will the Minister of State for Economic Development obtain assurance that the government is determined to obtain from Chrysler Canada a commitment for the same ratio of new investment to government aid as was obtained in the United States?

Senator Olson: Yes, I will accept that as part of the notice.

HOUSING

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—ASSISTANCE TO HOMEOWNERS

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, the question I have for the Minister of State for Economic Development has to do with the hardship being caused to homeowners because of increasing interest rates. The government has introduced relief for those under AHOP. Would he indicate what relief is forthcoming for the hundreds of thousands who are now losing their homes? Would the minister also indicate with what priority this is being treated and what help will be forthcoming?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I am not today, tomorrow, or any other day going to be in the position of announcing government policy on behalf of some other ministers. The two matters Senator Marshall has raised, of course, are the direct responsibility of the Minister of Finance and the minister responsible for CMHC, and I am sure that they are as anxious as he is to spell out the details of the reference in the Throne Speech.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, may I add something to the reply given by my colleague? I would remind you that the Throne Speech contained these words:

> My government will act to assist those unable to bear the burden of re-negotiating their home mortgages in the present abnormal situation so that the spectre of foreclosure will be avoided. My Ministers are convinced that this objective can be achieved without the government embarking upon a major subsidy program.

Details will be made known shortly with respect to that program.

OLD AGE SECURITY

INCREASE IN GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): May I say, while I am standing, honourable senators, that the Throne Speech also stated:

> You will be asked to give urgent consideration to legislation raising the Guaranteed Income Supplement to the Old Age Security pension by $35 a month per household by July 1st of this year.

The objective is July 1, and if the honourable senator states that the great party of which he is a representative wishes to move up that schedule dramatically, I am sure the government would be pleased to discuss it.

NATIONAL UNITY

QUEBEC REFERENDUM

Hon. Martial Asselin: A while ago the Leader of the Government told me that he could not answer my question as follows: If a majority of Quebecers voted for sovereignty-association, what would be the position of his government?

I realize that he may not have had the opportunity to discuss the matter with his government, but could he do so in the near future and make a statement in the house on this subject?

[English]

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): I would remind honourable senators that the Leader of the Government in the Senate is not obliged to answer hypothetical questions. That is not an obligation which rests upon the Leader of the Government in the Senate or any other government or any other assembly. This is the only reason why I do not wish to answer the question. It is purely hypothetical.

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order.

The main question I put a while ago was raised, of course, in the Speech from the Throne delivered yesterday.

Now, the government has clearly answered that a "no" vote by Quebecers would prompt the federal government to make constitutional amendments.

If my second question is hypothetical, the question raised by the government in the Speech from the Throne is also hypothetical. I suggest, honourable senators, that my question is not hypothetical and that the Leader of the Government refuses to inquire and provide the house with the information requested by one of its members. I am not asking him to answer a hypothetical question. I also want to point out to him that such a reference is made in the Speech from the Throne where it is stated: ". . . my government also promises to give effect to a "no" vote . . ." Now, I ask him if there was a "yes" vote, what would his government do? This is not hypothetical. He merely has to ask the government what its position would be and then inform the Senate.

[English]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, in terms of the responsibility of the Leader of the Government in this place, the leader is not required to answer hypothetical questions.

A Speech from the Throne presents the government's position with respect to a number of issues. As a matter of government policy, the government did not spell out in the Speech from the Throne what would occur should the majority of the people of Quebec vote "yes" in that referendum. There is no requirement in the Speech from the Throne to spell out that alternative as there is no requirement on the part of the Leader of the Government to answer a hypothetical question.

Hon. Azellus Denis: Honourable senators, in order that the question and answer be clear, I should like to know, first, if the government is for or against the independence of Quebec. Secondly, is it in favour of amending the Constitution in order to please the provinces, including Quebec, and itself at the same time?

Senator Perrault: Of course, honourable senators, the Speech from the Throne very clearly spells out the view of the government that it hopes there will be a majority "no" vote in the referendum. That goes without saying. So far as the second part of the question is concerned, a government which has invested so much time and effort in studying the whole matter of constitutional reform is obviously interested in advancing the process in due course.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know what your guidelines are. You can give them to us in due course. I do not expect you to give them to us directly as you have just recently taken over your duties.

But if the Leader of the Government, who is here to answer, on behalf of the government, the questions put to him in the Senate, always refuses to answer embarrassing questions claiming they are hypothetical, then I feel we are heading for the type of situation where information will be very hard to get.

The Leader of the Government could always refuse to answer questions because it seems that it is up to him to decide whether or not a question is hypothetical. For my part, I do not think it is up to him to decide.

Senator Robichaud: Of course not, but it was hypothetical.

Senator Asselin: If you want to put questions, your turn will come; but for now, do kindly allow me to finish.

Senator Robichaud: I was.

Senator Asselin: You can ask your questions later.

I should like to know whether or not it behooves the Leader of the Government to decide whether a question is hypothetical or not; if it does, then he can always shield himself with that excuse and refuse what information is requested, and claim the question is hypothetical.

I merely ask the government leader to inquire about it and ask his government what its attitude would be if a majority of Quebecers say "yes" to sovereignty-association. That is not a hypothetical question.

Senator Robichaud: Yes, it is.

Senator Asselin: Then the statement is equally hypothetical of the government when it claims that if the answer is "no" we will see an end to the constitutional deadlock.

● (1510)

[English]

Senator Perrault: As much as I respect the admirable debating skills of the former minister, and as distinguished as the former minister may be, what we are really looking at is this question: What is the government's policy with respect to this very delicate matter? I suggest that there is a difference between asking what the policy is, and what it would be should certain events occur.

Honourable senators may well ask me what would be the government's reaction if the entire Canadian banking system collapsed. I think I have a right to say that that question is a purely hypothetical question, and that the government's policy is not yet formulated with respect to unforeseen events of that kind.

The former minister has been in public life long enough to know that it is not incumbent upon any government to spell out every variation of policy position it may take should certain events occur.

Senator Asselin: Now I know that you refuse to answer my question.

[Senator Asselin.]

Senator Perrault: Senator, it is a very hypothetical question—

Senator Asselin: Not at all.

Senator Perrault: —and the government is not prepared to make a statement on such an eventuality at the present time. It is totally consistent with parliamentary tradition to take that position.

Senator Smith (Colchester): It is a hypothetical Speech from the Throne.

ENERGY

PRICE OF DOMESTIC OIL—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. Will the minister tell us whether the federal government has placed a specific proposal before the producing provinces regarding oil price negotiations? Contrary to what he said earlier, it is a matter of public record, attested to not only by the previous federal government, but by Premier Lougheed, that a package was agreed to between the federal government and the producing provinces, and Alberta in particular. As I said, the details of that package are public.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I guess that is right. I am not going to argue about that. The point I made before was that there were never signatures attached to that agreement. It seems that I have some difficulty understanding why, if everything was agreed to, it was not signed in time for the budget.

Senator Murray: Because the government was defeated.

Senator Olson: Perhaps they could have signed it earlier in the day. In any event, the substantive part of the question the honourable senator asks is: What are the proposals that—

Senator Murray: I asked whether there is a proposal—a specific proposal—from the federal government on the table.

Senator Olson: It is well known that the Minister of Energy has already had preliminary discussions with all producing provinces. He was out to Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia a few days ago. I suppose he had to familiarize himself with not only the process the previous government was involved in, up to and including budget night, but also with what might have changed even since then.

Senator Flynn: Like what?

Senator Olson: I think he announced that they would begin formal negotiations very soon. Certainly he will have proposals. However, I do not think that they are in their final form at this time.

ATLANTIC REGION

NATURAL RESOURCES—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I should like to direct another question to the Minister of State for Economic Development, and here I direct his attention to another paragraph in what we now, I suppose, are entitled to regard as the hypothetical Speech from the Throne. The words I am about to quote appear on page 3 of yesterday's Hansard, and they are as follows:

> In the Atlantic, disadvantaged for so long, the promise of new resource riches has already led to squabbles about their future distribution.

I should like an assurance from the Minister of State for Economic Development that the federal government does not regard this problem, which is of such vital importance to the Atlantic region, as one of a mere squabble which they can brush aside.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, if the honourable senator is suggesting that the government does not take this seriously and are brushing it aside, I suppose I could logically ask why they put it in the Speech from the Throne. Everything in the Speech from the Throne is important.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I just draw the attention of the minister again to the fact that in this Speech, which he now refers to as being so important, they thought it appropriate to use the word "squabble"—which signifies some minor quarrel or petty disagreement—to describe their concept of the importance of this problem of distribution of the riches of new natural resources and how it affects the Atlantic region.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, if the honourable senator has not yet realized that there has been some disagreement over such things as labour policy in developing those very interesting and, hopefully, rich resources, then I believe he has not read the same newspapers or listened to the same news programs that I have read or listened to.

If he is now trying to put some kind of interpretation on the importance of the development in the maritime provinces and the events that have taken place, not only in oil exploration but in other areas such as the fishing industry, I should say that we do not downgrade the value of that. It is an important thing, and Senator Smith will not have much luck if he is trying to read some kind of insult in certain words, because that is not what is intended at all.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I am glad to have the honourable gentleman's assurance that when they use words of this kind the authors of the Speech did not mean what they said.

Senator Olson: They do not mean what you are interpreting them to mean.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I am glad to have this corrected interpretation by which the minister now means to say that the government regards the distribution of these new resource riches mentioned in the Speech from the Throne as being of grave importance. If I have that assurance, I will be happy as far as today is concerned.

Senator Olson: I am not sure I can see that there is really that much of a question. If he reads the Speech from the Throne—

Senator Smith (Colchester): I have read the Speech from the Throne.

Senator Olson: —and places the literal meaning on the words, he will see that it is clear.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I guess the honourable senator does not know what a squabble is.

Senator Perrault: You have written many Throne Speeches yourself.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

PRICE OF 1980 SILVER DOLLARS

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. Recently the Royal Canadian Mint put the 1980 silver dollar on sale at a price of $22.00. The price of an ounce of silver as of March 31, 1980 was $17.05. It was $8.61 at March 31, 1979, when the Mint sold the silver dollar for $5.50. On March 31, 1978, the price of a silver dollar was $4.50, while the price of an ounce of silver was $6.15.

The price of silver is less than double that of last year, yet the Royal Canadian Mint has quadrupled the price of the 1980 silver dollar. Will the leader ask the Royal Canadian Mint to explain this astronomical increase?

• (1520)

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall take the question as notice. It should be said, however, that those who collect coins—and I am not a collector—recognize and accept the fact that a different valuation is put on metal in the form of coins purchased for collecting purposes. The value of such coins does not relate solely to the intrinsic metallic content of the coin. There are other values that arise from the quality of the engraving and the rarity of the issue. There are many factors which determine the value and price of collectors' coins. However, the question will be taken as notice.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's Speech at the opening of the session.

Hon. Yvette B. Rousseau, seconded by the Honourable Harry Hays, moved:

> That the following Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada:
> To His Excellency the Right Honourable Edward Richard Schreyer, Chancellor and principal Companion of Our Order of Canada, Chancellor and Commander of Our Order of Military Merit upon whom We have conferred Our Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.
> May it please Your Excellency:

We, Her Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the Senate of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious Speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

She said: Honourable senators, I am filled with pride and gratitude for having been chosen to move the motion for adoption of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Before speaking in support of the motion, I ask for your understanding and your indulgence. This is the first time I have had the opportunity to speak in this house. Like all those who spoke for the first time before me, I want to tell you, without the slightest trace of embarrassment, the deep emotion which fills me at this moment. I feel somewhat awed by the mission that I have been assigned. Nevertheless, I consider it as a great honour and privilege this opportunity to move this motion, to give you my impressions on the Speech from the Throne in general and to tell you about my reflections upon its main issues and upon those that I consider as significant.

Because of your extensive parliamentary experience, honourable senators, you will understand that the few weeks of the last session were certainly far from sufficient to transform me into an accomplished senator. My inexperience was not only limited to the activities of the Senate but also to politics. Indeed, my public life has been greatly changed, because my areas of endeavour were mostly oriented towards social and family activities rather than active politics.

I am sure that many of you could pay tribute more eloquently to those who are no longer with us and offer our thanks and congratulations. I should have liked to continue this tradition, but I fear that my lack of experience would make it for me an impossible challenge to meet. Therefore, I ask honourable senators not to hold it against me if, for this reason, I leave this task to more qualified senators.

However, I want to take this opportunity to pay tribute to our former Speaker, Honourable Senator Grosart. I want to thank him for welcoming me to this assembly. On that occasion, as you doubtless remember, several new senators were sworn in, and he admirably managed to integrate them in the activities of the Senate. I was very much impressed by his parliamentary expertise and the tactful way in which he presided over our proceedings during the last session. As you know, a new government was in office and, what is worse, a minority government which had appointed three of our colleagues to the cabinet. There is no question that that was a difficult and sensitive session to preside over. I want to congratulate him on his ability at presiding over our proceedings and the healthy atmosphere he maintained in the Senate.

It is also a great pleasure for me to offer my congratulations and best wishes to our new Speaker, the Honourable Jean Marchand, and to assure him of our full co-operation. I am sure he will preside over our proceedings with as much wisdom, since some senators sit again with us as ministers. During the previous session it was demonstrated that such a situation can be very profitable both for the Senate and for the country as a whole. I congratulate the new senator-ministers. I am sure that their contribution in their dual capacity will be great.

I have always greatly admired our new Speaker, and his presence is likely to reduce my apprehensions. You probably know that by chance we were able to militate together in the union movement. Indeed, the means we took and the paths we followed were not the same, but I think we shared the same ideals and pursued the same objectives. I am very pleased to see him here again today.

In this first speech, I should like to stress the fact that when I took the oath of office, and throughout the previous session, I was not only impressed by the decorum but even more by the parliamentary values of the Senate which enable a simple citizen like me to enter here one day and to be accepted so cordially. This appointment, like many others, reflects the essential values in Canada. I do not think I know enough about government to be able to establish a parallel between the Senate of Canada and similar institutions in other countries, but as far as I know, its functioning is one of the most democratic there is.

You will agree with me that an appointment to the Senate is an important event in one's life. It is not the first time I have been placed, owing to the force of circumstances, in particular situations, and I do not usually avoid them. I sincerely think that to accept a challenge always requires the same elements and effort in order to succeed. The elements of success depend both on the individual himself and on the group around him.

When I entered the Senate, I had and still have the firm intention to work for the betterment of Canada. I think that with your support, I shall be able to promote the rights, both political and social, of every individual, but particularly those of our minorities and our regions.

Honourable senators, in my opinion the Speech from the Throne faithfully mirrors those concerns as well as the economic and political perspectives of our country. It sets forth guidelines and directions which should enable us to manage this nation in the years ahead.

Indeed it reveals the intentions of a government, secure in its parliamentary majority and supported by a broad segment of the electorate, which has the ability and the resources needed to offer worthwhile solutions to the problems of the eighties. I would urge you to bear these facts in mind during the Throne Speech debate. In addition, I think it is essential to consider the economic and above all political developments which have taken place in this country over the last 12 months and even more so those which will take place this year, particularly in the three coming months.

Honourable senators, more than I you are no doubt aware of the political and economic developments that have taken place during the past year but you may not necessarily ascribe to them the same political and historical importance. In my opinion the results of the last election are very indicative of the state of our country. The very fact that entire regions of Canada are represented only by either one of the main parties is in itself a matter for reflection. Nevertheless I remain quite optimistic and I am not tempted to believe that this country will become difficult to govern and that our political institutions will cease to function efficiently. I dare think that this opinion is shared by many others.

Most people would like to have a more balanced representation, at least I hope so. Like a lot of Canadians, I am convinced that the majority principle on which our democracy is based is more important than achieving a perfectly balanced representation of any kind. But in order to respect the principle of democratic majority, we must remember that all Canadians will be able to enjoy the same rights, especially those from outlying regions or from minority groups who might not feel sufficiently or directly represented. Moreover, we must recall that they enjoy guaranteed participation in the political and economic process of this country. During this and following sessions we will concern ourselves with these rights and we will strive to ensure this full participation. The Speech from the Throne indeed reflects the government's concern in this regard.

Canadians, both men and women, will in due time have the opportunity and the duty to compare the accomplishments of the government with its intentions and commitments. Our task, honourable senators, if that is not exaggerating our role, is to consider this immediately and that is indeed one of the main objectives of the Throne Speech debate.

In order to do that, it is important to understand the reasons which have brought about a change in government and a parliamentary majority. There have been enough minority governments in Canada to say that a majority government is the expression of the common will. The majority of Canadians, as they express themselves through our present parliamentary system, have clearly indicated their preference. They have expressed their disagreement with the actions of the previous administration and accepted the new direction and the adjustment proposed by the new government.

One of the tasks the people have given the new government is to redirect the country in other avenues than those taken by its predecessor, specifically a more adequate redistribution of fiscal burden and of the benefits of growth. The Speech from the Throne has shown this new orientation by proposing a program of action which constitutes the second facet of the mandate. This, in my view, is clear and in accordance with the commitments made. Contrary to what has been said, there is a program presenting guidelines and describing commitments. They were announced in January by the Liberal Party. If you will allow me, I will recall some of them because I feel it is important to know them well and to reflect on the commitments made to the people in order to judge the relevance of the Speech from the Throne.

The objectives proposed to the Canadian people at that time and for which the government was elected were to insure the stability of the country, the fairness and the security of the 1980s. In addition, five major commitments were made.

Yesterday, when the Speech from the Throne was read, I was happy to see in it in one form or another some intentions reflecting commitments made in previous months. I am also pleased that the Speech from the Throne states the intentions of the government in the area of legislation and that it intends to fulfill its specific commitments. In addition, following the Speech from the Throne, the people, if they were asked, would pass a favourable judgment on the conduct of the government and would endorse the measures it intends to take.

Obviously, it is disturbing that interest rates should be spiraling and have reached record levels, just like it is troubling to see that in spite of repeated and sustained efforts in the field of job creation, unemployment rates, particularly among the young and women, in certain areas, should remain very high. It is also disturbing to think about the negative effects of inflation on certain income groups and citizens. Much ingenuity will be required not only to maintain the growth of the economy and bring interest rates down to a lower level, but also to reduce the rates of unemployment and inflation and alleviate their effects. At other times, it might have seemed easier to find solutions to those problems. Today, because of certain restrictions, the number and the kind of possible remedies may seem much more limited, but I am most confident that the government will manage to find all the ingenuity and creativity called for by those situations.

Honourable senators, you will agree with me that the government's intentions to provide vigorous economic growth, energy security and an adequate volume of jobs are extremely important. The government's intentions in that respect are most legitimate. It is all to its credit to consider it just as much a priority to ensure those measures will provide a fair redistribution of the economic and social benefits.

For Canadians, the issue of fairness and fair redistribution is far from being a theoretical one. In the past two decades, for example, we had problems of access to education, medical and hospital care, just to name a few, which were in fact difficult questions of redistribution. Federal and provincial leaders looked into them and brought in corrective measures and solutions. Today, we have a set of programs which allow us to say that the big problems in those areas have been largely solved.

Since then, new priorities have emerged, and the Speech from the Throne mentions them very adequately. They are much too complex to deal with them, even briefly, today. Nevertheless, I would like to point out two of them—the promotion of women and their participation in our society, and the necessity to review some of our social security programs so they will achieve their purpose.

There is no doubt that women have made very significant progress in the last decade through their efforts and those of governments to promote their rights and assure them a fairer participation in all areas. It is very fortunate that the government decided to continue in the same direction. Indeed, those who are familiar with the status of women and have understood its evolution, as the government has, realized that great care must be taken to preserve the progress already made and to achieve even more. During the next few years, matters related to the status of women and its enhancement will have to be given the same priority as they received during the last decade even though our attention might focus on other problems that we shall have to deal with more urgently. However, as stated in the Speech from the Throne, I believe that we must complete the work already begun as suggested, because certain basic rights are involved. Moreover, we must realize that the process of enhancement is not reversible.

As evidence of this, I would give the example of the widespread and spontaneous movement of the so-called "Yvettes", of the thousands of Quebec women who reacted to an insolent and rather revealing blunder concerning their role in our society and their constitutional option. This means that we would be well advised today not to underestimate the vital strength of women. I believe that we shall also have to remember this when considering the various bills that will be introduced in Parliament.

As concerns the review of social security programs, I am convinced that the intention of the government, as stated in the Speech from the Throne, to enhance the annual guaranteed income program is consistent with its policy and its will to make all necessary improvements to all our social and economic programs to ensure a fair redistribution of wealth. This should be supported. Even though Canada has enjoyed a fantastic economic growth in the last twenty years and even though our country has been able to implement a rich and adequate social security system, it remains that a large number of people still need some assistance in Canada. This is especially the case of senior citizens and pensioners. There are more than two million pensioners in Canada, and of this number, 1.3 million, or more than 60 per cent, are now eligible to receive the guaranteed income supplement in addition to their old age security pension. The fact that we have such a program in Canada illustrates the value and the richness of our social security system. However, the large number of eligible people abundantly proves the need for this program.

When the bill is introduced, we shall be able to consider its various components. I believe that we shall conclude as did the government, that there is a need to review and to enrich this program so that it may meet its objectives. I urge you also to try to ensure by improving this program that our pensioners will be treated more equitably since this is one of our best programs and it aims at helping those who need it most as it takes their other sources of income into account. I would also like to note that pensioners of all provinces benefit from this program. In fact, even the so-called rich provinces benefit from it since, as stated in the latest annual report on old age security, approximately 55 per cent of pensioners in Western provinces and 45 per cent in Ontario now receive a guaranteed income supplement, and the proportion is much greater in the other provinces.

In conclusion, honourable senators, I would like to say a few words on the subject of national unity. As you know, it has several aspects, all equally important. The Throne Speech is very eloquent and revealing concerning the intentions of the government. As for me, I shall speak mostly about the Quebec aspect because this will have a vital importance for Canada during the next few months.

Because of my training, and personal experience, and I might even add by taste, I have very little expertise in the constitutional area. However, as a Quebecer and a Canadian, I feel very much involved in the referendum debate, its issue and especially its impact. Like every one of you, I imagine, I am anxious about this referendum. Unlike many Canadians however, I am not pessimistic about the final results of the referendum vote to be held in Quebec.

Honourable senators, I believe that there would be no point in going over once again, even briefly, the reasons for the present situation and the many aspects of the choice to be made by Quebecers. Because you have often had in this house, in committee or elsewhere an opportunity to hear statements on the political situation in Quebec and constitutional positions, I have no intention to add to that here, at least not today. Let me however note that since the Quebec government tabled their white paper, there has been a large number of new writings and statements, for or against the latter.

Many if not all of us already have given extensive thought to these matters. I feel compelled to remark that the Honourable Maurice Lamontagne just published a book on this issue. He deserves commendation because his book is very much to the point.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Senator Rousseau: It is an excellent work that analyses and answers the white paper.

Whatever the scope of our thoughts past and present, it is my feeling that all of us must ponder those writings and statements, because quite possibly it is only through renewed reflections on them, through efforts to understand the thoughts behind those writings and statements, that we will be able to understand, to grasp, not only the repercussions of Quebecers' choice, but also why a good number of them will opt for something other than federalism. In other words, if such were the case, I feel it would be better not to be content with an interpretation and an understanding of such a choice that could date far back or that could even have become too stereotyped and self-centered.

It would be wiser and even essential to cast a new look, and I dare say an understanding look on the events that will unfold. Before the Throne Speech, it was difficult to be optimistic on the referendum fallouts, to share a conviction that the country as a whole rather than Quebec alone will emerge heightened by the experience. There will be very little benefit in a ballot victory if we cannot achieve the objectives of the Throne Speech, if the largest possible number of Quebecers cannot reach with us a serene outlook on every dimension of the constitutional issue. This in fact will be one of the prerequisites for a healthy and fruitful debate at the national level, as proposed by the Throne Speech.

For that reason and numerous others, and mainly because Canada is built on democratic principles, it is fundamental that such a consultation process retain ongoing respect under the spirit and letter of our democratic values. If not, there will be other fallouts than those from the mere holding of that referendum, which we will be getting anyway. I am confident that this will be so.

I will leave it to others to elaborate on the political consequences and the strategies they will deem fit, if they believe the referendum vote could be positive. As far as I am concerned, I would rather share the government's intentions and concentrate on understanding the implications and trying to foresee the post-referendum period. I feel, however, that even in the prospect of a "no" vote, there will be important repercussions from the launching of this type of consultation, and we must look at them.

It is easily conceivable, for instance, that provincial governments, including that of Quebec, will have lost part of their flexibility to negotiate and discuss constitutional propositions without the thought of having to have their decisions endorsed by electoral consultations. If need be, we may have to re-think the approach to constitutional discussions and the way of approving the changes envisioned for our political institutions and the sharing of powers. That dimension in my view should be put in true perspective.

In another line of thought, I think the referendum vote will be a hard blow to the ideals and dreams of a whole generation of Quebecers, and especially a certain group of Quebecers. It is unlikely that an unhealthy climate will develop, but we must start thinking right now on how to integrate those who will disagree with the majority. Much magnanimity and wisdom will be called for, because that referendum vote, by the mere wording of the referendum question chosen by their government, will mean for many Quebecers that a majority of them denies that government the mandate to submit and try to negotiate a certain unacceptable vision of Quebec and a certain impracticable type of association with the nine other provinces of Canada. Many Quebecers will subscribe to the commitment made in the Speech from the Throne but many of them will also keep in mind that this majority will be due in part to the vote of non French-speaking minorities and they will hope that it will not be interpreted as reflecting the satisfaction of francophones in particular, nor that it will give a blank cheque to the other constitutive elements of the country. In other words, they will take for granted that the spirit of the commitments in the Speech from the Throne as well as the spirit of our nation will be respected.

In the post-referendum period it will be essential to highlight in the whole country the reasons that prompted a province, and not the smallest, to hold a referendum on its participation in our federation after 113 years. Of course the mere fact that this type of consultation can take place demonstrates the value of our system, but is should show more than that to Canadians.

I believe that Canada is not only a matter of federal or provincial programs or jurisdiction. I always believed that it is possible to unite the ten provinces and territories for the benefit of everyone and that the best way to do it was and will be, our federative system, until proven otherwise. Of course it must necessarily be rejuvenated to meet present and future requirements. And particularly it should better ensure to all citizens in every region a Canada so warm and welcoming in every respect that they will share our view that Canada is the motherland of them all and that they can all depend on each other.

Many years ago, when I was a young teacher in small rural schools of the lower St. Lawrence I was proud to teach and explain the motto of Canada, not only the meaning of the Latin words A mari usque ad mare but particularly that they mean more than the literal translation. I hope that the same things were taught in the schools of all other provinces and that today the real meaning of our motto is still explained to children even more forcefully. Like today I hope that teachers always explained that our motto applies fairly and fully to every Canadian, including those of my minority, for it was and still is a prerequisite.

Hon. Harry Hays: Honourable senators, in seconding the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, I should first like to congratulate our new Speaker on his appointment. I am sure we all look forward to an exciting session. With His Honour's great intelligence and wit there should not be too many dull moments in this chamber.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Hays: I also wish to congratulate the Leader of the Government. He has shown in the past that he is well able to handle his duties with dignity and dispatch. I thank him for permitting me to second this motion.

I would be remiss indeed if I did not thank Senator Grosart for the manner in which he carried out the duties of Speaker in the Thirty-first Parliament.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Hays: It is not all that easy when a government is in a minority position.

The Throne Speech indicated in no uncertain terms that we are likely to be looking at Canada in much the same way as our forefathers did 113 years ago. I propose to dwell on two matters which have worldwide implications, and they are real bread-and-butter issues to all Canadians. If government is for the people—and most of us believe that to be so—then we are dealing with the assets and liabilities of human beings. We sometimes find ourselves greedy, selfish and egotistical, but, by the same token, we can be generous, understanding and humble.

The two most important subjects with which I wish to deal are energy and food. As many honourable senators know, I am associated with an oil company. On March 3, 1980 at 14 o'clock we extracted heavy oil from south of the McMurray sands at a depth of 345 feet, using a homemade baler.

I would ask one of the more husky pages in this chamber to be kind enough to pass this sample around to honourable senators—it weighs quite a bit—in order that they might see what we are dealing with. We have 30 billion barrels of this product, to use and to sell, if we can get it into production.

An Hon. Senator: Is it drinkable?

Senator Hays: It is pretty gooey stuff. Perhaps it could be passed around so that all honourable senators can see and smell it. If we are to keep warm in the future, and go on picnics and to fancy balls then we shall have to use some of it.

● (1600)

During the Second World War I was President of the Canadian Swine Breeders' Association. After the Low Countries were overrun by the Germans, the British lost their sole source of bacon. An amount of 600 million pounds of bacon was involved. They asked Canada to fill the gap, which by 1943 we did, and even more.

We had hundreds of sows at the time, and I often watched the little fellows they gave birth to come into the world. When a little pig is born he has, on each side of his upper jaw, two razor-sharp teeth. Within four or five minutes of being born he has already had a feed, and will be sleeping up close to his mother to keep warm. By this time he has already established his priorities, and where he is going to be fed. Most sows have 10 teats, so each one can accommodate as many pigs as she has faucets. The rest die if they are not fighters. Within 15 minutes they are using these tusks they are born with, with all the vigour they can muster. If you do not remove those teeth on the day they are born every little pig will be slashed, and some will die from infection of the wounds.

You know, honourable senators, there is not much difference between pigs and people. The only real difference is that when the little pigs are full and comfortable they are happy, and they get along with each other. This is not so with people, however. What people in the world are better off today than Canadians? We have the two most important resources—wheat and oil—to enable us to enjoy the highest standard of living in the world. We have wheat and oil—that is, food and energy—mostly north of the 49th parallel, in the second largest land area of any country in the world. It is cold and harsh, but what advantages we have. Countries that have colder climates, it seems to me, generally have a higher standard of living. The not-so-well-off people live in tropical countries. They really do not do so well there. Cattle do not do well in 100-degree weather; nor do pigs and nor do people. In my view, it is the country that makes the people; not the people that make the country.

Let us for a moment examine our energy potential in this country. According to Dr. H. A. Meyerhoff, a truly world renowned geologist, whose advice has been sought by most world producers such as China, the U.S.S.R., Brazil, OPEC, Mexico, and Standard Oil, there are basically five major areas of oil and natural gas in the world, in the following order. The Arabian or Persian Gulf basin is No. 1, at the top. The west Siberian basin, in the Soviet Union, is No. 2. It is difficult to pick No. 3, but at the moment it happens to be Canada, particularly the province of Alberta. In fourth place is the Reforma-Campeche Gulf in southern Mexico, and in fifth place is the Venezuelan eastern basin. These five areas represent over 84 per cent of the world's known deposits. This means that on United States soil there is virtually nothing; however, they do have large known oil shale reserves. The only other countries with large deposits are the U.S.S.R., China and Brazil.

The world has produced to date about 300 billion barrels of oil, and approximately one quadrillion cubic feet of gas. Of the 300 billion barrels produced to date, about 150 have come from the United States and Canada. The balance has come mainly from the Soviet Union and the Middle East.

World supplies estimated for the future—and this is based on Dr. Meyerhoff and the Istanbul Conference of 1977—indicate that something close to 2 trillion more barrels will be proved in the world. Of this amount the vast majority is in the U.S.S.R., but of the 490 billion shown in the U.S.S.R., only about 30 to 40 billion are proved. Of the 350 billion shown for the Middle East, all is proved and there is still some potential.

The great bulk of North American oil lies in southern Mexico and in the Alberta sands. By comparison, the other countries are insignificant, with the exception of South America, where 100 billion barrels alone will be recovered from Venezuelan tar sands.

Approximately 7 quadrillion cubic feet of natural gas have yet to be produced. Please note that the figures I am about to quote are very important to Canadians. Of these approximately 7 quadrillion cubic feet, 3 quadrillion are proved. Of the 3 quadrillion proved, two are in the Soviet Union, and the Middle East has little less than a quadrillion proved.

It can be seen, therefore, that North America is blessed with a large supply, but most of it is in Canada—in the Alberta basin, the Arctic islands and the Beaufort Sea—and in the Reforma-Campeche shelf area of Mexico. The amount in the rest of the world is relatively insignificant.

With resources like these, who would be so dull as to want to leave Canada, or cut himself off from the benefits to be derived from these resources?

Of course, all these facts are related only to hydrocarbons. Canada is also blessed with nuclear energy, and it has a most promising future. There is a strong anti-nuclear element in Canada and in the United States, and this is most unfortunate because, outside of the Soviet Union, not a single person has been killed by a nuclear accident. Misconceptions in this regard have spread as a result of a lack of understanding with regard to how a nuclear reactor is built. I am told it cannot explode; that there is no way for it to explode. A nuclear reactor is built so that it produces steam, which is not radioactive. We are therefore well taken care of down the road as far as energy is concerned.

We are importing 450,000 barrels of oil per day and exporting 155,000 barrels per day. Soon oil exports, except possibly those of heavy oils, will be phased out, so that there will no longer be export tax revenue to pay any of the import subsidy.

Today, following the last OPEC price increase, we, the government and people of Canada, will have to pay the subsidy, which will cost $5 billion a year. Getting that down to where we can understand it, it amounts to 65 cents per gallon.

Getting back to hydrocarbons, we have in Canada 8 billion barrels of proved conventional oil reserves. We have another 30 billion barrels of heavy oil and 250 billion barrels of tar sand reserves. A sample of heavy oil is what is being passed around.

Including potential conventional oil reserves, we have over 300 billion barrels of oil reserves that can physically be produced. This physically realizable reserve of 300 billion barrels is 15 times greater than Canada's estimated oil requirements of 20 billion barrels over the next 25 years.

Why are we facing an energy shortage today? The reason is that the known reserves cannot be produced at today's low oil and gas prices. In this respect we must change our attitudes as to what is cheap and what is expensive.

According to Charles Hetherington, when the subsidy was first introduced Canada exported to the United States about the same amount of oil as it imported from overseas. Canada charged an export tax on oil sent to the United States and used this money to subsidize imported oil. The situation has now changed.

I have not made mention of coal and hydro power, of which we have abundant amounts. Let us be ever mindful that Germany, using the gasification of coal, fought for two-and-a-half years after her oil supplies were cut off. It took the whole world to defeat her.

Our problems in Canada are in transportation and development. I have seen some waste of natural gas. I remember asking Senator Manning how much gas he thought we flared off at Turner Valley. After dark where I lived we could see a glow in the sky for 20 years. Senator Manning estimated that we burned off 17 trillion cubic feet of gas, or enough to last us for 15 years. I remember buying condensate gas, which you could burn in a tractor, in eight-gallon milk cans for eight cents a gallon. That does not seem very long ago.

Let us take a look, for a moment, at what the transportation of natural gas would do for Canada if the projects on the drawing boards were put in place and we could transport the surplus of proved gas reserves, which amount to 80 trillion cubic feet. Most authorities agree that Canada's frontier areas have the potential to develop 500 trillion cubic feet of additional reserves. Relating this to annual Canadian requirements at this time, it means 1.4 trillion cubic feet per year. This would last us 57 years or, including the unproven reserves, it would last us 200 years.

I am thinking today about one project that we are having a hard time getting off the ground, and that is the pre-build section of the southern part of the pipeline which would move Alberta's surplus gas into the United States. That pipeline would run through half of Alberta and into Saskatchewan. The total cost of this would be $1.6 billion. This project can be completed in a hurry if we keep at it.

To Foothills Pipe Lines (Yukon) Ltd., it would mean $665 million. If we started the project immediately, in terms of distribution, this would mean to Canada an increase in the GNP. Employment, direct and indirect, in terms of cumulative man-years, would be 150,000. Who would benefit? The direct benefits to British Columbia would be $70 million; to Alberta $650 million; to Saskatchewan and Manitoba $360 million; and to Ontario and Quebec $360 million.

These amounts, when taken into consideration with the profits which will be derived from the pipeline that is proposed to carry gas to the United States from Prudhoe Bay by an all-Canadian route, can be multiplied five times, and we end up with an amount in the neighbourhood of $15 billion vis-à-vis $1.4 billion.

I quote those figures because it seems to me that this is just one small project among the $60 or $70 billion of projects that are on the drawing boards, and which we, the government of the people of Canada, should get on with the business of seeing that they are developed.

I turn now to the subject of agriculture. You have heard me say many times that the only real culture in Canada is agriculture. That has always been the case. Farmers have fun farming, and although they tend to eat too much they are pretty happy people. We have 170 million acres between fences in Canada, and we only farm something like six per cent of that. We have the cheapest food in the world, in that it costs us only 18 cents out of every dollar we earn to feed ourselves.

We have not scratched the surface, particularly in the field of wheat production. In the 29 million acres of wheatland we have in that great food basket of Canada—Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta—the yield is about 27 bushels to the acre if we have a good crop, because it is dry and partly arid. We also have the greatest known untapped watershed in the world in the eastern slopes of the Rockies. We have one million acres of irrigated land in Canada out of a possible 170 million acres, and the difference between one acre of dry land and one acre of irrigated land is another 60 bushels of wheat. Therefore, you can see the great potential in just shoring up the eastern slopes of the Rockies and redirecting the water by pipeline to some of the richest land in the world in southern Saskatchewan.

We have the energy to do that because nitrogen is made from gas and air, and you cannot grow crops without nitrogen. We have to import our phosphorus since we do not have any, but neither do many other countries. Morocco and the United States have most of it.

This is the sort of potential we have in this country. I just cannot understand why any Canadian, west or east, would try to opt out of a country like ours.

I own property at both ends of Canada, and I am aware of our political problems, but I feel it is time that we started looking at our great potential. We have many assets, and I know we have some liabilities. I have heard a lot about squabbling today, but to all who are looking in on Canada we must seem pretty unintelligent to be squabbling over the best country in the world.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Senator Roblin, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, April 16, 1980

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE HON. A. HAMILTON McDONALD

TRIBUTES

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, yesterday I was unavoidably delayed in taking my seat in this chamber. I now wish to associate myself with the remarks of honourable senators who spoke yesterday in paying tribute to the late Senator Hamilton McDonald, or "Hammy" as we all knew him.

As honourable senators know, he was my seat mate for the past six years. His knowledge of parliamentary procedure, gained both in the provincial legislature, where he led his party, and as Whip and Deputy Leader of the Government in this chamber, enabled me to call on him for advice and counsel, which he gave freely and which was of great help to me.

I personally have lost a great friend, the Senate has lost one of its most faithful and hard-working members, and Canada has lost a great parliamentarian and soldier.

I should like to take this opportunity to extend to his family and friends my most sincere sympathy.

THE SENATE

PROCEDURE DURING QUESTION PERIOD
STATEMENT BY HIS HONOUR THE SPEAKER

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, yesterday, during the question period, Senator Asselin rose on a point of order and said:

> Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know what your guidelines are. You can give them to us in due course: I do not expect you to give them to us directly as you have just recently taken over your duties.

Honourable senators, following the point of order raised yesterday afternoon by Senator Asselin, I spent part of the night looking up precedents.

Unfortunately, his point of order cannot be sustained because it is a simple disagreement between honourable senators.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

BOYCOTT OF 1980 OLYMPIC GAMES IN MOSCOW—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, April 22, 1980, I will move:

That the Government of Canada formally support the boycott of the 1980 Olympic Games by the United States of America and that the government take note of the resolution adopted by the Ontario Legislature, via a free vote, calling upon the Government of Canada to boycott the Games;

That the Government of Canada affirm its solidarity with the dissidents, cultural and religious minorities in the Soviet Union, who, like the people of Afghanistan, are now under totalitarian Soviet dictatorship; and

That the Government of Canada affirm Canada's strong continued support for international human rights and worldwide peace.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

BOYCOTT OF 1980 OLYMPIC GAMES IN MOSCOW—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTER FROM PRIME MINISTER TO PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, further to the notice of motion introduced by my colleague, newspapers reported yesterday that the Prime Minister sent a letter to President Carter to assure him that the federal government fully supports the measures taken by the United States against the Soviet Union after the invasion of Afghanistan, as well as the measures taken against Iran. If that letter exists, could the government leader table it in this house?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): The question will be taken as notice.

NATIONAL UNITY

QUEBEC REFERENDUM

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, yesterday I put a question to the government leader. I had much difficulty in obtaining an answer, because the government leader decided it was hypothetical and he could not answer a hypothetical question. My question went this way: If a "yes" vote were to be given by the population of Quebec on the referendum question, I wanted to know if the federal government would negotiate sovereignty-association with the Quebec government.

Senator Robichaud: Oh!

Senator Asselin: What are you grumbling about this time?

Senator Lafond: Is it a question or a speech?

Senator Asselin: The government leader refused to answer, on the ground it was a hypothetical question. I would now like to refer the house to page 18 of the Debates of the Senate for yesterday, and I quote in English the answer given by Senator Perrault to the question I put him:

[English]

> SENATOR PERRAULT: Senator, it is a very hypothetical question . . . and the government is not prepared to make a statement on such an eventuality at the present time. It is totally consistent with parliamentary tradition to take that position.

While I was getting that answer, the Right Honourable the Prime Minister in the House of Commons gave the answer to my question, which of course honourable senators could hear later from the Prime Minister. He stated the government's official position.

So on the question I put to the government leader, it is one of two things. Either he knew the government's position and refused to answer, refused to supply the information requested yesterday, because a few minutes later the Prime Minister gave it to the House of Commons; or the government leader was not aware of cabinet decisions to that effect, because I assume that such a difficult question would have been discussed in cabinet. I wonder what role the government leader has in cabinet if he cannot answer so crucial a question as that put yesterday, because a few minutes later the Prime Minister answered it in the House of Commons.

Can the government leader answer my question? Did he intend to mislead me? Did he decide not to answer the question, or was he unaware of cabinet decisions on so crucial an issue?

[English]

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am very pleased to speak to this matter this afternoon. First of all, may I commend Senator Asselin for his continuing concern about the necessity for a "no" vote in the province of Quebec. He has demonstrated in the past that he is a great Canadian and one who understands the reasons for national unity.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: At the time the question was posed yesterday afternoon, the Right Honourable the Prime Minister had not yet spoken in the other place—and may I say that when he did he made one of the great eloquent speeches on the subject of national unity. I know that Senator Asselin, in his usual non-partisan feeling of generosity, will concede that this is indeed a great leader, particularly in the area of national unity.

Senator Flynn: Reply to the question.

Senator Asselin: No, he is going to make a speech.

Senator Perrault: May I quote from the remarks, some of which will be historical, made by the Right Honourable the Prime Minister in the other place yesterday afternoon—

Senator Flynn: We know what he said. We want to know why you did not say it.

Senator Smith (Colchester): We know what you said, too.

Senator Perrault: The Right Honourable the Prime Minister said this:

> Since this will be a dialogue between two persons without mandates to discuss sovereignty—

This is in the case of a "yes" vote.

> —it seems to me . . . that Mr. Lévesque will perforce be nonsuited. And it is my forecast that this nonsuit will probably prompt some péquistes to say: "You see, there is no possible talks with the federal government. The other provinces are not reasonable, they will not have discussions with us. You voted "yes" on referendum day, but now you are being humiliated by a partner who will not recognize your "yes" vote, he will not even negotiate with you."
> Then people will say: "The only way out is to slam the door and look for ways to reach independence, period!"

Senator Flynn: We read it.

Senator Perrault: Continuing to quote the Right Honourable the Prime Minister:

> You see, Madam Speaker, how the "no" answer that will be given to the PQ choice by all parties in this House, the "no" answer that has already been given to the PQ choice by provincial premiers, will be interpreted by some as a "no" answer to the people of Quebec, and this is what I would like to caution Quebecers against. Those who will be casting a "yes" vote to the referendum should know at the outset they are proceeding into a dead end.

There is the reply. Continuing:

> They must know at the outset that a "yes" vote can only lead to a political and legal impasse, because as I have shown there can be no association without partners, of which there are none. And independence cannot be achieved without association, which is why it will not be achieved.

May I suggest to the Honourable Senator Asselin that, in his efforts to urge a "no" vote in the province of Quebec, he equip himself with copies of this speech and distribute them.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government is obviously refusing to answer me once again and he is trying to parry the question I have put to him.

I will reiterate my question: Yesterday when I asked him the question, did he know the government's official position in this matter? If so, why did he refuse to answer me, or did he simply wish to conceal this information from me?

[English]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, of course there was no subterfuge intended, or indeed practised yesterday afternoon. On important matters of this kind, of course the national leader of the party is the first to enunciate policy and make important statements.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Asselin: So, you confirm now that you knew the position of the government. You say it was the duty of the Prime Minister to announce it in the other place, but you knew it. Why did you refuse to respond to my question yesterday as to what the position of the government was?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I merely suggest that Senator Asselin read my previous answer. I think there is an unnecessary degree of obfuscation on his part in connection with this issue.

Senator Flynn: Why doesn't the Leader of the Government simply confess that he didn't know what the position of the government was? That would close the matter.

Senator Perrault: If there is any position known in Canada with respect to the matter of national unity, that position has best been expressed by the Liberal Party in this nation which, from coast to coast, has advocated national unity in all generations and at all times.

Senator Flynn: That is too much. Do you take us for fools? You said yesterday that the government was not prepared, and it was. Just admit that you made a mistake, that you were ignorant of what was going on.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is unfortunate that the bitterness of the election results seems to have extended into this first session of this Parliament. I regret that very much. I was not prepared yesterday afternoon to go beyond the point I went because my national leader, of whom I am very proud, had the first right to tell the people of Canada, and that important component of Quebec, where we stood.

Senator Flynn: If that is the case, why did you not say so very simply? There is no bitterness about the election in discussing that. When I made mistakes, when I occupied your position, I admitted them. Why don't you?

An Hon. Senator: Name one.

Hon. G. I. Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government if the example that he and his colleagues set yesterday afternoon, that is of being confused and wandering in answers to questions, and which he has confirmed again today, is to be the example we may expect him to follow for the duration of this session, or may we expect that on some occasions at least he will give straightforward, honest and complete answers to questions? And are we to expect also that every time he wants to hide he will accuse us of asking a question out of bitterness?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that is a rhetorical question which I shall allow to rest on its very low standard of rhetoric.

Senator Smith (Colchester): So we are going to be exposed to the same complete reluctance to be frank with this house that we have suffered for so long. Did the honourable gentleman wish to engage me in the discussion?

Senator Flynn: I think the record will speak for itself.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

GOVERNMENT'S LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): My question to the Leader of the Government is in a lighter vein, as far as he is concerned, I am quite sure. Would the Leader of the Government table a list of the bills that may be coming before the Senate this session, as we did in the last session when we were in office. I am speaking now of a tentative list; I do not mean a complete one.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am pleased to announce that, pledged as we were to immediate action in a number of areas vital to the Canadian people, 20 bills will be tabled this afternoon in the other place, and five or six will be tabled this afternoon in this place. This is but the beginning of what we hope will be one of the most productive sessions in the history of Parliament.

Senator Flynn: I am very interested because I want to find out if there is anything new in the bills that are to come. I see six bills here that were before this house during the last session. I am eager to find out what new items will come before us.

Senator Perrault: May I say, to clarify the situation, that there is a total of 21 bills being introduced in Parliament today, 15 in the other place and six here. Additional bills are in the process of preparation. Admittedly some of these have already been introduced in the past Parliament. But I will be pleased to share this information with the Honourable Leader of the Opposition as soon as a further list is available.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, could the Leader of the Government say whether those 21 bills include a bill which is necessary and vital to the widows of veterans, those qualified for a widow's pension at the rate of 48 per cent. This measure, which was introduced by the previous government, also reduced the qualification period for many other widows who were left out over past years. Is that bill, which is so necessary, included in the list?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the information with respect to the titles of the bills and other details, I understand, will be available at approximately 3 o'clock this afternoon.

GRAIN

SALES TO U.S.S.R.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a question for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Knowing that he does not like to be ignored, I did my best today to find one question for him. I should like to know what the situation is with regard to the negotiation of sales of grain to the U.S.S.R. at this time.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Well, in recent weeks there have been discussions between the Canadian Wheat Board and the U.S.S.R. The sale that is in effect was one that was announced some weeks ago, namely, the sale of some two million tonnes of wheat to the Soviet Union. So there are negotiations continuing, but that is the only sale that has been announced to date.

Senator Flynn: You mentioned a figure of two million tonnes. Is that on the basis that the previous administration had decided because of the Afghanistan situation?

Senator Argue: You are talking about the limitations.

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator Argue: Yes, I would say so. I would say "yes" to that question, that sale does not exceed the normal limits that had been agreed to previously.

Senator Flynn: Thank you.

Hon. George van Roggen: Just for clarification on that point, may I put a supplementary question to the minister? Am I not right that that does not mean, however, that the two million tonnes mentioned is the maximum that you can go to and still be under the guidelines set forth by the previous administration?

Senator Argue: This recent sale comes on top of previous sales that had been made. Now we are talking about the sales that had been made.

Senator Flynn: For the present, yes.

Senator Argue: But the total of the sales that have been made to date and the action that has been taken on those sales to date, together, according to my information, do not exceed the delivery of the agreed to quantities for that period of time.

HOUSING

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—ASSISTANCE TO HOMEOWNERS

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for Senator Olson, who should not be forgotten either. In the Speech from the Throne the following comment was made about high interest rates:

> My Government will act to assist those unable to bear the burden of re-negotiating their home mortgages in the present abnormal situation so that the spectre of foreclosure will be avoided.

Do I understand that this is limited only to re-negotiation, and that those who intend to buy homes will have to bear the burden of the high interest rates?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, no, I think it is the reverse of the way the Honourable Leader of the Opposition has put it. It is a positive statement. The Minister of Finance and the Minister responsible for CMHC are working on a program to meet the most immediate need first. But that does not preempt what the total program will be, when it is announced by the Minister of Finance or other ministers after they have had a review of the whole situation.

Senator Flynn: Thank you.

JUSTICE

OIL CORPORATIONS—INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED PRICE FIXING

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. I will put it to the Leader of the Government, and I am sure he will take it as notice.

My question concerns the investigation into the alleged price fixing by the giant oil companies. Such an investigation has been under way for some time, and I wonder if the Leader of the Government would ask the Minister of Justice to give us a progress report on when a decision may be made about that.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as I recall, I addressed that same question to Senator Flynn, when I was the Leader of the Opposition.

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator Perrault: I do not have an update on the situation, but inquiries will go forward immediately.

Senator Flynn: Thank you.

THE NETHERLANDS

STATUS OF GOVERNOR GENERAL AT ACCESSION TO THE THRONE OF H.R.H. PRINCESS BEATRIX

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government about a portion of the Speech from the Throne read by His Excellency the Governor General. Early in the Speech, His Excellency refers to himself as: > —representing our country at the accession to the Throne of Her Royal Highness Princess Beatrix of the Netherlands in Amsterdam on April 30th.

● (1430)

My question is: What will be the official status of the Governor General at that accession in relation to Her Majesty the Queen? Will the Governor General attend as head of state of Canada, or will he attend in another capacity when Her Majesty is personally present?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): The question will be taken as notice.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

IRAN—POSSIBLE NAVAL BLOCKADE BY UNITED STATES

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: The government leader will know that in January, 104 countries represented at the United Nations voted to support sanctions against Iran. I should like to ask him whether the federal government has recently been asked to support the talked-about U.S. naval blockade of Iran?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have no knowledge of any such request. However, an inquiry will go forward.

IRAN-U.S.S.R. BORDER—RUSSIAN MILITARY MANŒUVRES

Senator Haidasz: I have a supplementary question. Can the Leader of the Government comment on the news that the U.S.S.R. has been amassing military forces on Iran's borders and conducting military manœuvres there?

Senator Perrault: Again, that question will be taken as notice.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

UNIVERSAL GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government. On March 3 the Minister of National Health and Welfare was quoted as saying:

> The time is right to press the federal and provincial governments for a universal guaranteed annual income to replace the patchwork of the provincial income support programs springing up across the country.

Will the Leader of the Government tell us whether that statement of the minister has been adopted as government policy; what are the intentions of the government with respect to that statement and that proposed policy; and what steps are being taken to implement it, if any?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the question is a rather complicated one. However, it can be answered in part by saying that the Minister of National Health and Welfare, together with many of her provincial colleagues, is very concerned about the proliferation of plans designed to alleviate various social conditions that exist across this country in connection with health problems—the proliferation of plans, and the possibility of waste or duplication or misdirection of funds inadvertently because of overlapping jurisdictions.

Undoubtedly, discussions will be held with provincial governments to discuss ways in which taxpayers' dollars can be more expeditiously and more effectively employed to alleviate various social burdens.

Senator Donahoe: Will one of those ways be to propose a universal guaranteed annual income, which the minister says is the proper way to deal with the problem?

Senator Perrault: That will be one concept where the views of the provinces will be sought. I know that any ideas in this area that the honourable senator may have will be gratefully received by the minister in her efforts to greatly improve health and welfare standards across the country.

Senator Donahoe: I am more interested in knowing how the federal government will receive her views.

THE ECONOMY

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. C. William Doody: I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development relating to a statement by the President of the Treasury Board on March 16, to the effect that government is:

> —looking at rearranging traditional divisions of revenue between the provincial governments and Ottawa.

I wonder if the minister could elaborate on that and tell us exactly what is meant. The implications are horrendous in terms of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, and we have received some inquiries about the matter.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): No, I could not give any further details about that at this time. I know that it is a matter that should have some preliminary study, because, as the honourable senator knows, the present arrangement is due to expire and requires renegotiation, culminating in an agreement by 1982.

I am not sure that there is quite the same urgency to work out those details as there is in connection with some of the other problems that we inherited.

Senator Flynn: Inherited from whom?

Senator Olson: From the previous government.

Senator Smith (Colchester): You mean from yourselves.

Senator Asselin: You must be joking.

Senator Doody: I have a supplementary on the same subject. I was directly involved in negotiations with the Government of Canada when in a previous incarnation with the Province of Newfoundland. It took several years to work out the present Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act. Even the equalization component of the act is a very complicated matter. The legislation contains 22 different components. I imagine that we are also looking at CAP and the various cost-sharing programs. As the minister has indicated, it is due to expire in 1982. Obviously there is some urgency about this matter. Perhaps the minister could look into the matter and let us have some information on the government's plans.

Senator Olson: I will be happy to provide that information.

GRAIN

COST OF PRODUCTION

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. For many years I have heard Senator Olson say in this chamber that farmers were selling their beef at prices below the cost of production. Senator Argue has also said in this chamber that farmers were selling their wheat at prices below the cost of production.

After analyzing what those honourable senators have said on behalf of the farmers, I conclude that all farmers must now be bankrupt because they have been selling those commodities at prices lower than the cost of production for years.

Will the minister please inform this house of what the actual cost of production of wheat is?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I wish I could. This is a very difficult and complicated question. When meetings of the Agriculture Committee were held with representatives of Canada and the United States, the question of the cost of production was raised. The American representatives did not have a cost-of-production figure, but they said they were going to initiate some important steps to see if they could arrive at such a figure.

The cost of production varies, of course, from farm to farm and, these days, from month to month—perhaps almost from day to day, with increasing interest rates and costs involved with output. Production costs for young farmers are, of course, higher than those for older and more established farmers.

In trying to establish a cost of production, one of the most important questions to be answered is: How much weight must be given—if, in fact, weight is given—to the cost of land? The cost of land is very high today. How much weight must be given to the value of the farmer's labour, and to the value of management by the farmer?

Those are all very important questions, and the cost of production is difficult to arrive at. I will have my officials—who are very learned and have pressed me greatly during the past few weeks to look at this complicated question—assist me in coming up with a more satisfactory reply for the honourable senator.

Senator Flynn: Just ask Senator Olson.

Senator Bosa: I have a brief supplementary question. If it is so difficult to establish the cost of production, how were those honourable gentlemen able to speak with such certainty when they said that farmers were selling those commodities at prices below the cost of production?

Senator Olson: It's easier from the other side.

Senator Argue: Senator Olson said it is easier from the other side. We all have an idea of what it costs to produce wheat. There are many expensive items involved. The cost is high and is going higher, but to put an actual amount on it is most difficult. However, I shall try to provide more precise information for the honourable senator.

ASSISTANCE TO CHRYSLER CORPORATION

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have a reply to a question asked by Senator Murray yesterday concerning the negotiations that are proceeding with respect to Chrysler Canada. I believe the second part of his question—

The Hon. the Speaker: I suggest that the honourable senator wait until I call for delayed answers to questions.

Senator Olson: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I did not know that you would be calling for them separately.

The Hon. the Speaker: I merely point that out to the honourable senator. Honourable Senator Olson, P.C.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to bring Senator Murray up to date on the negotiations proceeding with respect to Chrysler Canada. While my reply may not contain very much specific information, it is a fact that the basis of these negotiations is changing from day to day.

The government will shortly be reviewing the question of possible financial aid to Chrysler Canada, and I expect that decision will be made soon. I would like to be more precise than saying "soon", but I cannot do that at this time.

With respect to the type of assistance to be given—that is, as between grants and guaranteed loans, and that sort of thing—it would be premature for me to indicate the government's preference. I have consulted the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who is directly responsible for this area, and at the present time it is not clear what that preference may be. We want to be helpful, and we certainly want to be helpful to the extent of Canada's share in both the production and the market, but that has not been finally determined.

LAYOFFS OF AUTOMOTIVE WORKERS

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, we have just heard the Minister of State for Economic Development comment on the difficulties being experienced by the Chrysler Corporation of Canada. Could the minister inform the Senate of the government's reaction to the layoff of 1,500 workers at the Ford plant in Oakville, and another 500 in Windsor?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Well, the reaction, honourable senators, is that we want to get the facts very quickly. This happened only yesterday, and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce made some replies in the other place yesterday. An examination of the agreement is being undertaken, and the minister indicated that he is going to see to it that the Ford Company lives up to that agreement. I think it is fair to say that he is very close to obtaining from the company at least its concurrence in the idea of releasing the specific terms of the agreement, so that everyone can see them. After that is done, there will be a further examination to see if there have been any violations of the agreement.

ASSISTANCE TO SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development relating to the Sydney Steel Corporation and the assistance which it is alleged was promised to that plant by the honourable senator's party during the recent election campaign—assistance which I believe to be in the amount of $50 million, for a start. Has the honourable gentleman had time to address himself to that problem, and, if so, what is the present situation with regard to the matter?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, we have not had time to address ourselves to the specifics of that problem, so I suppose that is all the answer I can give today.

THE SENATE

WINDOWS IN CLERESTORY OF CHAMBER

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to address a remark to His Honour the Speaker.

We are in the limelight on this side of the chamber in more ways than one, and just now we are blinded by the sun shining through the windows in the clerestory.

Senator Asselin: Thank God; that means I cannot see the Leader of the Government.

Senator Choquette: Inasmuch as this house is likely to sit all summer, this condition will prevail throughout that time. I am wondering whether it can be remedied, and whether Your Honour will look into the matter.

Senator Langlois: You'll get used to it.

Senator Flynn: The problem is that you appear to be in the dark.

[Senator Haidasz.]

Senator Denis: You'll receive the light from the Liberals.

Senator Flynn: Oh no, never that.

OFFICIAL REPORT

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called I think I should direct the attention of the chamber to a mistake in the English version of yesterday's Hansard. Perhaps such mistakes are desirable, because they tend to make us more appreciative of the second official language. In this case, the "Contents" page is headed "Table des Matières", and is entirely in French.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I am told that the Printing Bureau is ready to reprint this issue of Hansard, if you feel that is necessary.

Hon. Senators: No.

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's Speech at the opening of the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament, and the motion of Senator Rousseau, seconded by Senator Hays, for an Address in reply thereto.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I was rather pleased that the sun was shining on the opposition today. I am afraid that it may not last too long, but while it does I am prepared to enjoy it.

I want to start with a personal word by expressing my warm appreciation of the gesture of my leader, Senator Flynn, and my colleagues on this side of the house, in allowing me to be the first spokesman for the official opposition in this debate.

It is another pleasant preliminary, honourable senators, to observe that there is a new personality presiding over our affairs in the person of His Honour the Speaker. I must admit, candidly, that I was not one of those who were agitating for a change in that department. I must say that when the Honourable Senator Allister Grosart occupied the Chair during all too short a term, he gave us an ample demonstration of his capacity to discharge the function of that office with patience, with reason, and with impartiality in every way.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: I will certainly miss—I think I may say that we will all miss—his good nature and Irish wit. I want to pay my tribute to the high standard of performance he gave.

If our political masters insist, however, honourable senators—and it appears that they do—that the Senate have a change of presiding officer, I think we are fortunate in that the lot fell to the Honourable Senator Jean Marchand, who occupies the Chair now.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: His parliamentary experience in two houses, his mastery of our two official languages, and the persuasive powers of his warm personality promise to untangle smoothly and with elegance any procedural pitfalls into which we may tumble—if pitfalls can be untangled—and I presume we will thrive under his direction.

[Translation]

I would also like to congratulate most sincerely Senator Rousseau. In her excellent speech yesterday, she aptly dealt with three major issues of public importance: women's rights, the needs of the aged, and the great issue of Canada's future and national unity. Her comments earned praise from each one of us.

[English]

Senator Hays also gave us a taste of that good old-time western optimism, and it sounded pretty good to me. I would have liked to hear him further on the subject of the oil pricing policy, and perhaps on the wonderful workings of FIRA, but there may be another occasion on which he will give us his views on those concerns.

I now come to the three senators who are cabinet ministers, and, of course, it is inevitable that I should recall that on a similar occasion last year, when one senator was appointed to cabinet, the action attracted the Trudeau thunderbolts, and we heard, if I may paraphrase the present Prime Minister with precision, that the move was indeed an insult to the voters, to the spirit of democracy, and to the House of Commons.

Well, honourable senators, I had no trouble at that time in disassociating myself completely from that point of view, and I have no trouble in disassociating myself from that point of view today. I do not think it is an insult to the voters who, true enough, rejected the Liberal Party holus-bolus in western Canada, in British Columbia, in Saskatchewan and in Alberta. I do not at all object to the fact that these gentlemen have been appointed in a representative capacity in the cabinet, and I dare say that they will be able to rationalize the prime ministerial flip-flop from 1979 to 1980 without any trouble.

Therefore, I have much pleasure in sincerely offering them good wishes and congratulations on their appointments. I feel they will conduct themselves with dignity and to the credit of this chamber. We will give them, I hasten to say, the same courteous attention and the same stimulating and questioning scrutiny that they gave my cabinet colleagues in the last Parliament; in fact, we may even ask them the same questions.

Senator Perrault: You already have.

Senator Frith: And got the same answers.

Senator Roblin: I think it is perfectly clear the answers have not improved, but the exercise should do us all good and help keep them in order.

If I may come a little closer to the gracious Speech of this "born again" administration, I would certainly congratulate the government in winning the franchise of the people. I wish I could congratulate the people on their choice of government. I cannot predict that the current public approval of the present administration is likely to be anything but fleeting. In any case, there will be no parliamentary honeymoon because we have the same old faces in this administration reverting to the old familiar patterns and, indeed, this administration is no blushing bride but a mature matron—one that has, indeed, been to the political well, in my opinion, once too often.

Senator Frith: That is another mixed metaphor—brides do not go to wells.

Senator Roblin: The bride may not go to the well, but the metaphor illustrates what happened to the pitcher, and I think if I described my honourable friend as a pitcher, I might be doing him a bit of an injustice—"a blushing bride" suits him better. After all, he is newly installed in his onerous role, and I wish him well in it.

The impression that the Throne Speech leaves with me is that its authors, if I may use a well-worn expression, are like the Bourbon kings who forgot nothing and learned nothing, or if that is too harsh an opinion—and I do not want to be too harsh—the Throne Speech has shown that they have not learned very much.

The political tradition in the Senate, of course, speaks in a softer accent than it does in the other place, and our political attitudes here are muted, restrained, so I have carefully searched out the Throne Speech to find out what good things could possibly be said about it.

It is a good thing that the guaranteed income supplement is to go up by $35 per household per month. Four hundred and twenty dollars more per year for those people is certainly something of which we will all approve. It is right to say, I think, that the intended national pension conference is a good initiative, particularly in these inflationary times when the whole pension structure is under some stress.

I also agree that the drive to increase critical trade skills is a worthy and important goal. It must have been in every Liberal Throne Speech in the last decade, but I think it will require the co-operation of the provinces if we are to avoid the duplication and waste that we have seen in the past. Of course, the proposition to put more people to work is another venerable cliché that has been resurrected and to which we can all tip our hats. It is one promise that I think the government may be able to keep provided enough of the unemployed are ambitious to join the bureaucracy because there are going to be plenty of new jobs going. The big bureaucracy boys are back in the saddle. However, if it is small business that provides most of the new jobs in Canada today, the Throne Speech contains precious little for them.

I notice the federal government offers a new partnership to voluntary agencies and local organizations in a new job-creating program of community service. That is fine, but what about the provinces? One would have thought this notion of partnership in local employment would have extended to the provinces. There is a need to involve the provinces in this local program but, I suppose, it was just never thought of. That is what I call "Trudeau federalism", because he naturally and normally excludes the provinces when he is dealing with a problem like this.

Then we have the freedom of information bill. Previous efforts in this direction by the present administration have been almost universally regarded as inadequate, and I suppose they now have a chance to do a better job. They should be able to do a better job because the proposals of the Honourable Walter Baker provide a model to copy—perhaps they can even improve on it, and I am sure they will.

The main theme of the Speech from the Throne lies elsewhere. The great problems of national unity and regional alienation lie over us all, casting a dark shadow on our future. One of the tests of this Throne Speech, surely, is how it plans to deal with this area and how it intends to face up to the coming referendum in the province of Quebec. There are fair words, inspirational words, and high-flown appeals contained in the document, but as to substance and as to the manner in which the substance will be expressed, I am left with a very unhappy sensation of painful doubt.

Oh, we are all federalists here; that's for sure. We will all work, and we will all pray for a rousing "no" vote on the day. We want our Canada to live, and with Quebec inside and not out. We know, in this chamber, that federalism can be a most flexible system, fully able to accommodate two cultures and all men of goodwill in one country.

In a few weeks the referendum will be upon us. I was encouraged by the report I saw in the paper this morning of the Prime Minister's speech yesterday in the other place on the meaning of a "yes" vote. This, of course, was an interesting topic raised by our colleague, Senator Asselin, which produced such an unusual reply from the Leader of the Government. It was a little too hot for him to handle yesterday, and he took quite legitimate shelter behind the concept of hypothetical questions. I think probably the truth of the matter is that he is not in the charmed inner circle and probably did not know what the Prime Minister was going to say until he said it, otherwise he would have protected his flank. But if he is feeling a little sore on the subject, I tell him not to worry—they also serve who only stand and wait.

In this statement to the Canadian people by the government yesterday, the "yes" vote was described as a political and legal dead end, and the "no" vote was described as the first step in reforming the federal system. I hasten to say that if the "yes" vote is not to prove a dead end for a dead country, we need to know more from the government to show the people of Quebec why a "no" vote is good for them and will not simply weaken their chances to get better terms under a new Constitution. The government has promised that a "no" vote will be a vote for rebuilding the Canadian federation, but I must say—and not with any pleasure—that this is the government which over the past generations, for whatever cause, has presided over the rise of separatism in the province of Quebec and, indeed, over the rise of the forces of alienation in other parts of this country which are stronger today than they were 12 years ago when the present Prime Minister first took office. Now we find him promising to review the process of constitutional reform. Well and good, but the Prime Minister yesterday, whether intentionally or not, confused me and I think confounded the issue when he went on to elaborate on the meaning of a "no" vote. I quote what Hansard has to say at page 36:

● (1500)

> So, I repeat, even a "no" vote may not necessarily lead to the renewed federalism everyone wants. There is doubtless one way of ensuring it, and that is a massive "no", a "no" that rings so loud and clear that the PQ government would understand that Quebecers truly do not want to separate from Canada, and that they had better buckle down to the task of renewing federalism instead of destroying it.

That is a statement I am sure we all regard with great interest and which we would, perhaps, support. But what happens if that does not take place?

I was disturbed to read in the press today that Mr. Peter Regenstrief, who has some reputation for accuracy in this matter, is predicting a narrow "yes" win in the province of Quebec. How are we going to reconcile that with what the Prime Minister has said? Of course, the proper way to reconcile it is to follow his line—that is, to convince the people to frustrate the "yes" vote and to secure the success of the "no" vote. I should like to see the government take that issue under consideration.

The promises now are well and good, but I think it would be helpful if the government were to spell out how the process of change is to take place, and how it intends to see that constitutional reform—which is promised under the heading of the "no" vote—is to become a reality in this country. It should make its position clear and it should clarify those philosophical musings in which the Prime Minister indulged yesterday, and in which he told us, on the one hand, that a "yes" vote was a dead end, and, on the other hand, that even a "no" vote could not guarantee the future of Canada and the reform of its Constitution.

Of course, if the Prime Minister means that not everyone is going to be satisfied, that is one thing—and it is the truth. However, if he means something other than that—and I fear that is the way this will be interpreted in other parts of the country, particularly in the ranks of the PQ in the province of Quebec—we then may find ourselves with some problem of clarification. So I say I hope that before this grand debate is over we will hear more from the government on how it will react to the changing situation. It is true that it would not be appropriate for the government to outline the details of its policy—the difficulties of that, in the circumstances, are clear—but surely there can be a rallying of support in the provinces led by the federal government so that it is clear that a "no" vote really means business insofar as constitutional reform is concerned, and that the philosophical aside—and let us hope it is no more than that—which I quoted today from the Prime Minister's speech is something we might well forget.

I hope these clarifications can be made before the vote on May 20, and that the position of the federal government on the program of reform can be made much clearer than it is in the Speech from the Throne and, indeed, in the Prime Minister's speech itself. It will have to be clearer if the government is to impress federalists in Quebec, some of whom are now perversely, I am told, in the "yes" lobby. It would certainly be necessary to do that if we are to hearten patriots throughout the nation.

But the action is not confined to Quebec. There are other elements in the Prime Minister's speech, and in recent actions of the administration itself, which have raised alarm and concern about other problems of regional alienation. Sometimes one would think that this administration is bewitched, that it has a perverse impulse to prove that it knows nothing of regional alienation, particularly in the west, or indeed, if it knows something, that it is so sure it is right that anything goes.

Let us take wheat as an example. Wheat is still the lifeblood of western Canadian agriculture and the western Canadian economy. There are fair prospects of greatly increasing our export earnings—indeed, a fabulous opportunity for more trade. However we have a problem in the fact that our transportation system cannot move the grain to market. A meeting was held in Winnipeg in January 1979 to discuss ways of solving this problem. I am not sure whether the present minister was there, but Otto Lang was there, representatives of the western provinces were there, the grain trade was there, farmers were there and, to bring up the tail, I was there.

Identified at that meeting as one of the main transportation bottlenecks were the inadequate grain terminals on the Pacific coast. It was agreed by all present that the remedy was bigger terminals at Prince Rupert. So, a co-operative endeavour was set afoot. A private consortium took the lead. The Province of Alberta pledged millions of dollars in capital support. The federal government provided a catalytic grant of $42.5 million to help the situation. Chrysler Canada would not thank you for that, but it was considered big in the west. It was a pleasant change in the direction of co-operative federalism. The $42.5 million was approved by Treasury Board, it was passed by order in council, and after the election one of the first things the new Minister of Transport did was to cast some doubt—if he did not actually repudiate it—on the grant for this purpose.

The chairman of the consortium said that the minister never spoke to him about it, although that violates the spirit and letter of a memorandum of agreement signed in July 1979. I very much hope that the Minister of Transport will make it perfectly clear that he has no intention of backing away from this proposal, and that the agreement will be honoured.

Some might say that $42.5 million is not such a big thing. Some may shrug it off, but I find it hard to shrug off. Perhaps it is not a large amount, but it strikes a shrewd blow against the westerners' perception of their interests, and, coming on top of repeated disappointments with the present administration over the years, one gets an insight as to why western Canadians do not vote Liberal, why they feel alienated, and why they feel they are outside the charmed circle.

Then take the implication of the force majeure principle regarding the oil sands pricing policy. We know what sand from the oil-bearing strata looks like because Senator Hays did us a considerable service yesterday by passing around a sample. I draw attention to the fine words in the Speech from the Throne regarding the need to find all the Canadian oil we can. Well, we found some. We found it in the oil sands, but there is a problem with getting it out. To get it out a great effort was put forward—a joint effort in co-operation with the federal government, the Government of Alberta and private operators. We have seen the fruits of that effort with some tar sands oil moving into our supply stream.

The key element of the plan was the federal undertaking regarding price. The federal government would give the producers of oil from the tar sands the world price. That was not a Progressive Conservative deal. Frankly, I must say that it was a Liberal deal. The price undertaking has been described as the main incentive for success. Well, the world price has gone up, and gone up by much more than anyone thought likely—we cannot ignore that—but so have the tar sands' production costs. Syncrude's operating loss for the year 1979—its operating loss, I say—is $50 million. They say there is no evidence to indicate that the current world price policy will ensure profitable and stable operations. To that I add that if and when operations are profitable and stable, and the oil companies get too much, the tax system can be used to mop up the windfall profits.

No sooner had that arbitrary change taken place—that is, the departure from the federal government's previous undertaking to offer the world price for the production of tar sands oil to one in which they would give these people something less; something unknown at the moment but evidently something considerably less—than another fact intervenes. Petro-Canada announced a coup, and its coup consists of a promise to buy 50,000 to 100,000 barrels of oil a day from the Republic of Mexico.

Mexican oil has a distinct characteristic in that it is expensive. Indeed, it is more costly than other oil available under long term contract. Its price is even higher than that of OPEC oil. Posted Mexican prices are higher than OPEC prices for a comparable product, and then there is the little problem of getting the stuff here.

So, we are faced with the interesting situation that it is all wrong to pay the world price to Canadian producers in Canadian dollars and so encourage Canadian production, particularly in the tar sands, which is one of our main hopes for oil self-sufficiency, while it is all right to pay even higher prices than the OPEC prices for foreign oil from Mexico—a policy that adds nothing to Canadian reserves, that costs millions in a foreign currency, and that will make our critical balance of payments problems even worse. And we think about that and say that if and when the companies involved in the tar sands make too much money, why it would be quite easy for the tax system to recover it.

But if this move respecting the tar sands is just a démarche, just a bargaining ploy that the federal government wants to have at hand in dealing with the Government of Alberta, if it is just part of a negotiating technique by which they think they can bring them down to size, I wonder if the federal government thinks it can run the oil business the way it runs the Post Office—confrontation all the way; "Well, let's forget about all of that; let's cut the oil sands people down to size." It may make you feel better, but it will not give you any more oil. In fact, it is well calculated to slow down the future development of the oil sands.

Is the government really ready to continue to rely on foreign oil so heavily, when there is the possibility of obtaining a Canadian source of supply? Is a source of supply in the present troubled state of the world so secondary that we can afford to cut down on this one while paying the full high price for foreign oil that is imported into Canada? Does the government wish to continue to load the balance of payments with the cost of foreign oil, when there is the possibility of relieving it by producing our oil ourselves? And if it does, does it understand—and I know it does understand—that the cost of borrowing abroad will probably rise, with the result that we will continue financing the running costs of the nation with funds borrowed from foreign nations?

And where does this state of affairs fit in with "control of the Canadian economy" that was so important a feature of the Throne Speech that was read to us the other day? Where does all of this policy come together?

While we are on the subject of oil, let's look at another oil measure in the Speech from the Throne, the objective of 50 per cent Canadian ownership by 1990. I admit that appeals to me. I am a bit of a nationalist when you scratch me. I like the idea of owning our own oil. That is well and good. But I have to think that buying from outsiders oil assets already discovered in Canada is not going to give us any more Canadian oil. If it just ties up Canadian capital, as of course it will, there will be just that many fewer dollars available to invest in the finding of new oil in Canada.

So here we find in one Speech this extraordinary mix of self-defeating policies. If you truly want made-in-Canada oil prices, whether of the Conservative sort or the Liberal sort, if you truly want to cut loose from OPEC and the international oil pricing system, there is only one way out, and that is a policy of Canadian oil self-sufficiency. Thus, pricing policies which work against oil self-sufficiency render good intentions foolish—and I think we saw plenty of evidence of that in the gracious Speech.

But my main fear is with the perception of the provinces in relation to the thrust of future oil policies of the federal government, particularly when they are recollected against the government's record in the past, from the time of John Turner's oil policy fiasco to the present events that I have been describing. This Throne Speech will inevitably be regarded in some parts of Canada as a frontal attack on the constitutional rights of provinces to their natural resources—and not in Alberta only. I stress that. Oil today, but, honourable senators, hydro-electric power tomorrow. The kite has already been flown in my province for federal government price control and interference in that industry. And, if hydro-electric power, what next and who next?

Honourable senators, there is a national interest in oil. It is a very important one. It affects all Canadians. There is a provincial interest in oil, and when provincial interests have national implications, they have to be approached by the province or provinces concerned from a statesmanlike point of view. But, with patience and a just regard for the interest of all Canadians, I know these interests can be accommodated. This administration should seek to create the negotiating atmosphere and the bargaining climate in which reasonable men can arrive at reasonable decisions. No one is going to get all he wants, but oil price compromises can be achieved when good faith and good will are established.

The Throne Speech says:

> In the West, many believe that their problems are ignored, their voices are unheard, and their contribution is unrecognized.

True enough; and the government has it in its power to do something about it. But there is very little evidence of that in the Speech from the Throne.

Now let's take a look at what I deem to be the second major thrust, which I condense in the phrase "financial problems." Take interest rates; they are described—and it is a significant description—as being "unacceptably high." Well, unacceptable or not, there isn't so much as a word about the government's plans to bring general interest rates down. Unacceptable or not, if the government feels it cannot bring those interest rates down it should be decently candid to say so, but there is not a word in the Speech about that.

And if interest rates are unacceptable, it is reasonable to expect a practical policy to bring relief. What do we see in that respect? There is some help—and I recognize it—for home mortgage renewal interest costs if foreclosures are likely to be involved. Well, I do not disagree with that, but it is obvious that there will be not much relief for many people. The answer to a question in this respect earlier today leaves us with the impression that perhaps there is more to come. If there is, I say bring it on—the sooner the better.

Farmers and small businessmen no doubt will be soothed to hear that the government is "sensitive" to their plight, but their reply might be, "What price sensitivity?"

It is all the more significant that the budget on which the Progressive Conservative government was defeated, and which was the main issue in the campaign, I suggest, proposed interest rate relief for all homeowners, not just those facing foreclosure—and I admit I still find that an attractive idea. The Progressive Conservative budget proposed interest rate relief for small businessmen through small business development bonds, which would cut their interest costs in half. I still find that is a pretty good idea. The farmers would have received tax relief in being able to get some consideration for the fact that in most cases their wives are workers on the farms, as well as a capital gains tax deferment. I still have no great fault to find with that measure.

If it will not adopt these Conservative measures, which I think are quite reasonable in the circumstances, I would ask the government whether it could not extend the interest rate help at least to farmers and small businessmen, even if it adopts the same standard as it has adopted for homeowners, namely, that they be threatened with bankruptcy or with the closure of their operations. That, it seems to me, is the absolute minimum to be expected from a government that declares that interest rates are unacceptably high. In practice, it is really the mountain labouring to bring forth a mouse, but in the present circumstances, I am not going to look a gift mouse in the mouth either.

It is even more important, I suggest, to note that the Speech from the Throne does little to reassure those who want to see our national finances in better order. There is this passage:

> Canadians recognize the need to live within their national means—

Amen to that. But my question is: Does the government recognize the need to live within its national means? The Throne Speech is not particularly reassuring. There is a tip of the hat in the right direction. "We are going to reduce the federal deficit in a planned and orderly manner"—fine—"but", they add—and it is a pretty big "but"—"but not to the exclusion of other objectives such as reducing unemployment and promoting industrial growth."

There is not much recognition here that budget deficits and the enormous federal government borrowing program they compel, particularly with the cash in Canada Savings Bonds these days, squeeze the job-creating potential in the private sector and help make whatever capital there is available more expensive. There is not much recognition here that larger deficits frustrate tax reductions—and tax reductions, particularly for people, are good for employment and industrial growth.

If the government wants more real growth and more job production, it is the private sector that is going to provide it, particularly the small business private sector. For all of its fine words, the government will never be able to do that job itself.

One cannot tell from reading the gracious Speech that inflation stumps the land. Inflation does not seem to be a problem for the gentlemen who are conducting our affairs today. In fact, I found only two references to inflation in the Throne Speech. If there are more, I would be glad to hear about them, but I found two. One was in a throw-away line dealing with external economic influences, and one was in a reference to the situation facing old age pensioners. But we know that inflation is something that faces all Canadians. I warn the administration that governments are no longer seen as part of the inflation solution; they are seen as part of the inflation problem, and people are losing their confidence that governments can control inflation, though they know that the control of inflation is needed to bring back stability and security to peoples' lives. But don't look to the Throne Speech for anything about that.

If there were a prophet in Israel, he would predict from this Speech that little if any improvement in our national finances is in sight, or any significant anti-inflation measures for that matter. Either the deficit will rise or taxes will be increased, or both, and the revenue lost by giving up that increase of 18 cents in the excise tax on gas will be recouped, and more than recouped, by tax increases in other directions. I hope I am wrong. I hope that the national finances will be put in order but there is nothing in this Speech that makes me confident that will happen.

By all means let us have a budget soon. The government fought the election on the Progressive Conservative budget, and surely they know what they would have done if they had been in charge. It is really not too much to expect that they would be ready with their own proposals now. After all, and I say it with some regret, they were scarcely out of office long enough to have forgotten the numbers. The Minister of Finance can break his self-imposed vow of silence because the best tonic that I can recommend for public confidence, for industrial growth and for rising employment is that of putting the federal government's finances in order, and doing it soon.

Honourable senators, you have listened to me patiently for too long. Like the well-known curate's egg, the Throne Speech is not all bad, but it has such significant shortcomings as I fear will undermine public ease and confidence. For all its fine words about unity, whether it means them or not, the government appears to face some of the regions of Canada as if the real meaning of reform and negotiation is confrontation and pressure. The Speech makes it perfectly clear to me that we are back to the old days of big government, big deficit, high inflation, high taxes and a bureaucratically administered economy. And, as it did before, I am afraid that public discontent will follow.

I put it to you, honourable senators, that a government so wedded to its past performance and so out of touch with important segments of Canadian life and Canadian needs, will not surprise its opponents, and is bound to disappoint its friends. That is the message of the Throne Speech for me.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as we begin this new and what many of us believe may be an historic Parliament—

Senator Flynn: Not too much, I hope.

Senator Perrault: —I am pleased to participate in the Throne Speech debate following our good friend and colleague, the Honourable Duff Roblin, Deputy Leader of the Official Opposition.

There was a time not long ago—a brief time—that when we engaged in the Throne Speech debate, the opposition's chief spokesman followed me. Well, I must admit I like the new arrangement better than the previous one. The former system lasted a brief period of time, but I am mindful of the fact that the Leader of the Opposition has chosen on this occasion to follow me in the debate. And I am sure he will loft his share of verbal hand grenades across the aisle when his time comes to participate.

Senator Smith (Colchester): They won't be smoke bombs like we have been getting from that side.

Senator Perrault: And I am pleased to note that the Honourable Senator Smith (Colchester) is still in good form, though, I fear, somewhat irascible as a result of the election outcome. But, after all, I am sure he, as a true democrat, would be the last to dispute the will of the majority. In the ultimate, surely, he will accept his party's defeat in good grace.

The Leader of the Opposition acknowledged yesterday in his comments in this house that the traditional Liberal role in Parliament seems to be in government, or at least fate has cast our role as such, while the Conservatives occupy the benches of the opposition. Historically he seems to be correct, and after serving the last few months in opposition—a role which, as I say, I enjoyed, contrary to the suggestion put forward yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition—I am glad to see that we have been able to get back into our proper historical position, so to speak. All of us look forward to a productive session of Parliament for the good of the country. There is much to do.

First of all, I would like to say on behalf of all the members of the Liberal Party in the Senate how much we appreciate the good service rendered to this chamber by the Honourable Allister Grosart when he was our distinguished Speaker. All honourable senators felt that he served well and fairly and objectively. This fact must be acknowledged, and acknowledged frankly and happily at this time. He was Speaker of this assembly only for a brief period, but he distinguished himself in the high post which he occupied.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: The new Speaker brings with him a great background in many areas of activity. Not only has he a superb record in labour relations, but also in government. He has served with real distinction in cabinet. I want to take this early formal opportunity to congratulate him upon the new responsibilities which he has assumed in this chamber. We all know that the skills that he possesses will make him more than equal to the task.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, I know that you will all wish to join me in welcoming our new Speaker.

I would also like to congratulate the mover of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, Senator Rousseau, for the eloquent speech she made in this chamber yesterday afternoon. With her colleagues from Quebec, Senator Rousseau represents a vital and integral part of this great country. However, like every one of us, she also represents the wider interests of all Canadians from sea to sea. We wish to thank the senator for her excellent speech.

• (1530)

[English]

Senator Rousseau's speech was a memorable one in which she demonstrated a magnificent comprehension of the aspirations espoused by Canadians, wherever they live in our nation. It is this kind of sensitivity which is needed throughout our nation at this time. She is to be congratulated for a splendid start in this Parliament.

All of us were pleased to hear the remarks of that great indomitable westerner, Senator Harry Hays, a representative of one of the great developing provinces of Canada, a province which, increasingly, is playing a key role in the economic events happening in Canada today. I congratulate him for his fine contribution to the debate.

Honourable senators, as we know, this Parliament meets at a crucial moment in Canadian history. Thus, we all bear a special burden, a special degree of responsibility, as we tackle the challenges before us. Those challenges rest in the field of economic policy, in the field of social development, in the field of energy pricing and security, in the field of foreign policy and world peace, and in terms of Canada's strength and unity as one country.

All of these matters were touched upon in the Speech from the Throne graciously delivered the other day by His Excellency the Governor General. All of these matters will be debated both in general and in specific terms in both houses during the session of Parliament we are just beginning.

We have a full agenda. The fact that 20 bills have been introduced in Parliament today indicates the determination of this government to be an active government. Admittedly, some of these measures have been introduced before, but the disrupted political situation which has existed in Canada provides an explanation.

Indeed, this is the time for us to get down to hard work in Parliament. The nation wills it. Perhaps it is fortunate that whatever the outcome of the election, we have a majority government and can get on with the business of the people.

As was said in the Speech from the Throne, national unity is the one issue, and truly the only real issue, which clouds the future of this country. Surely the most serious challenge facing Canadians is the challenge to strengthen our will and resolve to go on building together, to reverse the forces within this country which would drive us apart rather than bring us together.

The coming Quebec referendum is the current focal point of the national unity debate. As His Excellency the Governor General stated in the Throne Speech, it is the hope of his government that the referendum, to be held in Quebec some time during the coming weeks, will be a time when Quebecers affirm their will and their right to be fully Canadian, a time when all Canadians—whether they live in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan or Manitoba, as far as the west is concerned, or the north country, or central Canada or the east and Atlantic provinces—a time when all Canadians will reaffirm their desire to live together in the country to which we all belong, and which belongs to all of us.

On that point I want to make an appeal to all of the regions of this country, including my own area of western Canada. In recent weeks and months there have been expressions of discontent voiced by some, suggestions of alienation, suggestions from the west, from the Atlantic provinces and from other areas somehow they harbour grievances which are almost beyond resolution so far as the federal government is concerned.

Out in western Canada we have a group of people—a small group of people, thankfully—campaigning for the idea of western separatism. Significantly, they attempt to measure the alleged advantages and disadvantages which are supposed to flow from Confederation in "balance sheet" terms—in terms of some sort of computer printout. They attempt to determine the dollars which are sent in by western Canada to the rest of the country, and then they attempt to measure the number of dollars that are supposed to be flowing back from the rest of Canada. They compare the two and attempt to make an absolute dollar judgment. They say, "Well, you know, we are sending in more than we are taking out and that means we should be separate." This has to be the most cynical method one could possibly devise to measure the value of nationhood and national unity.

Senator Roblin: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: They say that as though a computer printout is the way to determine why people of common interests and essentially a common heritage should stay together, or should leave and go their separate ways.

If that is to be the criterion of nationhood, what makes the provinces of Canada much different from a collection of small states in some part of the world with their own selfish views of what their economic interests should be? Whatever the validity of the grievances that exist in this nation, whether they are in western Canada or in the Atlantic provinces, in Ontario or in Quebec or in any other part of the country, we cannot of course, ignore them, and no one is suggesting that. We cannot allow grievances to fester in any region of our country. Those of us who come here—and we are here in the Senate to reinforce regional interests—must be ever mindful of our responsibility to set forth the legitimate problems which exist in our regions. But whatever those grievances or differences may be, and whatever those problems may be, we must seek a resolution of them in the context of Confederation and this great Canadian union.

Certain provinces have voiced a determination to realize what they see as their own rightful economic destinies. To reach that end they have shown a tendency to erect what are, in effect, barriers at their borders—for example, there are attempts to slow the inflow of people or the outflow of capital.

What the provinces must ask themselves is how willing they are to build their own strength, if it has to be at the expense of other regions, other provinces and other Canadians? And what if the paths to separate provincial economic destinies collide head on?

Of course, provincial and regional interests are important, but the national interest must prevail. The provinces must realize that, collectively, they must be nation builders or there will be no nation. In order to build a strong and united Canada, all of us must be willing to defend the national interest and to consider smaller sacrifices for larger gains. And I say this as somebody born and raised in the resource-rich province of British Columbia.

Surely one of the features of a family that lives together is a sharing of one's joys, triumphs and successes, and a sharing of one's problems, disappointments and woes. Surely this philosophy is the very hallmark of nationhood.

What weakens this country and constitutes a serious threat to national unity is when any province stands cynically at its borders and looks to Ottawa, accusing the central government of denying its future without any attempt to measure the advantages of Confederation. That is not to say that the provinces do not harbour some legitimate grievances.

As a westerner, for example, let me say that once and for all it is time for the railways of Canada to say that there will be the same freight rates from west to east as there are from east to west, and we should establish a postage stamp policy for national rail services in this country the way we have done with the power service provincially, and the postal service nationally. That fight for freight rate equality is a fight which westerners will carry on.

There are other legitimate regional problems in this nation which have not been given sufficient recognition, but that does not mean that any of us should join the wrecking gang in an attempt to dismember this nation. It means that we must sit down and reason together to find solutions to these problems.

Certain of those same provinces to which I have referred invite support by telling their people that they have become a "target of the federal government." Some of them come to the federal government, despite its current budgetary situation, and claim that they are being starved by a greedy central government which does not understand them. Some of them come to seek a greater share of the federal budget while they themselves enjoy buoyant revenues. Some spokesmen deny they individually have any responsibility to bear any greater share of the national sacrifices. If you like, some of the provinces want their "haves", but not too many are willing to have their "have nots" along with it.

The official opposition, again today, spoke in terms of profligate federal spending—that old chestnut which is paraded through every election campaign as a weapon against the party which forms the government. Of the huge federal budget in excess of $50 billion, the official opposition rarely makes reference to the fact that the great bulk of that money flows back to the provinces in the form of tax-sharing agreements, joint agreements, services to individuals, and so on. The budget area where there exists absolute federal discretionary power is very limited indeed. That is the story that is not told. But time and time again the federal government is beaten over the head with the allegation that Ottawa is profligate and wasteful, and people from coast to coast in many provinces are encouraged to believe that there is some kind of national conspiracy against their provincial interests. That is not the case.

One of the most eloquent of our provincial premiers, who has been quoted very favourably in recent months on the subject of national unity, during the final week of his last provincial election campaign circulated a letter to all of the people in his province which, in effect, said, "The issue in this election is not whether you are a Liberal, or NDP, or Conservative, or anything else. The issue, my friends, is whether you are going to allow Ottawa to steal our wealth and take it away from us." That was a false charge. That was mischief for narrow political gain. That letter helped to elect that premier, who has now said that he is concerned about national unity. Perhaps the answer lies in his irresponsible campaign action. He should ask himself, in the first place, why he sent out that letter in the final days of his last provincial campaign. Some provinces want their "haves" but not too many are willing to take their "have nots" along with it—at least publicly.

An important message to get across to all Canadians is that the economic wellbeing of this country cannot long survive a "province first, Canada second" attitude. The future of this country will depend on our success in reawakening our sense of collectivity and sense of national loyalty. This collectivity does not imply necessarily a sameness or a oneness of purpose. Rather it should preserve Canada's diversity and should recognize it as being one of its strongest economic and cultural assets. Our economic diversity should also be a source of strength. The resource endowments which bless parts of this country offer regional potential for growth.

As was said in the Throne Speech, Canada's resource base is the basic building block of a vigorous industrial policy. It also gives Canadians the opportunities to improve regional imbalance.

What should we ask of ourselves in government, those of us who serve in government? For our part, if in the past, as our critics have said, we have at times been insensitive to, and have misunderstood, regional interests and aspirations—and none of us on the federal scene is without blame—then we too should intend to amend our ways. Certainly the new government intends that each and every region of the country will feel justly served. New communication methods will be attempted to better understand regional aspirations. Within each region we want to encourage initiative and promote enterprise.

What should we ask of honourable senators? I believe we have an important challenge and responsibility, particularly in the present electoral circumstances, to be a voice for regional interests in Ottawa and a voice for the national interests in our home province. Current circumstances have, of course, already affected our proceedings in this chamber in that ministers of the Crown are once again among our ranks in this present Parliament. Honourable senators will agree, I believe, that the arrangement worked well during the last Parliament when another party formed the government.

This is an important time in the history and evolution of the Senate itself as a national institution. We too must help look for ways to express, as fairly as possible, the will of every part of Canada, and make every part of Canada feel that it is represented in at least some way.

The Throne Speech made a pledge to western members of Parliament that this government was prepared to co-operate fully in helping them with the task of representation. There has been some criticism of that statement by the government. I regret that very much.

Senator Murray: No, it was not that statement; it was the next one.

Senator Perrault: May I say, however, that one of the methods of communication—certainly so far as the province of British Columbia is concerned—will be consultation with the opposition. I have already invited members of the Progressive Conservative Party to sit down with me, as British Columbia's cabinet representative, to discuss how we can better represent the needs and interests of our province, whether in the House of Commons, the Senate or the cabinet. I must say that the response so far from the official opposition has been very encouraging. I intend to do the same thing with members of the New Democratic Party. That certainly does not rule out, by any means, consultation with Liberals or other interests.

No one questions the fact that members of the opposition have been freely elected in western constituencies; and, in my view, no attempt should be made to alter that fact or make it appear differently. However, we all have work to do for our regions, wherever we serve in Parliament, and it will take the combined resources of all parties to do a good job in that direction.

I want to comment on a statement made this afternoon by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition. I have a great deal of respect for Senator Roblin. I refer to his statement to illustrate how an issue can be employed as gasoline might be employed irresponsibly to run a fire into a conflagration. The honourable senator made a statement this afternoon about an alleged federal government commitment to help build a western grain facility in Prince Rupert. The suggestion was that somehow the present federal government had reneged on that promise. The suggestion was that we had withdrawn a commitment which had been made originally by a Conservative government.

I wish that the honourable senator had bothered to determine the facts before he made his speech, because his conclusions are completely wrong. I must say that members of his party and other opposition parties have used the same misinformation in the province of British Columbia. They have been parading around that province inferring that the alleged Liberal project cancellation is another example of the federal government's insensitivity—further proof that this government does not like the province of British Columbia or the west. The charges are false, of course, and I know the honourable senator will be pleased to stand up and admit that falsehood when he knows the facts.

Let me say here that the federal government is going to keep its commitment to help establish and bring into being a grain terminal at Prince Rupert and has never reneged on that promise, and it will not renege on the promise to play its part. That promise was made originally by a Liberal government prior to May 1979. The commitment is to play the lead and pay most of the $43 million needed to help bring the infrastructure portion of the facility into existence.

Meetings are being held in Ottawa today to attempt to finalize arrangements. Surely it should have been possible for the Conservative Party to have made itself aware of the facts before Senator Roblin spoke in the Senate today. Why irritate the situation in western Canada and cause unnecessary anger in the people in the west. What is the motive? And the New Democratic Party has done precisely the same.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Everybody is wrong but you.

Senator Perrault: Let me put this on the record, and if the honourable senator wishes to dispute the facts, let him stand up and do so. It was a Liberal government that conceived the Prince Rupert plan in the first place, in co-operation with a broad consortium of western grain firms, including three private companies and something like four or five co-operatives, as well as at least two provincial governments. Prior to the election in May of 1979, Liberals had done an extensive amount of work on their own, and with the consortium, to bring this development into being.

Senator Asselin: Give us evidence.

Senator Perrault: In May of 1979 a new government came to power. Certain conversations were held between the new minister and the consortium and others. In fact, it might have been possible even to see on-site work beginning at Prince Rupert during the construction season last year, but the action taken by the Conservative administration at that time failed to bring this about because Mr. Mazankowski, the minister responsible, said that he wanted to review the proposal.

It is regrettable that time was lost in 1979 on this crucial western development. The present government is determined to get it going this year. The Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin—

Senator Murray: Would the Honourable the Leader of the Government permit a question?

Senator Perrault: May I complete my statement, and then honourable senators may question me all they wish?

The Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin, and our Senate colleague, the Honourable Senator Argue, met in Regina on April 3 with the representatives of the consortium, and at that meeting public concerns about the user-pay concept and the rumoured withdrawal of federal funds from the project were laid to rest. Why was it impossible for the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada to determine those facts?

The ministers also met with representatives of the Saskatchewan government to invite that province again to make a contribution towards the construction of this facility—a contribution similar to that being made by the Provinces of Alberta and British Columbia. As yet there has been no final reply from Saskatchewan, but it is to be hoped that the province will want to become involved in this development, which will have a major beneficial impact on Saskatchewan's grain economy.

The result of patient Liberal negotiation with western governments has led to an agreement which at the present time will see over $4 million contributed by the Province of British Columbia, over $4 million contributed by the Province of Alberta, and possibly up to $4 million by the Government of Saskatchewan. Another $13 million will be directed to a wharf. It is yet to be determined whether the consortium will build that wharf, or whether it will be built by the National Harbours Board. In total, however, present plans are that there will be a substantial direct contribution by the Government of Canada. We regard this project as one of undoubted national importance.

So why is it that this issue has been used as an example to illustrate the alleged callous disregard of western interests by the federal government? It is an allegation unworthy of the honourable senator, who should have known the facts.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Don't be a hypocrite.

Senator Perrault: Hopefully the negotiations which are under way today with the National Harbours Board will result in a favourable announcement very shortly.

Another example of this opposition method of playing the alleged grievances of the west almost like a Stradivarius violin, was Senator Roblin's statement concerning tar sands development. He stood up and very self-righteously cited this important matter as another example of Liberal government insensitivity. Where does the tar sands agreement stand? Rapid hikes in world oil prices have made returns to the tar sands operators even more lucrative than they had imagined, exceeding all estimates. The fact is that the federal government has not said yet what the eventual price is to be. This is to be negotiated, and will be negotiated fairly, to make sure there is a fair return for those people who invest their money in tar sands development, and a fair and realistic price for all concerned. That price is to be negotiated between the federal government and the companies. The federal government does believe that our domestic price should be more closely reflective of the domestic costs of production.

The senator went on to say that we have paid too high a price for Mexican oil. In fact, until our own sources of supply can be accelerated and brought on stream, our intention is to protect the vulnerable import-dependent regions of Canada. Yes, and we are concerned about the Atlantic provinces of Canada, Honourable Senator Smith—

Senator Smith (Colchester): You had better be.

Senator Perrault: —and that is why we have moved in this direction.

Mexican oil is a secure supply. We must pay a price for security, and that security is designed to help the oil-insecure regions of this nation. Yet again our energy actions are attacked and cited as another example of Liberal government indifference to the west. I think it was unworthy of the honourable senator to cite these two examples.

Senator Smith (Colchester): It is easy to talk. What we want is some action.

Senator Flynn: You are very confused.

Senator Perrault: The prime motivation of most of us, when we enter public life, is a strong desire to accomplish something and to make a contribution to the welfare of our province, our region and our country. I am confident that this attitude is common to us all in the Senate, and to the members in the other place. I know that in this age of cynicism it is fashionable in some circles not to believe that parliamentarians are trying to do a good job, the very best job that they can, but it is true, and I hope the work of this Parliament will help to demonstrate our bona fides to those Canadians who may be sceptical about us still.

Surely all of us share a fundamental belief about our country and its people. Surely we share a conviction that we can trust each other, and that while our system of parliamentary democracy functions basically upon the will of the majority, that majority can always be trusted to respect and protect the rights of minorities. We all talk about the cultural and regional mosaic which makes up this country, and almost by definition Canada is a land of minorities. In a national sense those who speak the French language form our largest and most visible minority. In Quebec the anglophones are the minority. Canada's native peoples, once the sole inhabitants of this continent, are now one of this nation's most active minority groups. Regionally, Atlantic Canadians and western Canadians make up minority segments of the total national population. These facts are part of the nature of this country.

Things change from time to time; people move, minorities shift and grow; and our demography is a dynamic thing. As we look at our own personal situations we may find ourselves in the majority for certain purposes and from one point of view, and in a minority for other purposes and from another perspective. So respect for minority interests and the protection of minority rights is important to each and every one of us.

Speaking as a westerner and as a Liberal, honourable senators, you will understand that I have considerable familiarity with minority positions, including, I must say, political minority positions. I believe it to be unfortunate that too many of us in this country look at our vast collection of minorities, and at the cultural, linguistic, ethnic, regional and social diversity of Canada, and throw up their hands in dismay, as if this diversity were something negative, an impediment that we cannot overcome. Far from being an impediment, I believe it is one of our most endearing and, I hope, one of our most enduring assets. It should be regarded as one of our greatest national treasures, a national resource unique to Canada.

Looking at the situation with cold logic, this country of ours might seem to be a rather unlikely accomplishment. There are all sorts of factors naturally at work that tend to pull us apart. We have the difficult part of the North American continent to contend with. We have a vast, rugged geography and a very difficult climate. The natural physical lines on a topographical map of this continent seem to run north and south, while we are striving to build a country east and west. We have a small and complicated population beginning with the native peoples, and then the founding settlements of French and English, all of which have since been enriched by the addition of virtually every race, creed, colour and religion to be found anywhere on the face of the earth. All of this is spread out rather sparsely along some 5,000 miles of very vigorous American border.

You can hardly imagine a more difficult or illogical set of circumstances out of which to try to forge a country but, in fact, we have forged one, and I think the very best in the world. It proves that nation-building is more than a matter of mere logic; it is an accomplishment of the heart and spirit and it is a never-ending process.

The issue we face today with the separatist threat in the province of Quebec, and with the strong feelings of alienation in certain other regions, is whether we have in the 1980s an adequate measure of the kind of will and ingenuity demonstrated by our forefathers more than 100 years ago when they determined that they would begin the formal nation-building process of this country. How did they achieve it? Well, with a lot of hard work and goodwill and, no doubt, large measures of good fortune as well; but the most important factor was their willingness to listen to each other and to understand; their basic sense of fairness, justice and tolerance; and their preparedness to respond to each other and to take the kind of action needed in any given set of circumstances for a particular group or region within this country, not necessarily because that action was in the narrow self-interest of some comfortable majority, but because that action was right for the kind of Canada they wanted to build.

Our challenge today is whether we still have the will to make Canada work. I know that you worry about this, and I worry about it—all of us worry. Are we willing to listen and understand? Do we want to be fair and just and tolerant? Are we prepared to respond positively to each other and take steps required to build an even greater country for the future? Most of us believe Canadians want to answer these questions with a resounding yes. If the answer were otherwise, I wonder how we in this generation would be able to live with ourselves and with the judgment of history.

Here we had handed to us from a great heritage a wonderful country—young, vital, rich and diverse; challenging, yes, but so richly blessed among all the nations on the face of the earth. Surely we will not have to admit to the rest of the world, to our children and to history, that we just could not make it work with all of our resources, human and otherwise, with all of our advantages and good fortune; that with all that we have got going for us, we, of all nations, could not make it work.

Perhaps we have just had it too soft. Nation-building is not easy. Perhaps we have lost some of our perspective in terms of time. This land is still very young. A hundred years is not a long time in which to build a country and, in reality, the building in a big, diverse, rambling, changing land like this can never come to an end. It is always a dynamic process, and the achievement at any given point will always be a fragile thing to be cherished and nurtured.

In this Parliament, honourable senators, as members of this chamber and as people who are here to represent the regional mosaic of this vast complicated country, I hope that our constant objective will be to ensure that the actions of the central institutions of our parliamentary democracy are always directed towards the ever-present nation-building of Canada, towards the renewal of our national spirit and our national will to share a common destiny; towards the kind of country where all Canadians, east, west, centre and north can feel at home and truly fulfilled.

Seventy-five years ago, Sir Wilfrid Laurier uttered his famous phrase about the twentieth century belonging to Canada. In many respects, history has already proven him to be correct. There may be some clouds on our horizon now in terms of Canadian unity, but in the two decades remaining, let us do our part to remove them so that Laurier's vision of twentieth century Canada can be completed—strong, vibrant, tolerant, fair and united irrevocably.

The Speech from the Throne is only the framework to be fleshed out as Honourable Senator Roblin was well aware when he spoke—and I know that he has written many Speeches from the Throne himself—but let us build that framework into a parliamentary record this session which will be a real contribution to nation-building.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Would the Leader of the Government now permit a question concerning the government's commitment to the Prince Rupert terminal?

Senator Perrault: Yes.

Senator Murray: Would the minister confirm, as Senator Roblin has requested, that the $43 million commitment made by the previous government is now back in place? In other words, is the government withdrawing the announcement by the Minister of Transport on March 27 to the effect that the new government is not committed to the $43 million scheme of the previous government; that there will be no grant from the present government for that purpose; and that the present government would prefer a scheme to allow the government to recover development costs—in other words, a return to the Otto Lang user-pay policy? Is that announcement made by the Minister of Transport a couple of weeks ago now, to borrow a word from the Nixon White House, inoperative?

Senator Perrault: The situation with respect to Prince Rupert is this: The federal government has assumed the leadership and the prime responsibility of bringing together the funds necessary to establish the infrastructure. It is estimated that those funds will total something like $43 million. Part of the funds will be contributed by the western provinces; part of them may be contributed on a user-pay basis for a certain section of the wharf required for the movement of certain materials and certain grains; but the federal government in the ultimate, through, as things stand now, the National Harbours Board, will be making a substantial grant toward that project.

Negotiations are, as I said, proceeding today, but the present plan involves a significant portion of that coming in the form of a grant. May I suggest to the honourable senator that the essence of this proposal varies not one whit from the agreement that was originated by a previous Liberal government and supported by the former Conservative government. At no time did the Conservative government ever propose an outright $43 million grant for the purpose of establishing this critical grain facility in northern British Columbia.

I ask the question again: Why was it not possible for Conservative critics to contact the Ministry of Transport or the National Harbours Board and get the facts before irresponsible charges were spread all over western Canada, which served to upset a great many people in the west?

Senator Flynn: Why did the minister not deny the statement?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Before the motion is put, my honourable friend invited me to acknowledge my fault, and I hope I may have the privilege of the Senate to respond to his invitation. I regret to tell him that I am unable to do so, not because I am without fault, since I am sure I make mistakes—and it may very well be that in the course of a long speech I do make mistakes—but in this particular instance we have asked him whether he will confirm that the $42½ million is available, and he has given us an answer that does not confirm any such thing. He has given a long and involved answer in which he says that the federal government will do something—and that is good; the more they do, the merrier. However, I do not think that under the circumstances, and in view of the statement made by the Minister of Transport which has just been quoted, we on this side need have any feelings of being inaccurate in giving that information which, to the best of our knowledge and ability, was correct.

When my honourable friend is able to rise in this chamber and tell me that the $42½ million has been reinstated, then perhaps I would agree with him that the matter can be put to rest.

As for it being presented to the chamber in an effort to stir up ill will, far be it from me to do that. I think the other parts of my speech indicated that this was merely an illustration of the problems that arise. Certainly, in this respect one would expect that the federal government would announce a change in policy if there were one before now so that we all could know about it. If it has been announced, it has not been made known to me, but naturally that is another matter which I regret. I do not see that the question has been directly answered with respect to that matter.

With respect to oil prices, if my honourable friend expects me to comment on that—though I appreciate the impropriety of reviving the debate and taking a second crack at it—I merely wish to say that in no way can my remarks be interpreted as being an effort to stir up jealousy in connection with the matter, but as a reflection on the whole self-sufficiency oil policy, which is not an Alberta problem but a Canadian problem.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, may I point out the source of the government's concern about the manner in which the honourable senator has dealt with the issue of Prince Rupert today. The question was: Will the $43 million be reinstated? The $43 million was never withdrawn. These are headlines which were spread abroad by Conservative members of Parliament. The headline "Uproar breaks on Pepin for abandoning Rupert" is found in the Saturday, March 29, 1980 issue of the Victoria Times. The article states:

> A decision by Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin to back out of a federal promise to provide funds for a badly-needed grain terminal at Prince Rupert is being roundly condemned.

That is a mischievous statement which is being circulated by members of the opposition in western Canada, members who primarily purport to be representing the best interest of western Canada in the Parliament of Canada. These are being circulated by both Conservative and New Democratic members of Parliament.

Senator Murray: It was circulated by the Canadian Press. If the minister wishes to say that his colleague has been misquoted, that is all he need say.

Senator Perrault: I remind the honourable senator that I am on my feet, and urge him to observe a certain degree of parliamentary decorum.

If the honourable senator is concerned about the facts of this matter, let me remind him that the National Harbours Board is meeting this week with the consortium to finalize, hopefully, the formal agreement. We hope to see the document signed within one month, and on-site construction work could begin this summer. The total funds expected are $42.5 million. From British Columbia, $4.6 million; from Alberta, $4.1 million; and possibly some money coming from the Saskatchewan government. There are some negotiations to be completed with respect to the cost of the new dock, and this matter is, I understand, under consideration by the consortium and the National Harbours Board. I shall do my very best to make sure that the honourable senator is invited to the opening of this great project for western Canada.

Senator Roblin: I shall be pleased to go.

Senator Smith (Colchester): We hope he does not have to wait too long.

Senator Perrault: You are invited too.

On motion of Senator Macquarrie, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, April 17, 1980

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government) tabled:

Report of the Canadian Chicken Marketing Agency, together with financial statements and the auditors' report thereon, for the year ended December 31, 1979, pursuant to section 31 of the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, Chapter 65, Statutes of Canada, 1970-71-72.

Report of the Export Development Corporation, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1979, pursuant to sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of operations under the Export and Import Permits Act for the year ended December 31, 1978, pursuant to section 26 of the said Act, Chapter E-17, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Auditor General to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1979, pursuant to section 7(3) of the Auditor General Act, Chapter 34, Statutes of Canada, 1976-77, together with the Conspectus of the said Report.

Report of Petro-Canada, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditors, for the year ended December 31, 1979, pursuant to sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of amendment to By-law No. 1 of the Export Development Corporation, pursuant to section 16(3) of the Export Development Act, Chapter E-18, R.S.C., 1970.

Senator Flynn: Did I hear something about chickens?

Senator Perrault: Yes. Don't raise any feathers about it, either.

Senator Flynn: Don't get yours ruffled.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development) tabled:

Report of the Northern Pipeline Agency, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1979, pursuant to section 13 of the Northern Pipeline Act, Chapter 20, Statutes of Canada, 1977-78.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board) tabled:

Report on the Administration of the Western Grain Stabilization Act, together with the Report on the state of the Stabilization Account, for the year ended December 31, 1978, pursuant to section 45 of the said Act, Chapter 87, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76.

Senator Flynn: Without any comment?

Senator Argue: Without comment.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, April 22, 1980 at 8 o'clock in the evening.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

• (1400)

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Speaking to the motion, I wonder whether we are going to deal with the item on the Orders of the Day relating to the Throne Speech when we resume next Tuesday or whether we are going to give Senator Croll the opportunity to speak on his report. If that is not the case, then I wonder whether we shall deal with some of the bills that have been introduced.

Do I understand that it is not necessarily the wish of the government to have the Throne Speech debate concluded on the eighth consecutive sitting day?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that is our hope, and we hope yours as well. We should like to defer debate on the Throne Speech rather than debating it for eight consecutive days.

Senator Flynn: So can we take it for granted that next Tuesday we will deal with other items?

Senator Frith: That is right, and we hope to proceed with the item referred to by the Leader of the Opposition, the consideration of Senator Croll's report.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PURCHASE OF F-18A AIRCRAFT

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: Honourable senators, I put my question to the Minister of State for Economic Development. A representative of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce said that the contract for the F-18A aircraft awarded to the McDonnell-Douglas Corporation would create 4,000 direct jobs in Canada, while a representative of McDonnell-Douglas mentioned a number of 22,000 direct jobs.

• (1405)

Can the minister explain the reasons for the discrepancy between the two estimates?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I should like to look at the details of the question and check them with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, so that in a day or two I can give you a precise answer.

Senator Charbonneau: I have a supplementary. The spokesman for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has also estimated that the multiplier effect would create 9,600 to 10,800 indirect jobs, yet on the other hand a spokesman from the corporation mentioned 5,200 indirect jobs. Could the minister explain this discrepancy?

Senator Olson: I will take note of the alleged discrepancy and see if it is really so or whether it is a misinterpretation by one or the other. I will find out whether we are talking about apples and apples or apples and oranges.

[Translation]

Senator Charbonneau: Before awarding the contract, I suppose, honourable senators, that the two parties came to a very specific agreement both in terms of direct jobs and economic spin-offs. In view of the figures I have just quoted and if they are correct, can the minister also explain such a discrepancy between the interpretation of the two parties?

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will take the question as notice and attempt to get a reconciliation of this alleged discrepancy. One thing must be taken into account, and that is that all the subcontracts are not firm contracts but are required to be competitive. I suppose that leaves some room for discretion.

• (1410)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development in respect of the F-18A project. I note that the president of the aerospace industry made a statement the other day to the effect that the members of that industry would require governmental support in order to undertake some of the contracts that may arise from the industrial spin-off of the F-18A purchase.

Is the minister aware of that statement, and, if so, does he confirm its accuracy?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am not aware of that statement; therefore, I cannot comment one way or the other on its accuracy. It is, of course, a well-known and well-publicized fact that Canada has had this whole deal, if you want to call it that, under consideration for a long time, and there have been some support programs for various sectors of the aerospace industry so that they will be in a position to compete for some of the contracts that will be let as a result of that purchase.

Senator Roblin: I appreciate my honourable friend's statement, and I concur with it. I am by no means suggesting that it may not be appropriate from time to time to provide support of this nature. But it does raise the question as to whether there are extra costs in connection with the F-18A purchase which have not yet been considered or tabulated. I appreciate my honourable friend's assurance that he will look into this particular matter.

If in the course of his investigation he finds that it is the case—and I suspect he will—that further assistance is to be given to enable firms to take part in this contract, I would ask him to provide us with the criteria on which such assistance would be granted. I am particularly thinking of the ways and means by which firms in this industry in various parts of the country will be assisted or enabled to take some share in these contracts.

Senator Olson: Yes, I shall try to do that; but, of course, it can be a fairly short or a fairly long set of economic benefits that fall out from this particular contract. I suppose it could be argued that the economic benefits, for example, to enhance very significantly the aerospace capability in many fields in Canada would be a longer term benefit and one which is not specifically identified in the contract. But I think the major thrust of this and previous governments is to upgrade the high technology and the capability following that technology so as to be more involved in the space age of the future.

Hon. G. I. Smith: A supplementary, honourable senators. I should like to ask the Minister of State for Economic Development whether he is aware of the capacity of industry in the Atlantic provinces to take advantage of any economic fallout or work, whether of a high technology nature or otherwise, that may result from this contract.

Senator Olson: I think I can answer positively to that inasmuch as the detail that was evolved leading to the signing of the contract in terms of the capability of the entire country to be involved was very carefully looked at.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Perhaps I could ask a further supplementary. I appreciate the fact that the honourable minister assures us that all sectors in the country were carefully looked at, but I would be more happy if he were able to assure us that, in particular, he was aware of the potential in the Atlantic provinces, which was my question.

Senator Olson: Of course, I was not directly involved in either the assessment or the negotiations in connection with this contract, but I feel I can say with some confidence that the people who looked at the total economic benefits that would arise from this contract looked at the capabilities, and the prospects for capabilities, all over the country.

Senator Smith (Colchester): A further supplementary, if I may, and I realize that I must be getting close to the limit. If the honourable minister does not know now, would he give an undertaking to find out what is expected to be the beneficial industrial fallout in the Atlantic provinces from this contract?

Senator Olson: Yes, honourable senators. It is not really a case of my not knowing now with the exception of the competitive requirements for the subcontracts, because I think the information package that was put out by the Department of National Defence on the day the announcement was made does give a strong indication as to where it will probably be. But we cannot be much more specific than that because all the subcontracts have not been signed.

FINANCE

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS—INTEREST RATE AND REDEMPTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. Will the minister indicate what steps the government has taken or intends to take to make Canada Savings Bonds competitive with the investment interest rates in the private sector?

There is a second part to the question which I would put as a supplementary. What is the current rate of investor redemption? How many bonds and of what value have been redeemed or cashed in to date this year, and how does that compare with redemptions for, say, the previous two years?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, to reply to this question would obviously require some detailed information which I do not have with me, but I shall take the question as notice and I shall try to get an answer from the Department of Finance.

ENERGY

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, my question is for the honourable senator who is Minister of State for Economic Development. It has to do with the following excerpt from the Speech from the Throne:

> My Government's energy policy is critical to the success of all its economic policies. Energy policy is as important for Canada in the 1980s as railway policy was in the 1880s. Like railway policy in that earlier era, energy development has the potential to create growth and prosperity across Canada.

Well, we all know that the British North America Act of 1867, undoubtedly for the reasons set out in the Speech of the Throne of 1980, gives Parliament exclusive jurisdiction over railways.

My question is as follows: Does the parallel drawn in the Speech from the Throne between railways and energy and the ensuing general principle in the Speech from the Throne mean that in the process of constitutional reform to which the government is once again committed, it will propose that energy, in 1980 or 1981, like railways over 100 years ago, become an area of exclusive federal jurisdiction?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I am sure that the honourable senator will agree that the present world state of energy supplies, and, indeed, the cost related to those supplies is as important a factor to our economy and that of several other countries as any other factor; indeed, it may be more important.

Perhaps the situation in Canada is that we have enough known energy supplies to supply not only our own needs, as soon as we can bring them on stream, but perhaps something in excess of that. So, as is pointed out in the Speech from the Throne, that means we do regard this as a very high priority and perhaps one of the great opportunities for Canada in the immediate- and long-term future.

But the inference that the federal government intends to take over exclusive and complete control of energy supplies is just not in the Throne Speech, as I see it. It may be that the federal government will have as much to say in the future about the distribution system, like pipelines and other things that distribute energy, but they have always maintained that any pipeline, or even a power line, that is interprovincial requires, of course, jurisdiction by the National Energy Board.

I suppose it was something to the same effect with regard to the railways. We had complete control, or it was in the BNA Act, as to the development and operation of railways, but we did not have control of what those railways hauled.

Senator Tremblay: Honourable senators, a supplementary. Am I to understand then that this comparison between what railways meant at the beginning of Confederation and what energy means today is, for all practical purposes, at least in the context of a constitutional reform to which the government is committed, a sort of purely rhetorical comparison?

The other day, when the Leader of the Government answered a question put by Senator Asselin, he sort of took refuge behind the fact that the question was hypothetical. Am I to understand that the Minister of State for Economic Development is taking refuge today behind the rhetoric of the Speech from the Throne? Am I to understand that other parts are also rhetorical in that Speech?

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I don't think I am hiding behind anything. Perhaps my unrepentant pragmatism is too simple for honourable members to understand. What is in the Speech from the Throne is quite clear. We regard energy and the processing, development and distribution of energy in Canada as being important now as railways were 113 years ago for the development of this country. What we needed then was a network of railways for the capability of transporting our goods from one region to another so that those economic activities could improve.

Now energy occupies that high importance for what we perceive to be the requirements for the immediate future and even the long-term future. Surely that does not involve anything constitutional. It is getting pretty complicated, at least to my mind, to say that the Speech from the Throne also says that we are going to rearrange all the constitutional jurisdictions with respect to ownership and control of energy resources and all of that. We just think it is important for the whole country.

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a supplementary question. I am pleased, indeed, to hear that the Government of Canada now at last has decided to treat the rights-of-way of power lines in the same term of reference, or the same framework, as railways and pipelines. When can we expect that information to be conveyed to the Government of Newfoundland so they can get on with the power grid across Quebec?

Senator Olson: That question has been outstanding for a long, long time, and I hope it is resolved soon.

Senator Doody: Do I take from that that the honourable senator has answered in the affirmative and that it is now the policy of the Government of Canada, or have I misinterpreted the reply?

Senator Olson: What I have said, and I would not want the honourable senator to put any different interpretation on it, is that an application to the National Energy Board for power and gas lines that cross provincial borders does, in fact, come under the National Energy Board.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): And does that mean, in reply to Mr. Peckford's request, that the government has no intention of invoking any legislative authority or power to try to solve the problem between Quebec and Newfoundland?

Senator Olson: I am not sure if there is an application being considered now, but I am sure that several governments, prior to the present administration, have tried to resolve that problem.

Senator Flynn: Several?

Senator Olson: Yes.

Senator Flynn: I would like you to tell us whose governments they were.

[Senator Olson.]

AIRLINES

APPLICATION OF EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS TO EXTEND SERVICE

Hon. Cyril B. Sherwood: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government if he can tell us where the application of Eastern Provincial Airways to the Canadian Transport Commission, to extend their services from Halifax to Toronto, now stands.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I understand that there may be an appeal lodged by Eastern Provincial Airways with respect to this matter and that some appeal may be made to the federal cabinet.

I will take the question as notice and will provide any information that may be available. I do not know the status of correspondence from Eastern Provincial Airways to Ottawa.

Senator Sherwood: Honourable senators, I should like to say to the Leader of the Government that Eastern Provincial Airways presently serves many short hauls in the Atlantic region. Some of those hauls, of course, are not too viable, and to extend the company's service from Halifax into Toronto would make a vast difference to the company, as well as to the service rendered the various Atlantic communities.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Sherwood: I should like to ask the Leader of the Government if he would impress upon his colleague, the Minister of Transport, the importance of this application.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the honourable senator's question will be brought to the attention of the Minister of Transport and my other cabinet colleagues.

May I say that all of us in government, I am sure, are aware of the fine reputation of Eastern Provincial Airways and of CP Air. I can only give the pledge that the information I promised will be obtained as soon as possible and that the honourable senator's question will be brought to the attention of my cabinet colleagues.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

STATEMENT OF THE HONOURABLE ANDRÉ OUELLET

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. In the House of Commons yesterday, pursuing, I believe, a speech he had started the day before, the Hon. André Ouellet launched into a diatribe against the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, claiming it was infested with separatists. If my memory serves me right, those same charges or allegations were made by Mr. Ouellet a few years ago. An inquiry set up by the former Liberal government found that those accusations were groundless.

My question is therefore: Was Mr. Ouellet speaking on behalf of the government when he made those accusations? Secondly, does Mr. Ouellet or the government have proof that those allegations are well founded?

[English]

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am sure that the Leader of the Opposition has on his desk the full text of Mr. Ouellet's alleged remarks, and I would be pleased if he would share it with me.

Senator Flynn: Have you not read it?

Senator Perrault: I am sure the Leader of the Opposition is not basing this series of questions on any fragmentary reports that he may have read in a newspaper or heard on radio or television. I would appreciate it if I were provided with a copy of the minister's text. I have not read the alleged remarks. I do not have a copy of the text, which the Leader of the Opposition apparently does have.

Senator Flynn: I really cannot understand the reaction of the Leader of the Government. The speech was made in the House of Commons. It is printed in Hansard, so the Leader of the Government has as ready access to it as I have. I can send him my copy, of course.

The second thing is that I heard Mr. Ouellet's statement on television, and what I have quoted is exactly what he said. He even went so far as to say:

> There is no doubt that if these people had tried to do this in any other country around the world, they would have been socked, they would have been clubbed, they would have been jailed.

And he said they would have been shot. I heard that on TV. That is a rather serious charge.

This information is in possession of the leader. I do not mind his saying, "Well, I will look into it and report," but to say that I am basing my remarks on a text that he has not seen, and to ask me to make it available to him appears to me to be very childish.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that is a rather unfair accusation. I have not had the time to read the speech. It had not been drawn to my attention. I made no accusation against the Leader of the Opposition. I would, however, have appreciated prior notice of the question, which would have given me an opportunity to study the text and perhaps obtain an answer from Mr. Ouellet. If the honourable senator would now tell me the page in Commons Hansard where those remarks appear, and the paragraph of concern, I would be very grateful for this kind of direction. Certainly if this is done a reply will be provided.

Senator Flynn: I would have been satisfied if the Leader of the Government had said, "I will take this question as notice, and I will ask my staff to check Commons Hansard." But if he wants me to do that—if he has not enough personnel—I will do it for him.

Senator Perrault: At the outset, when the leader asked this question, he did not say that it had been made in the House of Commons.

Senator Flynn: Oh, yes, I did.

Senator Perrault: Well, perhaps that may be the case, but I am sure we do not have to have a cause célèbre as a result of this exchange.

Senator Flynn: That is what I am suggesting, and that you should not react the way you do. Just take it as notice, and don't get excited every time I put a question to you.

Senator Perrault: Who is getting excited?

Senator Flynn: You are much too excitable.

[Translation]

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING FOR ADULTS

Senator Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, my question this time is for the government leader. It concerns once again an excerpt from the Throne Speech. Let me quote that excerpt:

> There will be an increased effort to develop critical trade skills so as to better prepare today's labour force for tomorrow's jobs.

Since that part of the Throne Speech refers to today's labour force rather than tomorrow's, which would have meant the young people being trained in our secondary schools or colleges and might have raised very specific problems, I feel I can safely state that the program referred to is called Occupational Training for Adults. If I am mistaken, the government leader will correct me.

This is both a significant and a broad program, and one that is well known to our Speaker, since he himself was responsible for its inception as the then Minister of Manpower and Immigration, in 1966, if my memory is correct.

Further, this is a federal-provincial program whose implementation required much tact and negotiation throughout the years.

My question is in two parts: first, does the phrase "critical trade skills" imply a value judgment on the non-critical nature of the skills on which OTA has been mainly centered up to now, and if so, on which studies or criteria is that value judgment based?

Secondly, in the choice of the critical trade skills which OTA would now emphasize, will the provinces be involved, and will their involvement be instrumental or secondary?

[English]

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this is a good question, and it deserves a full and complete answer. The question will be taken as notice.

HOUSING

INCREASE IN FUNDING UNDER THE RESIDENTIAL REHABILITATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question on housing for the Leader of the Government. It concerns those citizens of Canada who can neither afford to purchase a new home nor even think of paying current interest rates. I am wondering if the government is considering increasing the amount of funding to the RRAP government-sponsored program to enable people on fixed and low incomes to repair their present homes and bring them up to a certain standard, with the consequent conservation of energy.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a number of ideas and concepts are under study at the present time with respect to the provision of housing for Canadians. However, more detailed information must await the legislative program which will find its way to Parliament shortly. However, an inquiry will go forward with respect to the specific matter raised by the honourable senator.

Senator Marshall: A supplementary. I do not think it would require legislation. The program is now in effect. It is known as the RRAP program. It is simply a matter of putting more funds into it. This is vital and urgent.

STATEMENT BY THE HON. ANDRÉ OUELLET

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have had the help of the whip on this side in finding the page in Hansard containing Mr. Ouellet's speech from which I quoted earlier. It is on page 56 of the House of Commons Debates of April 15, 1980, in the left-hand column. It is in the only full paragraph there.

If the Leader does not want to take note of it right away, would he indicate to whom I should give the information?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): I want to thank the Leader of the Opposition for his unfailing courtesy and consideration.

INTEREST-FREE LOANS—PHILOSOPHY OF SOCIAL CREDIT PARTY

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. I put a question yesterday asking what the government had in mind with regard to controlling high interest rates and minimizing their effects. When I listened to him just a few moments ago, saying that he was an unrepentant pragmatist, it brought to mind the fact that he was at one time a member of the Social Credit Party. I can understand that pragmatism would have brought him into the Liberal Party, but I was wondering if the theory of social credit could not perhaps furnish a suggestion for the government's high interest rates. Has the minister thought of suggesting loans without interest to the government?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I think the Leader of the Opposition can rest assured that there have been from time to time certain modifications in the philosophy that he has referred to, and I think that fits well with my unrepentant pragmatism.

[Senator Marshall.]

The Minister of Finance has indicated that he will be working on a program in this respect, but as I said, I think, yesterday, or the day before, I hope senators opposite will not expect me to make announcements on behalf of other ministers. It will be an exercise in futility if they try to do that. The other ministers will run their departments, and I will try to do the best I can in mine.

• (1440)

Senator Flynn: I wanted to be sure the Minister of Finance would not forget the assistance that a former Social Crediter would be able to provide in this area.

Senator Olson: I take it the Leader of the Opposition is now endorsing some of those philosophies, and I welcome that.

Senator Flynn: You did not refer to Social Credit philosophy.

Hon. Robert Muir: I rise on a point of order. In view of the statement just made by the Minister of State for Economic Development—I think this is the second or third time he has said that he is not going to answer for this minister or that minister, and he is not going to make statements—I would ask him: To whom do we direct questions which do not pertain to economic development or any other subject?

If I remember correctly, during the last short session here, questions of every variety were posed by the present Minister of State for Economic Development to any one of the ministers in the Conservative government who sat on that side. I should like to know if the minister is going to sit there like Charlie McCarthy and not answer any questions other than those relating to his own particular little bailiwick.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): I just want to say on behalf of the government that every effort will be made to co-operate with members of the opposition who wish to direct questions to this side. I gave a pledge yesterday that I would meet with the Leader of the Opposition and discuss with him the direction that questions might well take in the chamber, and that will be done.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, may I speak to the point of order? I think the honourable senator wants to be fair. I did not say that I was going to answer in this chamber for ministers who are obviously in the other place. I will take notice of those questions, but let us be fair; I am not going to make announcements for and on behalf of other ministers.

Senator Muir: Further on the point of order, honourable senators, and just for clarification, I think the present minister should not be so adamant, and should not state his decision with such great authority. After all, he has only been in his present position for a short time, and he should not get carried away by a sense of his own importance.

As a little old coal miner from Cape Breton, all I want to know is to whom we direct these questions. Is the Minister of State for Economic Development going to respond constantly that it has nothing to do with him? Now he has clarified the situation by saying that we can ask him any question at all, and, if he has not got the answer with him, he will get it for us.

Senator Olson: That was a great speech, but there was nothing new in it.

Senator Muir: I should like to have your answer.

THE CABINET

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY IN THE SENATE OF THE MINISTER OF STATE FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Lowell Murray: I should like to ask the Minister of State for Economic Development whether his mandate is essentially the same as that described in this place by his predecessor some months ago; that is to say, the co-ordination of the policies of the various government departments that are concerned with economic matters.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Yes, it is essentially the same. I think different interpretations were put on that by different senators. I fully admit that I was trying to outline the parameters of that, and I succeeded to some degree.

Of course, there have been some changes even in the evolution of the so-called "expenditure management control" which, I think, in abbreviation, is referred to as the "envelope system". That has changed somewhat. I would acknowledge here that we regard that as an important improvement, and we are going to continue using it. That is in addition, of course, to the economic development functions that were outlined at the time my predecessor, Mr. Andras, assumed that ministry, which I think was in 1977. I am not saying we are going to continue it in exactly the same way, but we think it is a pretty good idea, and we are either going to keep it the way it is or with some modifications. We are going to continue the principle of that form of expenditure management, and, I might say, I am the chairman of that committee.

Senator Murray: That being the case, and in terms of the business of the Senate, the minister has no objection if questions relating to all matters of fiscal and economic policy are directed to him?

Senator Olson: No, I do not, with the reservation that I mentioned before, that the other ministers will be making announcements for and on behalf of their departments, and as soon as I am sure they have made those statements I will be glad to explain them here.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

Hon. G. I. Smith: I should like to direct my question to the Minister of State for Economic Development. Although it relates to the previous question and arises out of his answer, I do not suggest we treat it as a supplementary.

The minister said that he felt the information I was seeking had been evaluated very carefully, and had been made public with the document which was issued by or on behalf of the government at the time of the announcement of the purchase of the new fighter aircraft. I wonder if that is the document which I received along with a number of other documents purporting to explain that contract; a document which was once confidential, and which is now marked in handwriting "Declassified by order of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, 10 April 1980". I just want to ask the Minister of State for Economic Development if that is the document he told me contained the careful evaluation, including the information I received.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I do not think I can answer precisely whether it was that document or whether it was the complete communications package explaining industrial benefits that may develop all over the country, but more in some areas than others mainly because they are where the aerospace industry has been up until now. However, it is my opinion that there was a rather complete communications package—that is, as complete as it could be—along with the announcement. Whether what the honourable senator has in front of him is the complete package or only part of it, I am not quite sure, but I would be happy to check and make sure that the honourable senator has the complete information which has already been made public. I shall send any information which is missing to the honourable senator's office.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I thank the honourable minister, but just by way of further explanation of what I have here, it is a package labelled as being a full package, and I have examined it with care.

The reason for my inquiry about the Atlantic provinces arose out of these documents because, as far as I can see, the benefits are analyzed on the basis of what the benefit will be to two particular provinces of Canada, and all the rest of the provinces are lumped together under the terminology "rest of Canada." Using that sort of breakdown or index, there is no way one can tell how much is expected to flow to Atlantic Canada.

Senator Olson: I agree with that general assessment, but I expect that you cannot identify from that document where every one of the industrial benefits will flow, even in respect to Ontario and Quebec, because many of those sub-contracts are not let.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask a supplementary question relating to the argument advanced by Senator Smith (Colchester). In the province of Manitoba we have a mature and sizeable aerospace industry, and I must say that like Senator Smith I was somewhat upset to find no reference to that in what I have read so far in respect to the distribution of this work.

I do not know whether my honourable friend can answer the question now, but I am very anxious to have him tell me what the estimates are respecting work of this kind in Manitoba. I think we have about 10 per cent of the industry in that province, and I hope that a proportionate amount of work is earmarked for Manitoba at the present stage of negotiations which are, admittedly, not completely solid, but are an indication of expectations.

Senator Olson: I will take that question as notice along with the other, and try to gather more information for you. I have to add some words of caution by saying that the final details of the benefits cannot be identified right now.

Senator Roblin: I find that answer hard to accept. It turned out to be quite practical to say how much would go to Ontario and how much would go to Quebec, even though a big argument seems to be brewing on how the figures were arrived at. If it is possible to do it for those provinces, why is it not possible to do it for Manitoba?

Senator Olson: I think it is just as possible to do it for Manitoba as for the others. Again—and I do not wish to leave any misunderstanding about this—what is contained in that information is the best estimate that can be made now of what the distribution will be.

Senator Roblin: All I am asking for is the best estimate for Manitoba.

INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE TO SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION

Hon. Robert Muir: My question is for the Minister of State for Economic Development. Yesterday, as reported at page 34 of Hansard, Senator Smith (Colchester) raised the question of possible financial assistance for the Sydney Steel Corporation. Senator Smith mentioned that assistance had been promised by the Liberal Party during the last campaign and, indeed, over the months and years prior to that, yet nothing has occurred. His question was a legitimate one and the minister kindly replied that he did not have the time to address himself to the specifics of that problem, and concluded by saying:

—so I suppose that is all the answer I can give today.

Honourable senators, I now ask the minister whether he will take it upon himself to ascertain, as soon as possible, just how soon some possible financial assistance might be forthcoming for the Sydney Steel Corporation so that a continual breakdown of operations does not persist there. There are currently 3,200 people employed by Sydney Steel Corporation, so this is a serious situation. This is recognized by the minister's colleagues in cabinet, so I am wondering whether he could check to see if anything is moving, or will be moving shortly, on that.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I will take that question as notice in the context it was offered.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CUBAN REFUGEES—CANADIAN INVOLVEMENT

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. Recent media reports indicate that some 5,000 to 10,000 Cubans who took refuge in the Peruvian Embassy have no home to go to. Is the Leader of the Government aware whether that country, in the past 24 hours, has indicated it is prepared to take, or extend hospitality to, those people?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): There has been a great deal of discussion with respect to Canada's responsibilities, if any, in regard to those people. I hope I can make a statement next week on this subject.

AGRICULTURE

CHICKEN IMPORT QUOTAS—CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question for Senator Argue, who has a tendency to be forgotten. I would not like that to become a habit. He tabled, if I understood correctly, a report on the importation of chickens. No? Well, certainly someone tabled that report today.

Senator Frith: I did.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): It was tabled by the Leader of the Government in the Senate; not by me.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): I tabled the report of the Canadian Chicken Marketing Agency.

Senator Flynn: What did you table, Senator Argue?

Senator Argue: The report on the administration of the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

Senator Flynn: In any event, since Senator Argue showed some interest in that subject during the last Parliament, I wonder whether the minister has any comment on the report, and whether he could tell us what direction he thinks the government could go in regard to the importation or exportation of chickens.

Senator Argue: I think the whole question should be reviewed again. I notice that the former Minister of Agriculture, the Honourable John Wise, in a statement made after the election and after the new government was set up, recommended to the new government that it go to Washington and renegotiate that chicken quota. That says to me that Mr. Wise admitted that the negotiations he made were wrong and that Canada accepted far too high a quota.

I believe that the Minister of Agriculture is looking at it and my inclination would be that a further effort should be made to work it out in the interest of Canadian producers.

Senator Flynn: To improve the improvement.

Senator Argue: It was a bad quota to start with; a very bad one.

Senator Frith: The report does not say anything about why the chicken crossed the road.

Senator Argue: I thank you for your question.

OFFICIAL REPORT

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, before we proceed to the orders of the day, I should like to make a correction in Hansard which I consider important.

At page 43 of the official report, in the French version, I am reported as having interrupted the speech of the Leader of the Opposition.

Senator Frith: What date?

Senator Asselin: April 16, 1980, yesterday. I am reported as having interrupted the speech of the Leader of the Government—

Senator Frith: What page?

Senator Asselin: Page 43; by saying:

Speak about horse races.

I never said that. I never, honourable senators, talked about horse races yesterday.

Indeed, the speech of the Leader of the Government was already hard enough to take without my introducing horses into it.

I want, of course, this correction to be duly noted and the officials asked to delete entirely that remark in both the French and the English versions.

Senator Flynn: You do not mean that his speech was hairy?

Senator Asselin: No, no, I did not mention horses.

[English]

Senator Perrault: You would like to scratch your entry, would you?

[Editor's note: p. 43 corrected accordingly.]

TRANSPORT

MASTER PLAN FOR AIRPORTS IN ATLANTIC REGION

Hon. Jack Marshall: I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he would look into the publication of a report on the master plan for the future of airports in Atlantic Canada which was completed at the end of 1979 but, as a result of the election, was delayed. I wonder if he would find out from the Minister of Transport if the report is now ready, and when it will be produced, because it concerns many in the Atlantic region.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall be pleased to do so.

THE SENATE

WINDOWS IN CLERESTORY OF CHAMBER

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, just before the Orders of the Day are called, with regard to the problem raised by Senator Choquette yesterday about the sunrays that are troubling our friends on the other side, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod told me that the matter was discussed with the appropriate authorities of the Department of Public Works. It is hoped that the problem will be solved in the next few days, by next week, possibly before Wednesday afternoon.

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's Speech at the opening of the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament, and the motion of Senator Rousseau, seconded by Senator Hays, for an Address in reply thereto.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I am delighted to have an opportunity to address myself to this important item on our agenda, namely, the Speech from the Throne. I want to assure the Leader of the Government that my placement here has nothing to do with strategy of following him or preceding him, if we have any strategy of following him or preceding him. If we have any strategy at all, it has not been vouchsafed to me, but noting that Senator Roblin and Senator Perrault spoke yesterday, it would appear that the Conservative strategy is to have a couple of big guns followed by a small one, so here I am.

The debate was well begun by Senator Rousseau and Senator Hays. I did not have the opportunity of knowing Senator Rousseau before, but her utterances were wise, helpful and timely. I am a little less enthusiastic about the Speech from the Throne than she was, but I commend her for her utterances. I think her whole speech was a credit to the noble profession to which she belongs, and which I think is one of the greatest.

Senator Hays, the seconder of the motion for an Address in reply, is a friend of mine from earlier days in the House of Commons. We never got so well acquainted that he offered me a drink of sillabub, but I am told, given its ingredients, that a poor little guy from the Maritimes is better away from such potent danger. Senator Hays made a wise and pragmatic speech, ending up on a wholesome and optimistic note, which I applaud.

I am honoured to have the opportunity of being the second speaker in this debate from this side, following Senator Roblin. I am proud to be Senator Roblin's colleague in this chamber. I spent a few years of my life in the keystone province of Manitoba, and I know why he is regarded as one of the great provincial premiers that this country has produced. Indeed, I think his reputation is so secure that I may now divulge that he once asked me to be one of his colleagues in that great province. I think he can stand the strain of that being told now. Only the strong sentimental ties with my beloved native province allowed me to turn down the opportunity of close political association with a man whom I hold in the very highest esteem.

Honourable senators, on the last day of the Thirty-first Parliament I had the pleasure of expressing birthday felicitations to the then Speaker, Senator Grosart. His tenure in that office was, alas, short, but the record of his performance was not scant. He fulfilled, in fullest measure, the high traditions of a presiding officer in a great deliberative assembly.

I follow these recollections and reflections with a hearty salute to the present occupant of the Speaker's Chair. I was in the House of Commons when he arrived; I was there when he left; and I was happy to become his colleague in this illustrious chamber. He is a sensitive and compassionate man, with a courageous and consistent devotion to Canada, and I wish him well in his important task.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Macquarrie: Honourable senators, in making my maiden speech in this chamber last October, I complimented the then opposition for taking seriously their duty in the Question Period, interrogating the excellent ministers then in office. Senator Perrault, with his usual informality, asked:

Would you like to sit over on this side?

And I replied:

Some day I may be there, but not for a while.

Well, honourable senators, it has been a much shorter "while" than I had expected. If a Presbyterian may give reference to such a line sic transit gloria mundi.

As Senator Flynn noted the other day, we Conservatives generally find ourselves in the opposition. One might say we are a rightist party, normally residing on the Speaker's left.

I consider myself a lucky man to be only 60 years old and to actually remember living through three Tory governments. Usually, of course, I am in a minority, and quite often in a minority within a minority. From my present location, as I look at the benches across, and the benches to my left and to my right, I am reminded of just a bit of one of Tennyson's poems that I read years ago:

Cannon to right of them
Cannon to left of them,
Cannon in front of them
Volley'd and thunder'd.

I said, honourable senators, that I recalled only a "bit" of that poem. We are not here as a Light Brigade. This happy band is not of that category at all. Rather, we plan to fight again and win the day, toughened and tried once more by the strains and stresses of adversity. If I am seen peering across the way with some difficulty, it is because of the clerestory light, and not that I think the horizon is so far removed for a victory for our party.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Macquarrie: I am neither dispirited nor discouraged. A Progressive Conservative must have a great deal of faith, and even more hope. It also helps if he has a good memory. I can well recall as a young boy when in 1935 an election resulted in the return of R. B. Bennett and a magnificent host of 38 colleagues. Earlier in the province of Prince Edward Island we had an election, the result of which was 30 to zero for the Liberals. Eventually—and, my God, how eventually—the Progressive Conservative Party did regain office. For much of that interval, reigning supreme was Mackenzie King who, in 1930, bewailed that he and his party were in the valley of humiliation—far too shallow and far too short a valley, I thought it was.

It is my pleasant task to congratulate the ministers sitting in the Senate. The government leader is an old friend. As well as being a colleague in this house, he was a colleague in the other place. He is a genial, hardworking man; a conscientious man. As government leader in the Senate he has sometimes made mistakes; but when he does, he does so with flair—and I appreciate flair in anything.

His two colleagues from the Senate in the ministry, I am proud to call friends. Senator Flynn the other day, in talking to them and about them, noted that the bearded one was now unbearded, and vice versa, and he remarked on a change of face. I thought he had actually said a "change of faith", for while it is true that they both went to Damascus, they went by different routes. They have now arrived in a promised land of sorts, if I may mix the Old and New Testaments together. But they are good parliamentarians. When they erred in the past, it was because of misguided judgment, not from ill-intentioned wrong.

I followed very carefully—being a senator, I was not numbed—the post-election performance of the Liberal Party in respect of its response to its complete shutout in the great western provinces. There were alarums and excursions, speculation and anxiety, and a feverish search for a solution. Manitoba's Liberal members were sent on safari—a sort of two musketeers, because there were not three. They sought a solution; they sought advice. There seemed to be reluctance to appoint senators as full-fledged ministers.

That attitude, I thought, was a denigration, both to the Senate and to the west. In the agony about the kind of representation—and really what they were concerned about was party representation—there was here all along this chamber which, by its very nature, is representative, a magnificently representative body made up of people from the professions, former provincial premiers, former ministers, men of substance, and poor people like myself. We have here in this chamber a broadly representative group.

But now we find that many senators have been passed over. There are many fine senators from the western provinces, capable and competent of being cabinet ministers. I had the privilege for many years of sitting across from cabinets, so I know what I speak of when I say there are many senators who could make good cabinet ministers, either by comparison or absolutely.

I was surprised that there was a tendency to demur on this course. I cannot understand why more senators were not appointed. The great province of British Columbia has only one minister. Terrible; terrible! As good as that minister is, the government leader cannot take the place of three or four. The great province of Alberta, one minister! What is wrong with the rest of the senators from Alberta? I expected at least half a dozen ministers to be appointed from this illustrious chamber. If I were a senator from that part of the country, I would be wondering what I lacked. I know what I lack. I lack the party label and I lack the geography, to say nothing of other things. The government is surely not showing sensitivity to western aspirations by limiting these great provinces to but one minister, sometimes called a minister of state—and there is a little nuance there, too, that might bear looking into.

Senator Roblin, in his most excellent speech delivered yesterday, addressed himself to the text of the Throne Speech and, as Senator Muir knows, that is not always done in Throne Speech debates. But it should be done, no matter what type of Throne Speech. When I was first asked about my reaction to the Throne Speech, with my usual candour I said that I had seen worse. And, indeed, there are aspects in it which I commend.

One of the glowing jewels of the Clark government's record was, in my opinion, the Freedom of Information Bill, and I urge the present government to move on that, and to move quickly to put it in place. I would further suggest that they call into close and constant consultation the father of this enlightened measure, a very distinguished former parliamentarian, Mr. Gerald Baldwin. He could be helpful to them. Furthermore, I think that in honour of his contribution to this important field, the field of freedom, down through many years, it would be a noble gesture if he were appointed to the Privy Council of Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Macquarrie: I was pleased to note the three paragraphs entitled An Active Foreign Policy. One refers to a commitment to increasing the ability of NATO to do its job. Now, honourable senators, was it a year or was it lives ago that the party then in office once actually planned to take us out of NATO, but settled instead for diminishing and cutting in half our military contribution? I remember in another dispensation moving in 1971 a foreign policy debate in the other place, which in an almost unprecedented way actually continued for two days. That motion called on the then government—which is now once again the government—to reassert its relations with our traditional allies. But I do not ever fault anyone for a late conversion. I welcome it late or soon.

The paragraph on disarmament does not evoke strong sentiments or give me the impression that much will change. Canada has always played a major role in the constant search for genuine world disarmament. I well recall the great work of the Honourable Howard Green at the Geneva conference and subsequent meetings. Then came General Burns, a distinguished Canadian in war and in the search for peace, and then George Ignatieff, an ornament to our diplomatic service. Now we have the son of our greatest diplomat of all. Geoffrey Pearson, the son of Lester B. Pearson, serves as a special adviser on disarmament, and I think he does well. If designating him as an ambassador will be helpful, of course it will be welcomed, but somehow I think that nomenclature is not really the major issue here.

Sombre as it must be on international matters—and that is, alas, a sound judgment—the Speech cites the travails and tensions on the national scene. It says, "In every part of Canada there are forces which are driving us apart rather than bringing us together." This is true. But it is not new. Throughout its century-long history the unity of the Dominion of Canada has been based on the interplay of the centripetal forces drawing us together and the centrifugal forces tearing us asunder. And the test of statesmanship down through the years has been to maintain and sustain the supremacy of the former. To hear some in the press and public today, the tensions in Confederation began in the last few years; that before Premier Lévesque and Premier Lougheed all was serene, secure and steadfast. Nothing could be further from the truth. We have had threats before and threats galore. The voters of New Brunswick—and they were the only ones who were asked—when they were asked to vote for Confederation voted no. And that wily old Nova Scotian, Charles Tupper, did not even ask the legislature, let alone the people, because he had a good idea that the answer would be no.

And on Dominion Day in 1867, Nova Scotia sent up 19 members to the House of Commons, and 18 of them were anti-Confederates. The same day the legislature elected 37 members and 35 were anti-Confederates. And one of the other two poor lads died before he ever took office.

Senator Donahoe: One was my great-grandfather.

Senator Macquarrie: His great-grandfather! It appears that even God was against Confederation at that time.

Little Prince Edward Island, wise, thoughtful and canny, stayed out as long as possible. It became financially extremely difficult. In 1866 Premier Pope said that 99 per cent of the Islanders were against Confederation. Never was there a Gallup poll so indicative as that. When eventually the Island came in, the local politicians said, "We have sold our noble little ship and now she stands stripped of all the glory with which for 100 years she was adorned." And a poet denounced the politicians in a song which has become quite popular this last few years, and I note that with some interest:

> With dishes fine their tables shine
> They live in princely style
> They are the knaves who made us slaves
> And sold Prince Edward Isle.

Over in New Brunswick, surprisingly enough, they came out with more biblical inspiration, and one of their leaders said:

> When I forget my country so far as to sell it for Confederation, may my right hand forget its cunning; and if I do not prefer New Brunswick as she is, to Canada with all her glory, then let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth.

They were not enthusiastic, honourable senators; they were clearly not enthusiastic. But one could go on with many references to deep-seated agonizing and hostility from all the areas which eventually comprised the dominion of the north, as Professor Creighton described it.

Senator Donahoe: Nova Scotia said she was sold for the price of a sheepskin.

Senator Macquarrie: A sheepskin, yes. I am one of those, honourable senators, who use the word "Dominion" because I think one of the greatest men we have produced was Sir Robert Borden who was the architect of our independence, and he presided over, in large measure, the change from colony to Dominion. Although unthinking people say, "You cannot use 'Dominion' because it means subservience," they are quite wrong. It meant a very great forward step from a subservient status to a magnificent harbinger of one of the great organizations of the world, the Commonwealth of Nations. And if I were allowed by the rules to take note of his presence in the gallery I might say that a very distinguished Canadian who used to adorn this place and who has adorned literature and who has been a controversialist all his life, Dr. Eugene Forsey, is another person who knows the meaning of the word "Dominion" and uses it, and I could not be in better company if I tried.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Macquarrie: But I mention these things, honourable senators, not as part of a history lesson, although we ignore our past at our peril. As a Conservative I try to learn from the past and not be a reactionary who is bound by it. But I do make reference to it for a couple of reasons. The first surely is that the act of bringing the country together, these disparate and distant and not enthusiastic colonies, into a new political entity, was a truly great exercise in statesmanship, for which we Canadians have been always too reluctant to give credit and always too hesitant to get enthusiastic about.

● (1520)

I used to teach courses in the university about nationalism and the great nation-builders, Cavour, Mazzini and others, but I think, considering the task that Sir John A. Macdonald and his associates faced, they take a noble place with any one of them. It was a terribly difficult task, and surely it was far more challenging to put this country together than it should be to keep it together.

Secondly, we must ask why, in an era of the most sophisticated communications technology, Canadians seem not to be able to dialogue together. We have the technology of communicating but do we communicate? The Two Solitudes, alas, has not been overborne by the passage of time since the distinguished author wrote that book. We are technologically unified but emotionally more separated than ever before.

Why is the noble creation of our forefathers in danger? Why are we in a position where, after generations of being together, we can even conceive of the departure of one of the original parts of what is truly a great country? What has happened?

Several years ago the present Prime Minister told Canadians that separatism was dead. I wish he had been right, but, alas, not so. I have never pretended to understand the nuances of Quebec's social and political life. Many anglophones would make the same confession. But for the past decade and more distinguished Quebecers have been at the helm of national affairs. So we must ask what things were done or were left undone. It is a serious, ominous question.

I was interested in the exchange between Senator Asselin and the government leader in the Senate about the Prime Minister's indication of what would be the case in a "no" vote or a "yes" vote, and I think, had I been the prime minister, I would have replied pretty well as he did. But one cannot pose a question to an electorate and assume that the answer will go the way one desires. It could be "yes". And while no one wishes to talk about the results thereafter, we must in fact think about them. I cannot help but think about the possibility. I do not want it, but I cannot remove it from the realm of possibility. It would be blindness to do so.

On that I feel very much as Burns must have felt when in that warm, revealing poem To A Mouse he said:

> Still thou art blest, compared wi' me!
> The present only toucheth thee:
> But, och! I backward cast my e'e
> On prospects drear!
> An' forward, tho' I canna see,
> I guess an' fear!

So there must be a sense of disquiet, and I think it is tremendously important.

I don't quite agree with what the Leader of the Government said in the chamber yesterday that national unity is the one issue, truly the one real issue. I do not think it is, but I think it is certainly the most important. There are other issues, of course; economic issues of enormous gravity.

Yet we are always traumatized, I think, in the national scene as to how we react to the situation in Quebec. I feel it is enormously important, and yet it is awkward if someone else sets up the premise upon which I must demonstrate my feelings. I don't believe that the result of the referendum per se is all important. No matter which way the vote goes on May 20, that will not end this situation of great significance. Perhaps we are, in dramatizing that particular day, not rendering a good national service. Yet, if we want to—and I think we must because there is an educative role for politicians; we are not just representatives—if we want to demonstrate that, I think we are impelled to comment and to feel that it is something of utmost seriousness.

There are aspects of the whole matter that trouble me. I would do a great deal—I do not know what I wouldn't do—to make this Canadian family more unified. I am again referring to one of my heroes in this country. I think, as does Dr. Forsey, that the British North America Act was a pretty good piece of legislation. Some people stood it on its head, which doesn't do anybody much good, but it has worked extremely well.

I am not so narrow-minded in this view that I would not change the B.N.A. Act, but I am a little upset when I read of people saying that anything at all goes so long as we can bring about the defeat of the "yes" side, that they would establish a country in which there would be no more national institutions than in a loose alliance of semi-sovereign states.

That, I think, is distressing. If we can seek to find a formula for the linguistic and social discontent of one part of the country, or the disquiet of one part of the country, by saying that all of the units can take the same thing, what do we have left?

I have seen, I think, far too much diminution of the central government; far too much expansion of the powers and prestige of the provinces. One hears that the provinces want undisputed control of this, and undisputed control of that. I am concerned that solutions to social problems will benefit Canadians of every sector on a national basis. I do not want to see a situation in which a rich province can mount a fine medicare program leaving us to wonder what will happen to the sick people in the poor provinces. Is poverty to be the sole ingredient of our patriotism?

These are matters we must address ourselves to. You never really find a campaign utterance that gains the attention it deserves, but I thought the most important thing that the then Prime Minister Mr. Clark said during the federal campaign was in his Spruce Grove speech in Alberta when he spoke about the absolute, essential need of having a careful look at what should be done in this country in reference to jurisdiction, when he spoke about the Rowell-Sirois report as a sort of example of the scope, not the resolution but the scope, of the problem.

The sad part of all this is that while we might say the provinces are equal in constitutional power, they are vastly different in economic strength.

Confederation, honourable senators, is many things and everyone here could describe what Confederation means to him, but one thing surely is essential and that is that it is a sharing of the advantages and disadvantages of the natural resources of the regions.

I liked an aspect of the Prime Minister's remarks which I read in the Globe and Mail. Since our rules forbid us to refer to the debates in the other house—

Senator Flynn: No.

Senator Macquarrie: Yes, I thought they did, Senator Flynn. I am referring to the situation where he used a word that has almost dropped out of existence, and that is the word "patriotism". We all cherish our provinces, or communities; but our founding fathers were right when they saw the proper, and, indeed, I believe the essential, priority in the federal state, which is that the whole is greater than the parts and, indeed, the sum of the parts. If we do not feel this in our hearts and express it in our institutions, the true north, strong and free, will not long endure; nor will a loose alliance of quasi-independent provinces be a worthy or even respectable successor.

• (1530)

The situation is extremely delicate. The people of the other nine provinces are very much part of the whole question in Quebec today. Yet, while they are part of the question, they cannot be, nor should they be, a part of the debate.

I read of an Alberta minister saying the other day that Canadian political leaders in the nine provinces are walking on eggs for fear of playing into the hands of René Lévesque. In my view, a national referendum would be an horrendous thing. It would put us into a confrontation that we could do nicely without.

Of course, we end up by saying that Quebecers must make their decision. But surely most of us in this chamber, or in the nine provinces—indeed, in Canada—believe that any Canada without Quebec would be a pale and weakened development of the great entity which our political forefathers brought forth. Surely it would be a supreme lack of faith, in them and in our country, if we should fail in 1980 to retain that which under very adverse circumstances they wrought in the period from 1864 to 1867.

I have no special claim to being a great Canadian, but for years I represented Prince Edward Island, the cradle of Confederation, where it all began, and I do not want to live to see the dreams of those men shattered or diminished; nor do I want my children to live in a time with fellow Canadians who are unable to sustain what the people of an earlier day were able to build.

We must fulfil our destiny as a strong, united country. Let us not lose faith. I have never been afraid, honourable senators, in making a speech, to call upon the words of someone who has expressed it more nobly. John A. Macdonald was reputed to be a crafty, canny politican; but he was much more, and he showed it in the few words which he uttered in the House of Commons the year before he died—indeed, it was less than a year. He said:

> If I had influence over the minds of the people of Canada, any power over their intellect, I would leave them this legacy: Whatever you do, adhere to the union. We are a great country and shall become one of the greatest in the universe if we preserve it. We shall sink into insignificance and adversity if we suffer it to be broken. God and nature made the two Canadas one. Let no factious men be allowed to put them asunder.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, may I first congratulate His Honour the Speaker on his appointment to the Chair of this chamber.

Mr. Speaker, all of us in this chamber who know you—and all of us do—are fully aware of your distinguished career as a minister of the Crown and, before that, as a leader in the trade union movement in this country, which has meant so much to Canada. I am thinking particularly of your dedication to, and your self-sacrifice for, the promotion of a truly noble Canadianism, a Canadianism in which you envisage the participation of people from all the provinces, and more particularly from your beloved province of Quebec. You have always wanted the people of Quebec to play their full part in Confederation. We are honoured by your appointment as Speaker of the Senate.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Connolly: May I also say of Senator Grosart's short term—too short a term, really—in the Chair, that he was an excellent Speaker. He was so because of his dedication not only to the Speakership and its traditions but also to a continuing and at all times pervasive interest in the proceedings of this house. He is a worthy member of the community of Speakers who have occupied the Chair, and he is part of a fine tradition.

Since I did not speak on the Address in reply during the last session, I should like to say to Senator Lapointe how much her charm and grace brought lustre to the Speakership, and, in my experience, brought it to a high water mark both within and without the chamber. Senator Lapointe was a fine Speaker and is a great lady.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Connolly: I also wish to pay my deep respects to the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition. I have never been a leader of an opposition, but I have had the responsibility of leadership on the government side and I know the kind of sacrifice that is involved by those two honourable gentlemen in the conduct of their duties. Not only have they assumed those duties, but they have occupied their position for so long that I wonder about their capacity to endure. We are indeed their debtors and we owe much to the kind of dedication they bring to their work.

What I say of the leaders, I say also, in proportionate measure, of their deputies and their whips.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Connolly: Senator Macdonald is, of course, an old hand and an old friend in this house, and it pleases me greatly—as I am sure it pleases all of us—that he is going to continue to be the whip on the other side.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Connolly: I also welcome Senator Frith to his new duties as the Deputy Leader of the Government. I am pleased too that our genial friend from Newfoundland, Senator Petten, is still the whip on our side. I am sure that the two representatives from the Atlantic provinces will get along very well.

Honourable senators, we have just listened to a magnificent speech from our friend from Prince Edward Island.

Senator McIlraith: From the Island.

Senator Connolly: From the Island. I can only say to Senator Macquarrie that in my earlier days in this house—I do not want to pose as an ancient, although I am fairly ancient—I used to hear such speeches on occasion. However, those occasions have become fewer and fewer. It warms the cockles of my heart to hear senators talk so warmly and so feelingly about some of the great people of the early days of this country, quoting some of their sayings and recounting some of the things they did.

We have to remind ourselves constantly that if we are going to make a success of our provinces and our country, we have to stand on the shoulders of the ancients. The ancients in this country are not that ancient. We are, after all, only a little more than 100 years old. But it is addresses like Senator Macquarrie's, I think, that give us all a great lift, a great inspiration, and I would hope that we would have a good many more, not only from him but from other members of the chamber.

I am now going to take a leaf from his book. He said that when one participates in the Address in reply to the gracious Speech from the Throne, one should refer to something in the Speech, at least, to justify the taking up of the time of the chamber. I do that now, in deference to Senator Macquarrie, and say that the words in the Speech that particularly justify my standing here today are as follows:

> —my Government will revive the process of constitutional reform.

Honourable senators, lost in the turmoil of the general election of this last winter was a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada which was issued on December 21, 1979. It is a judgment that is most significant in the history and development of Canadian constitutional affairs. It arose from a reference by the Government of Canada in November 1978 to the Supreme Court at the instance of the Special Joint Committee of the two houses of Parliament on the Constitution. The reference concerned the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada in relation to the Upper House.

It was alleged by the government in the reference that the authority for Parliament to abolish the Senate arose from a provision in clause 1 of section 91 of the British North America Act. That clause, as amended, was passed by the Parliament in the United Kingdom in December 1949. That amendment conferred upon the Parliament of Canada the right to amend the Constitution of Canada, with certain exceptions.

Shortly, the court was asked to say if the Parliament of Canada could alter its own establishment by substituting for this chamber, the Senate, another body as proposed by Bill C-60.

The court found that the words "the Constitution of Canada" do not mean the whole of the B.N.A. Act. They mean the Constitution of the federal government as distinct from the provincial governments, and in matters of interest only to that government, namely, the federal government. The court further found that the powers to amend the Constitution of Canada given by section 91 of the B.N.A. Act were not intended to include the power to eliminate either the Senate or the House of Commons.

Furthermore, the court found that section 91 confers authority to legislate in respect of matters within that section—that is to say, in respect of federal matters—"upon the Queen, with the advice and consent of the Senate and the House of Commons." In short, in answer to the first question in the reference, the Supreme Court has held that the Parliament of Canada alone cannot delete any reference to the Upper House or Senate, as those references are found in the B.N.A. Act, and that it alone cannot abolish either the Senate or the House of Commons.

Honourable senators, I think most people thought that this had always been the law. But now it has been confirmed by the highest court in the land, and the decision is binding on governments and the Parliament of Canada.

The second question to which the court directed its attention, and which is referred to in the judgment as paragraph (f) of question 2, was as to "whether bills approved by the House of Commons could be given the force of law after the passage of a certain period of time, notwithstanding that the Upper House had not approved them." This, too, was a proposal of Bill C-60.

The court found that a provision of this kind would seriously impair the position of the Senate, because it would permit legislation to be enacted without the consent of the Senate. For this reason the court found that Parliament cannot impair the role of the Senate in that process; that is to say, in the legislative process prescribed by clause 1 of section 91 of the B.N.A. Act.

Honourable senators, it was the introduction in the House of Commons of Bill C-60 in 1978 which gave rise to the reference, as I have said. Bill C-60, inter alia, proposed to replace the Senate with a body to be called the House of the Federation. That proposal, if implemented, effectively would have put all ultimate power over federal legislation in the House of Commons. The new second chamber's right to amend bills, should the Commons not concur, was to be abolished. In such circumstances Canada, for practical legislative purposes, would then have had a unicameral federal legislature. In addition, the composition of the proposed new house would have been dominated by appointees of the 10 provincial authorities. The decision of the Supreme Court calls a halt to both propositions.

It is not too much to say that the court's decree has had the effect of preserving, for the time being at least, the parliamentary system as we know it in this country. Henceforth, no government, regardless of how firmly it controls the House of Commons, can abolish the Senate without the Senate's concurrence, or, as matters now stand, without the legislative intervention of the Parliament of the United Kingdom, where the B.N.A. Act, in this area, alone can be amended.

There is a procedure available in Canada whereby such amendments to the B.N.A. Act can be achieved. That procedure is called the "joint address" from the Parliament of Canada to the Parliament of the United Kingdom. In this procedure the Senate must play its part; but then, so must Westminster. In most cases, today, the concurrence of the provinces would antedate the whole exercise of the joint address.

Honourable senators, the validity of the court decision to which I have referred is well reasoned; it is clear; it is extremely well written; it cites the essential precedents without being heavy or burdensome to the reader. It was the unanimous view of the eight judges who sat. It is not appealable. It is a pronouncement of historic significance.

All this is not to say that constitutional reform in federal matters in Canada is unattainable, nor is it to say that prospects for Senate reform have been frustrated. It means simply that such substantive changes in the British North America Act, when they require action by the Parliament of the United Kingdom, must carry the concurrence, not only of the House of Commons but as well of the Senate.

From my own experience in this chamber, and particularly in the Special Committee of the Senate on the Constitution, I am convinced that senators are as anxious as any group or groups or individuals to support the work of reform. I am equally sure that senators, who are probably as expert as anyone else in the requirements for an effective second chamber in Canada, would prefer to see the process of reform conducted within the proven structure of the parliamentary system as we know it. It would be tragic for a country like Canada, with its great potential, to embark upon a plan which would trade the basic elements of its federation—like the Parliament we have now, but reformed—for some untried, experimental establishment. The Canadian federation has been made to work. With prudence and goodwill, a renewed federalism can continue to preserve and develop the heritage of Canadians for the greater well-being of existing and future generations.

I believe this can be best achieved in the Canadian federal state by preserving the institutions of the parliamentary system—a system that has a proven validity and which has been tested in war and in peace both here and elsewhere.

Honourable senators, the cry for change is ever present in the body politic, particularly in respect of representative institutions. This is because society, and the people and institutions which comprise it, are dynamic. New inventions, new requirements, new aspirations and new standards are constantly evolving in the social cauldron. There is not always a standard to test the excellence or the appropriateness of new plans, but there must be a standard. Change for the sake of change is hardly a suitable test. Popular demand or vox populi may not necessarily be vox dei! Modern people are easily persuaded of the value of revolutionary concepts. Such ideas are sensational and, in the hands of the populist, or the demagogue, with the superficial slogan and the available media, they propagate themselves. This is not fanciful. This has happened and we see it happening.

To build upon tested institutions is the part of prudence and wisdom, and I think it has better promise of ultimate success. There is a maxim on the walls of our Speaker's chambers. It is chiselled into the wood panelling for permanency. It reads Aude sapere—Dare to be prudent—and it is addressed to legislators. To be prudent is not always glamorous, eye-catching, or popular, as is the desire to destroy.

The word "reform" is badly used in so many contexts. There is a difference between regressive and progressive change. Real reform must be progressive. I apply this thought to proposals for the reform of the Senate. Most, if not all, of the schemes for Senate reform, whether in position papers from outside Parliament, or in proposed legislation like Bill C-60, or in the speeches of politicians, or in articles of columnists, have been written by students or scholars, sometimes semi-scholars, commissioned or self-appointed, to produce a result which is popular, sometimes demagogic, and which will offer inducements to groups perceived to be their beneficiaries. Sometimes the test—and it seems to me in most of these papers this is the case—is: "Can the scheme be sold? Think not of its value once it is in place. Worry about that later."

Most of the schemes for Senate reform have centred around the idea that this house should have a higher profile in the area of regional representation. With that we can agree. However, that view must be balanced against the representation which the regions of this country have in the House of Commons, in the cabinet, in the provincial legislatures, and at the federal-provincial conference.

In passing, may I observe that the regional representation provided by the Senate, to which Senator Macquarrie has already referred, was powerfully and authoritatively recognized by Prime Minister Clark when he brought into his cabinet, to supplement the shortfall of his supporters from Quebec in the House of Commons, two of our distinguished colleagues, Senator Flynn and Senator Asselin. As ministers and as senators, they distinguished themselves and brought honour to this house. We are all conscious of that. I would add that Mr. Clark's appointment of our former colleague, Senator de Cotret, to this house, and to a senior portfolio in the cabinet, showed not only an understanding of the structure of Parliament, but it gave Senator de Cotret a forum for helpful, even brilliant, activity.

I am equally pleased that the present Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, for the same reason, has in his cabinet Senator Perrault, Senator Olson and Senator Argue as spokesmen for British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan, from which provinces he has no supporters in the House of Commons. I wish these colleagues well in their new duties. Both of these events are a mature development in a Canadian parliamentary tradition.

Without a Senate constituted as it is, our parliamentary tradition and our parliamentary institutions would have been sadly deficient. The Senate has been a salutary safety valve—not always to be used just as a safety valve, but available in emergencies.

Honourable senators, earlier I alluded to the fact that the recent schemes for Senate reform, or some of them, have been ill advised. To concentrate on the need for regional representation through the Senate to the exclusion of the other functions of this chamber, in my view, is a defective approach. To propose that all or the controlling numbers of an upper house be appointed by provincial governments or legislatures in my view, is to ignore the federal responsibility. Provincial governments and legislators have local and provincial matters as their main concern.

[Senator Connolly.]

Legislators in the federal Parliament must match their concerns and activities to the national requirement. They must reconcile their concerns about the effect of national policy upon their home areas in the light of the national need. It is the welfare of Canada as a whole which must guide their decision.

Provincial appointees to a second chamber would be expected to be provincial spokesmen, locally partisan, and perhaps even almost agents of provincial authorities. In a federal system, such a proposal is not sound. Short of an elected upper house, which the Commons would never tolerate, the federal authority must retain the power of appointment to the upper house; indeed, to all the principal elements of the federal establishment.

In addition to Bill C-60, there have been several other proposals for constitutional change involving the Senate. They all have a common denominator. Whether they propose an upper house called the House of the Federation, the House of the Provinces, or any other name, as I have said, they confer upon the provinces the power to appoint to a new kind of second chamber of this Parliament, but they also remove from that upper chamber the effective power to amend bills. If these suggestions are designed to give provinces effective influence over federal legislation, they fail. If they are an attempt to remove power from the federal authority, they have the opposite effect.

I say this because by eliminating the right of the second chamber to amend bills, they make the government of the day—that is to say the executive—supreme. Under these proposals, through its whips, the government can control the House of Commons and give the ultimate decision for all legislation that goes through that chamber to the Commons and to the government. This does not augment provincial influence over federal legislation. It promises to add only another forum for the expression of provincial discontent. I should think that the federal-provincial conference, properly constituted, is a more telling agency for the effective expression of provincial concerns.

In this day, with the demand for a new federalism, there may well be areas of federal jurisdiction which would be more appropriately occupied by the provincial legislators and vice versa. When areas of jurisdiction as between federal and provincial authorities are to be adjusted—and unquestionably they must be adjusted—trade-offs must be made in the reallocation of the heads or parts of the heads in sections 91 and 92. That is a matter for an intergovernmental conference. The dismemberment of the Senate will not achieve it.

To confer upon the provinces the power of appointment to some upper chamber—some kind of upper chamber which is no more than a debating society—may seem like a concession to the provinces, but it does not help any province realize any of its aspirations in respect of power-sharing. It would not give a province a single additional iota of influence over federal legislation. In real terms the so-called new voices on Parliament Hill would signify nothing. The proposal is misleading. It is a red herring. It diverts attention away from the troublesome trade-offs involved in readjusting all or part of the federal and provincial powers found in Sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act. That is the area where fundmental constitutional change must be made, where a major restructuring of the Constitution is to be achieved.

Honourable senators, it is one thing to say that federal and provincial powers should be reallocated so that both can legislate in their own new spheres, but it is quite another thing to say that the provinces should actively participate in the federal legislative process. It is doubtful that Canada or Canadians would want a unitary state or even an approach to one. Canada is too diverse in too many ways for that kind of establishment. But it is consistent with the structure of a federal state that there should be an intergovernmental body which can influence the guidelines and the policies of all the governments in the federation. Such bodies should not have legislative authority. The federal-provincial conference can be made that kind of body. Stripped of the opportunity to provide periodic political posturing, its purpose should be to achieve a consensus and, above all, it must avoid the balkanization of the country.

I should like to say something now about appointments to the Senate, because throughout the history of our Confederation every Prime Minister has used as his first test of eligibility for a senatorship the matter of party allegiance. Lately that practice has been modified and there are now more members of this chamber who do not qualify on that ground than ever before. However, it is amazing how well the old system has delivered highly qualified men and women to the Senate. People who were summoned here developed expertise and, indeed, developed positions of authority for themselves in the many sectors of national life where Parliament intervenes. Prime Ministers, indeed, have had the good fortune and good sense to pick good people.

But I think there should be a new formula devised, in law or in convention, whereby, when an appointment is to be made, the Prime Minister, in consultation with the Leader of the Government in the Senate, should have as his primary consideration the requirement in the Senate, and especially in its committees, for persons with a capacity to perform the duties of the office. Committee work especially, as we all know, is becoming more demanding in energy and expertise as time progresses.

In my more than 25 years in this chamber, I have seen the number of people in the opposition benches dwindle, making the task of sustaining debate and manning the various committees most difficult for the members of the opposition, and particularly for its leader. Therefore, I hope we can develop a convention—or a provision in law, if necessary—whereby the Prime Minister of the day, when the numbers comprising the official opposition in the Senate fall below one-third of the total number of seats, can fill every second vacancy among government supporters from any province with a supporter of the official opposition. I think his choice might best be made from a panel of five names which the Leader of the Official Opposition in the other place would be required to submit within 30 days of the occurrence of a vacancy. All appointments, I think, should be made within 90 days after the vacancy occurs.

I say the Prime Minister of the day should be required to fill every second vacancy in the seats allotted to a province in such manner because, political life being what it is, every Prime Minister is under pressure from his party in respect of Senate appointments, as well as many other types of appointments.

Honourable senators, I say nothing now about other changes which should be considered in connection with Senate reform—matters such as the length of tenure, the age of retirement, the right of the Senate to amend financial clauses of bills other than bills of appropriation, or even the need for increased representation from the four western provinces.

Thus far, I have dealt with four points: first, the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada on the reference; secondly, the role of the Senate as representing the regions of Canada; third, the retention by the federal authority of full control of appointments to federal parliamentary institutions; and, fourth, the problems presented by the inadequate representation of opposition party members on the opposition benches.

I should like to deal briefly with a fifth point; namely, the right of the Senate to amend bills, except, of course, appropriation bills, which come here from the House of Commons. I exclude bills of appropriation because, by tradition, the House of Commons has always held the power over, and responsibility for, the public purse, and that is as it should be.

May I first attempt to dissipate the legend of the horrible consequences of the Senate's veto. The veto power is commonly understood to mean the right of the Senate to defeat or refuse to act upon a bill passed by the other place. "Veto", in this case, means the rejection of a whole bill on the ground of principle or of politics, or both. "Veto", thus understood, is distinguished from the Senate's power to amend certain clauses of certain bills.

It is commonly put about that the Senate can reject any bill that comes before it; that the Senate can therefore frustrate the will of the elected representatives of the people; that the Senate is a sword of Damocles hanging over every legislative proposal of the House of Commons. I suppose, except for appropriation bills, technically, that is true. Literally, that may be true. But the threat is more imaginary than real. Senator Forsey, an acknowledged authority on the institutions of Parliament, has told us that in over 40 years the Senate has not rejected an entire bill, and is unlikely again to do so. The word "veto" is a bogey; it is misleading and unreal, in our time.

But the upper legislative chamber of a Parliament must have the power to amend bills if it is to have a valid legislative function. To deprive it of this power is to reduce it to the status of an impotent debating chamber. In our open society, we have no problems in providing for the exchange of views outside of Parliament—in meetings, study groups, the press and the media generally. But both houses of Parliament must be more than meeting houses for the debating of views. Their function is to enact specific laws—laws which bind the people.

Honourable senators can easily provide their own examples of improvements to legislation which have resulted from Senate amendments or proposed Senate amendments, and, indeed, so can the well informed observer of parliamentary affairs. Changes of the kind that we make here are seldom newsworthy, nor indeed is the searching, exhaustive cross-examination that the Senate committees give to bills. But they have their effect upon the quality of legislation and upon those who prepare and draft the bills, and that may be even more important. Senators, as part of Parliament, must have the amending power of a legislative body.

Finally, honourable senators, there is a further common denominator in most of the proposals for parliamentary reform, and that is to give the upper chamber a special concern for regional, minority, cultural and linguistic rights. I do not propose to discuss this field of activity at length, but a few basic facts, I think, should be remembered.

In our parliamentary system it is not the function of either house of Parliament to establish policies and programs and to provide for their funding and administration. That is the function of the government. The upper house and the lower house can debate the rights and wrongs of a policy; they can approve or criticize programs, their administration and their financial aspects, but only the government can initiate them effectively. Debates and committee reports may move the government in a given direction, but action by the government is a condition precedent to the establishment of a program in the regional and cultural fields, as in any other field of government activity.

To confer upon an upper house a special concern for such matters would be an empty gesture. It would have no more authority than would a study group. The government alone has the final, the practical, solution for such issues in its own hands. Only when the government's purpose is determined does Parliament begin to play its part.

It is superfluous for me, and I am sure for all of you, to say that such is the essence of responsible government. It is the government which must answer to the electorate for its actions. To attempt to confer upon an appointive chamber authority for regional and cultural policies while retaining in government alone the power to establish and administer programs for their implementation is neither realistic nor practical.

Moreover the regional, minority, and linguistic groups affected would have no recourse if they were dissatisfied with either the action or the inaction of this appointed second chamber with these endowments of power or alleged power. And the government would disclaim responsibility for the failure of the upper house because of the special authority conferred upon it.

Honourable senators, a renewed federalism in Canada is obviously an important requirement. The provinces seek it; the regions seek it; the federal authorities acknowledge it to be a national goal. To achieve it, federal and provincial jurisdictions must be redefined.

But the goal of a renewed federalism is to assure the achievement of a greater national coherence and national unity. To promote and assure this purpose the federation must have a competent national Parliament. I hope that the views on one aspect of this problem which I have treated today will be helpful.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, for Senator Murray, debate adjourned.

THE LATE HON. JOSIE D. QUART

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before any other business is dealt with and before the Deputy Leader moves the adjournment of the Senate, I must inform you with the deepest of regret that our dear colleague, Senator Josie Quart, died suddenly today in Quebec City. She had returned to Quebec yesterday, and apparently was quite well this morning. But she suffered a stroke about noon. I would suggest, because of the suddenness of the news, that tributes be delayed until Tuesday next.

Honourable senators will be able to obtain particulars as to the funeral arrangements from the office of the Speaker, from my office or from that of the leader. They will also be able to get information as to the arrangements made for colleagues to attend.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, might I propose that those of us who are here should stand and observe a moment of silence out of respect for our dear departed colleague. I do not know if there is a precedent for this, but it seems to me to be a good idea to establish one in the case of an announcement of this nature made while we are sitting.

The senators rose and stood in silence.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn out of respect for our late colleague.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, April 22, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, April 22, 1980

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE HONOURABLE JOSIE D. QUART

TRIBUTES

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it was with sadness and surprise that we learned last Thursday of the passing of our colleague, Senator Josie Quart who had attended the opening of the first session of this legislature. She was in the Senate Tuesday and Wednesday. She had returned to Quebec City to attend a meeting of the "no" committee. She was in high spirits when she got up Thursday morning and about noon, she had a heart attack and died a few minutes later.

I met Senator Quart almost 50 years ago, not in my early youth, but let us say in my teens when I spent my summers in Château-d'Eau with one of my uncles and where the Quart family also had their residence. All her children were my friends.

Afterwards, I followed her career. She had always been a very active person mainly within the Conservative Party, especially during the 1945-1957 crisis when she relentlessly kept the flame alive.

[English]

Honourable senators, she was colourful, gregarious, good-natured and friendly, and could usually be encountered hurtling down a Senate corridor on her way to yet another sitting of some Dave Croll committee or other. But she always had time for a few pleasant words. Did I know, she once asked, why there was an increase in the sale of water-beds? The answer was because people thought it would be cute to fuddle duddle in a puddle. And off she was again, the irrepressible Senator Josie Dinan Quart, no ordinary octogenarian, on her way to remind a bunch of parliamentarians that their deliberations were about real people with serious problems, and that this fact should not be lost sight of as they cerebrated their way up an ivory tower.

They all loved her because she refused to take herself seriously. But perspicacity and an ability at plain-speaking were by no means the extent of Josie Quart's God-given gifts. This incomparable lady could defuse even the most acrimonious exchange with a disarming comment calculated to bring participants back to a realization of the fact that nothing of any value could be achieved in an atmosphere of animosity.

She was a gem who could be counted on for a superlative effort in anything she undertook. Her capacity for work was boundless and her enthusiasm contagious. She was forever involved in a multiplicity of undertakings.

Her contributions to society through all the activities she initiated, the groups she led, the causes she espoused, have served to make this country, and in particular the province of Quebec, a much better place to live in.

This was an uncommon lady to whom much was given in the way of talent, and from whom much was received in the way of service. The community she served was in no way restricted by geography. Her concern was for the community of man. She sought its general betterment, and in that she achieved a degree of success that was remarkable.

We should thank Providence for having given us Josie Quart. She leaves behind a world better for her having lived in it. She had charm and she had grace. She was witty, personable and intelligent. She was, as she would say, a typical Tory.

To her family and the many friends who will also miss her, I offer, on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party that she served so selflessly, my most heartfelt condolences.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, to underline and echo much of what Senator Flynn has said, I should say that I did not know Senator Quart too well, but I did know her family and, in particular, her son Gerry. I thought so highly of Senator Quart that I find it difficult to acknowledge that she was a typical Tory. However, in the circumstances, I am prepared to say even that.

She did have a remarkably rich life matched so well by the richness of her personality and the sheer enjoyment one experienced, by simply being in her presence, no matter what was being discussed.

Senator Quart could be likened to Wordsworth's Happy Warrior who:

> —while the mortal mist is gathering, draws

Senator Quart's grandson delivered the eulogy at a touching and beautiful ceremony at St. Patrick's on the Grand Allee. Some members of the Senate were present. The service and, in particular, the music were particularly beautiful.

In the eulogy delivered by her grandson, he opened and closed with what I think are very appropriate words:

> Her life was a rich tapestry and we shall miss her.

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, if I may be permitted to add my brief tribute to the late Senator Quart, I should be happy to do so.

I was first introduced to the Quart family on my appointment to a rusty, rather salt-scarred Corvette when I served in the Royal Canadian Navy during World War II. My introduction to the Quart family was through an officer who was already on that ship, namely, Josie's son, Gerry Quart.

I should say that in those days, and in the darkest days of the Battle of the Atlantic on the Newfie-Derry run, there were no Maritimers, no Quebecers, no Ontarians and no western Canadians. In fact, there were just Canadians. On the funnel of that ship, we, like everyone else, painted the maple leaf. Josie Quart would have approved.

When I came to this place and met Josie, she knew of my wartime friendship with her son, and I think because of that she may have taken more than her normal warm interest in me as a colleague in the Senate. However, over all of us she cast the glow of her enthusiastic and optimistic nature.

To her large progeny—children, grandchildren and great grandchildren—we extend our deepest sympathy. We here know how important they were to her and what joy they were to her. We will sadly miss her.

[Translation]

Hon. Renaude Lapointe: Honourable senators, six years ago, when Mr. Robert Stanfield presented Senator Quart with a magnificent parchment making her a life member of the Progressive Conservative Association, he reminded us that our dear Josie had started in politics at the early age of 9, well before women in Canada ever had their voting rights.

In 1918, after women were granted those rights in Ottawa, Josie founded the South Quebec Women's Association, the first of its kind with a federal charter.

Later on, her outstanding work as President of the Ladies Auxiliary of Military District No. 5 won her the Decoration of Member of the Order of the British Empire.

Josie also distinguished herself as a Canadian delegate to the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women and attended in that capacity the sessions held in Geneva, New York and Buenos Aires in 1958, 1959 and 1960.

A member since 1960 of a dozen special Senate committees and the Joint Committee on the Constitution, she also took an active and helpful interest in all women's associations and all good causes for which she was approached.

In peacetime as in wartime, the life of Josie Quart was an endless series of activities within charitable and philanthropic organizations that would really be too long to list. Her lively character won her the friendship of all and her absence will be deeply felt not only by her large and beautiful family but by her second family in this chamber because everywhere she happened to be during the 60 years of her career, she has always been the darling and the life of the party.

[English]

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I knew Josie Quart well. From the first time we began making committee studies of a nature that concerned her, she served on our committees. She served on the Committee on Aging from 1962 to 1966; on the Poverty Committee from 1968 to 1971; and on the Committee on Retirement Age Policies from 1977 to 1980.

• (2020)

Last Tuesday we called a meeting of the group together for the purpose of organizing speaking assignments in the house. She asked for ten minutes in which to make her contribution here. She was constant in her attendance at meetings, and you could always depend on her. She had a feeling for the poor and the needy and she made it her business to let us know that equality for women was one of the most important things we could deal with.

I remember particularly one occasion when the Poverty Committee was sitting in Quebec City. Senator Edgar Fournier was in the Chair. Senator Quart's grandson came before the committee. He was a bright young fellow and his views were a little different from the views which we had in the committee. I was sitting beside his grandmother so at least she could tell me what they were saying. She enjoyed it immensely. I got to know the boy pretty well after that, and, as I say, he was a fine boy. But this was one of the things that gave her pleasure.

She contributed a great deal, quietly and in her own way. She made it her business to be present when it was necessary for her to be present and the Senate and the country is poorer for losing her.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I trust that I may be allowed to join in these tributes to our late colleague Senator Josie Quart. She was one of those invincible personalities of whom it can truly be said that once one knows her, one will never forget her. I think we would describe her in some circles as "la grande dame du parti progressiste-conservateur dans la province de Québec," but there was no one political party nor indeed was there ever one province that could contain Josie Quart.

She had those virtues which we are now inclined to describe as old-fashioned patriotism. Some of the people who use that term may not mean to be very complimentary by it, but I certainly mean to be complimentary by it. She had a vision of the country, a love of the country, a knowledge of the country and a desire to work for the country, a desire which could not help but impress those who worked with her in her various fields of endeavour. We think of her perhaps as a party politician in this house, and that, of course, is true, but her work for the blind, her work which has been mentioned with respect to the status of women in the province of Quebec, and her interest in the activities of the United Nations gives some idea of the scope of her activities and her contribution to our Canadian scene.

I think she would be pleased to hear some speak tonight of her family, because there was nothing of which she was more proud than her family. Her five children and her even larger number of grandchildren whom I happen to know are spread across this country from Vancouver to Montreal and Quebec. They gave her a contact with the nation which was unique, and she epitomized those family virtues which I for one respect and admire.

She was a merry person, never down-hearted, always able to take the high road in whatever she had to do and in the views she had to express. She made friends with everyone who met her. I know that I express what all of us here feel, the hope that our words of appreciation and of condolence will be conveyed to the members of her family.

THE CABINET

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY IN THE SENATE

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government: I wonder if he is now prepared to make a statement, promised last Tuesday, as to the field of responsibility of each of the ministers sitting in the Senate.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I had sought an opportunity to discuss this matter with the distinguished Leader of the Opposition this afternoon. I left a message at his office. As yet it has not been possible to schedule that meeting. Perhaps time can be found tomorrow.

Senator Flynn: I tried to reach you by phone. You were unavailable.

FINANCE

INTEREST RATES—SERVICING OF NATIONAL DEBT

Hon. C. William Doody: I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. Due to the large increase in federal borrowing requirements as a result of yesterday's back-door budget, can the minister share with us the government's expectations as to the degree to which interest rates can be expected to be stimulated by this increased borrowing?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the Minister of Economic Development does not speculate on those things. The Minister of Finance makes some forecasts from time to time, which I think he dealt with yesterday. If he was not ready to deal with the matter yesterday, he will be as soon as he has studied the situation.

Senator Doody: I have a supplementary. Can we assume, then, that all the pragmatism of yesterday is unrepented and that we can now get back to hard facts? Perhaps the minister can tell the Senate what percentage of the revenues of the Government of Canada is now dedicated to servicing the national debt?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, if the honourable senator will read carefully the speech made in the House of Commons this afternoon by the President of the Treasury Board, he will receive some enlightenment, because the main estimates were tabled there. There are some changes—in fact, an increase in the neighbourhood of approximately $1 billion, before any of the programs that were announced by this government during the election campaign, has been taken into account. A major portion of that amount, of course, is additional costs of servicing the national debt.

Senator Doody: I have a further supplementary. I have not had an opportunity to read the document referred to by the minister, and obviously I am not in a position to comment on his reply. Perhaps he can tell us how large a percentage of revenue can be dedicated to debt servicing before the credit rating of a country, or the level of services that the public can expect to have, are affected. Is there a limit? Is 18 per cent the amount that can be safely carried, or is it 20 per cent or 25 per cent? Is there a level or limit?

Senator Olson: The honourable senator is obviously asking me to speculate. My view is that we were asked for factual information, and a reply to that question would not be in that category.

Senator Doody: I have a further supplementary. With respect, I do not think the subject of my question is at all speculative. There is a basic rule of business management that says how large a percentage of one's income can be dedicated to servicing a debt before one flips over. That is the point of my question.

Senator Olson: The speculation that I have heard in the past is that different people hold different opinions on what the level ought to be in respect to the GNP. The honourable senator is not even going that far, but if he does care to be more specific and call it income, or GNP, or whatever it may be, I can assure him that he is not going to get me to speculate about that tonight.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, evidently "speculation" is a word that is going to be used by the cabinet ministers from now on. It is the easiest way out of any question that might be embarrassing to them. We have heard a lot about "speculation" and "speculative" and I hope we will not hear too much more along those lines.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I did not detect any question in that speech. It seemed to me to be an admonition rather than a question.

Senator Doody: Would the honourable senator care to speculate as to whether or not we can expect to have answers to some of these questions during this session?

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF HIGH INTEREST RATES

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I would like to direct a question to the Honourable Senator Argue, the Minister of State or Secretary of State—I have difficulty getting the proper title, and if I err in that, sir, I ask your forgiveness.

All honourable senators will recall with admiration and respect the honourable senator's tenure as chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, his efforts on behalf of the beef producers of western Canada, the potato producers of Kent County, and so on. May I now remind him that all of the basic producers are in difficulty because of the exorbitant and record high interest rates which this government has achieved in a period of only two months.

Senator Perrault: Is this a speech?

Senator Phillips: No, it is not a speech. It is a review of some facts. I am merely trying to help Senator Argue out. I know you are rather envious of him because he has been given responsibility and you have not. If you do not mind, I would like to continue my question.

As I was saying, before the Minister of Irresponsibility interrupted, all the basic producers of this country, whether they be beef producers, wheat growers or potato growers, are in difficulty because of the exorbitant interest rates. Can the minister tell us what recommendation he has made to cabinet for the relief of the agricultural industry so that they will no longer have to pay these exorbitant rates?

If I may, honourable senators, I would like to point out that today I had a number of farmers from Prince Edward Island in my office, and they were saying that if they want to get a loan from a bank they must have a contract to sell to a corporate industry, and then they are required to pay interest of from 18.5 to 20.5 per cent. I would very much appreciate if the honourable senator would be kind enough to tell us what recommendations he has made to the cabinet.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I thank Senator Phillips for his question. With some of his preamble, of course, we can all agree, namely, that high interest rates today constitute a burden on many industries in the country, including the agricultural industry. There are methods in place that, in fact, have given producers the advantage of lower interest rates. The Farm Credit Corporation, for example, issues loans at interest rates lower than the prevailing bank rate in the country.

In my position as a minister, I am not at liberty to say what recommendations, if any, I have made to the cabinet in this regard. However, I can certainly say that I understand the difficulties which result from high interest rates, and I am sure the government also shares my concern. This question has been given attention and will continue to be given attention.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I am disappointed that the honourable minister has not yet made a recommendation to the cabinet. I have been associated with him both in the House of Commons and in this chamber for more years than I like to admit publicly—it is close to a quarter of a century. I would hope that with his expertise and his knowledge he will soon be in a position to make a recommendation to cabinet and advise this chamber of his recommendation.

My supplementary, honourable senators, deals with the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture of which the honourable minister used to be such an effective chairman. Would he recommend to the Senate that the Agriculture Committee study the difficult situation which has arisen because of high interest rates which adversely affect the agricultural industry. I should also like to know if he would agree to appear before that committee as an expert on the adverse effect of the present high interest rates.

Senator Argue: In reply, I may say that in my judgment the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture has performed well in the past and has provided a useful service to agricultural producers. My anticipation is that that committee will continue to play an important role. Obviously I have no control over that committee, but I would hope that it will be active in studying many of the very sensitive problems affecting the agricultural industry.

In my experience as chairman of that committee I can say that almost without exception—excluding perhaps a minor amendment—proposals and recommendations brought by that committee to the Senate asking for power for the committee to function have been approved by the Senate. I express the hope, as a member of this house, that the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture will continue to play that role and bring recommendations to the Senate. The Senate can then decide whether the committee will be given particular powers.

I would certainly be happy to appear before that committee on invitation. I do not really think I can appear in the role that Senator Phillips has suggested, namely, that of an expert on interest rates, but I would be happy to appear before that committee in my present capacity. I am sure that all honourable senators will co-operate with that committee so that it may continue to be effective and, perhaps, increase its effectiveness.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I thank the honourable minister again for his statement. After I have had an opportunity to study the Rules of the Senate, I intend to introduce a motion recommending that the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture study this matter. I anticipate the honourable minister's support in that regard.

I just want to make it clear—and I am sure that the honourable minister understood this from my previous question—that it applies to the broad spectrum of the agricultural industry in Canada. Does he agree in that regard?

Senator Argue: I agree with that.

ASSISTANCE FOR FARMERS

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, my question hopefully comes within the responsibility of Senator Argue. Last night the Minister of Finance took what was considered by many to be a fairly heavy slap at Canadian farmers when he cancelled provisions for the transfer of capital gains and farming assets to RRSPs. With farmers already suffering from recent high interest rates, could the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board tell us now what programs he expects the government to bring forth which would assist the beleaguered farmers in Canada?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): That is an announcement of government policy. That announcement will be made when the policy is ready to be made and the government decides it will be made, and I am not in a position tonight to announce any new government policies.

Senator Nurgitz: Is any thought being given to any provision that would at least partially meet the kind of relief that farmers received under the other proposal?

Senator Argue: All I can say is that agricultural policies, generally, are under consideration and when some conclusions have been arrived at as to new policies dealing with agriculture, and if it is in the agricultural field specifically, I expect the Minister of Agriculture will make that announcement. If it is something more of a financial policy, I expect the Minister of Finance will make the announcement. I do not expect I will be making it.

THE ECONOMY

DEVELOPMENT OF BASIC INDUSTRIES

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, my question is to the Minister of State for Economic Development. As he is, I am sure, well aware, the basic industries of this country such as farming and fishing are most important to economic development. Would he please explain to this chamber how he sees today's exorbitant interest rates contributing to that development?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have nothing to add to the reply that Honourable Senator Argue has already made.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I am sorry to hear that the minister's answer is as bankrupt as his bankrupt policy. Surely he can tell us how he expects a farmer to pay 20 per cent interest on the money he must borrow for fertilizers, insecticides and other farming necessities. I would point out that the farmers of this country borrow $1.5 billion per year from the banks for the purposes I have outlined, namely, to purchase fertilizer, insecticides and so on. That is only half of the amount needed; the other half they are able to provide themselves. Will the minister explain to us how having to pay 20 per cent interest on $1.5 billion per year is helping the development of the agricultural industry?

[Senator Argue.]

Senator Olson: I repeat that the government has given this matter a great deal of consideration. No one can deny that it is a hardship, not only for farmers but for fishermen, for people renegotiating mortgages on their homes, and for small, medium and, indeed, large businesses. I thought Senator Argue had expressed the views of the government, and said that this matter is under advisement. When we get directly to agricultural policy, or financial policy dealing with agricultural producers, we do not have an announcement to make tonight. We will certainly obtain one as soon as it is made by the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Finance, and I can assure the honourable senator that we will get that answer to him as quickly as possible.

AGRICULTURE

Hon. R. James Balfour: I wish to ask Senator Argue a question supplementary to that asked by Senator Nurgitz. Could Senator Argue indicate to us what were the specific policy considerations that the government implemented when they cancelled the exemption from tax of capital gains on farming assets transferred to RRSPs? Was it a question of equity? Was it a question of revenue? Specifically why was this measure put into place?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): I do not have those reasons at hand. I do not know if the explanation has been provided. I would be happy to take that question as notice, and if I can ascertain by research whether or not some reasons or explanations were given I should be happy to provide that for him.

Senator Balfour: I am sure the farmers of Saskatchewan would be extremely interested in a response of that kind.

Senator Murray: Is the minister suggesting that the decision announced by the Minister of Finance last night was not really a government decision taken by the cabinet collectively, but was rather a personal decision on his part?

Senator Argue: Not at all.

POTATO MARKETING

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I am sorry I cannot describe him as having any specific responsibility. I have often disagreed with the Prime Minister, and I disagree with him in not giving the Leader of the Government in the Senate any responsibility. I do not for one moment think that the Leader of the Government in the Senate is irresponsible. I am sure he is quite capable of taking responsibility if he were given the opportunity.

The Minister of Agriculture made an announcement concerning a marketing agency or marketing board for eastern potato producers. Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell this chamber the difference between a marketing agency and a marketing board; and could he also tell us when we can expect further details rather than the half-page announcement issued by the Minister of Agriculture?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, despite my vast experience in agriculture in the province of British Columbia, I nevertheless feel that under these circumstances I must ask my distinguished and learned colleague, Senator Argue, to explain the nuances of the difference between agricultural boards and agencies. I think this is the kind of collegial approach to the sharing of responsibility that we now have on this side of the Senate.

Senator Phillips: It is a convenient method of passing the buck, isn't it, Senator Argue?

Senator Flynn: He refuses the buck.

Senator Roblin: Where does the buck stop?

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

RENEWAL OF NORAD AGREEMENT—REFERENCE TO PARLIAMENT

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, when they stop passing the buck, perhaps I can put my question.

I should like to ask the Leader of the Government a question about the NORAD agreement, which is due for renewal in the very near future. Assuming that the government will agree to the extension of this practical and now popular accord originally signed by the government in office in 1958, will there be any reference to a parliamentary body of this important aspect of Canada's diplomatic and military commitment, and what form will such reference take?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): The honourable senator is, of course, quite right in surmising that the subject of an extension of the NORAD agreement is a matter that is now under discussion. I must, however, take the essence of the question as notice. I do not as yet know the plans for a discussion or debate in Parliament on that subject. I have mentioned before that it may well serve a very valuable national purpose to have a full debate in the Senate on the subject of foreign policy. I know the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, with his extensive background in external affairs and foreign policy, might wish to be an active participant in just such a debate. This is a suggestion that I offer at this time, which I know enjoys the support of many honourable senators.

"AFGHANISTAN AND THE OLYMPICS"—STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators are aware, of course, that today in the other place the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Honourable Mark MacGuigan, made an important statement on the subject of Afghanistan and the Olympics. If honourable senators see merit in the proposal, perhaps this statement could be appended to today's Debates of the Senate. It is an important statement and it may be a valuable document for reference purposes to have on our own record.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

FINANCE

STATEMENT BY MINISTER—ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF ATLANTIC REGION

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development. My question has to do with the omission from last night's "mini budget" of certain provisions included in the Honourable John Crosbie's budget. These provisions were of special concern to those interested in development in the Atlantic provinces. One of the omissions was the abandonment of the special incentives concerning construction of new fishing vessels, and another had to do with special arrangements with reference to new investment by firms beginning, or prepared to begin business, in those regions. That has to do with tax incentives, and so forth.

Is the minister aware of the reasons which compelled the government or persuaded the government to drop these badly needed provisions for the assistance of development in the Atlantic region, a region for which I heard him express some sympathy the other day?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, if Senator Smith has not seen the communiqué sent to his office by the minister, or if he has not read it yet, I can read part of it to him. There is one paragraph which deals with his concern. The minister stated:

> I am also not now making provisions for private corporations to be given tax contracts for investing in particular regions of the country. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion has considerable flexibility under existing legislation to support regional development. These mechanisms will naturally be under review, prior to the expiry of the legislation next year.

I assume that is the answer the honourable senator was seeking.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I thank the minister for referring me to the statement. It just happens that I had an opportunity to read it. However, that did not tell me the reasons why the government decided to drop these helpful provisions.

The question I am asking the minister is: What are the reasons, or are there any? The reasons are not given in the statement.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I think they are there, although I would not like to read them here now. Further on in the statement the Minister of Finance did explain the limitations of expenditure and the problems associated with them, not only for this program but many other programs as well.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Did you speak of limitations of expenditures?

Senator Olson: Yes.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I did not note any limitation of expenditures. The budget deficit for the current year appears to be, from reading his statement, very much larger than had been anticipated. In fact, I think those are the words he used, or nearly the words he used.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, if Senator Smith (Colchester) looks carefully at the communiqué, the minister's speech, or the comments made by the President of the Treasury Board in the House of Commons today, I am sure my honourable friend will find a complete statement as to the reasons. I am not suggesting he would agree with them, but they certainly are there.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Reasons for what, may I ask the minister? Surely it can't be reasons for reducing the expenditure, because, as just pointed out, it has been greatly increased.

Senator Flynn: By $2 billion.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, both ministers pointed out that there have been some obvious increases in the service charges for the national debt and, indeed, increases in a number of other areas. With the fiscal responsibility being displayed by this government, obviously some programs will have to be postponed.

I thought Senator Smith was asking me if there were some explanations in the two statements for that, and I suggested to him that there are. He may not agree with them, but they are there.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I thank the minister. I have now elicited from him that questions are speculative; that questions are hypothetical; and that questions relate to policy which will be announced at some vague time in the future, if ever. Further, I am told that if I refer to statements which have been issued by somebody else I might find the answer. I am beginning to suspect that it would be much simplier for the minister to say that he does not know the answers to the questions. This would save everybody's time.

Senator Olson: Senator Smith may wish to do that, and he is free to do that. If he were to do that he would be expressing another opinion with which I would disagree.

Senator Flynn: Why would you? It is quite obvious you do not know the answer.

TRANSFER OF CAPITAL GAINS ON SALE OF FARM ASSETS TO REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS

Hon. Lowell Murray: I should like to refer back to questions asked by Senators Nurgitz and Balfour concerning the transfer of capital gains on the sale of farming assets into RRSPs.

In view of the fact that the Minister of State responsible for the Wheat Board, who is Saskatchewan's representative in the federal cabinet, has confessed that he does not know the reason the decision was taken and will undertake some research to find out, I wonder whether the Minister of State for Economic Development, who is Alberta's representative in the federal cabinet, could give us an explanation as to why the decision was taken—or was he kept in the dark, too?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, it is not a matter of being kept in the dark. The Minister of Finance gave a brief explanation in his statement to the other place yesterday. He said that the provisions for transfer of capital gains on farming assets to RRSPs were going to be considered, along with other measures, in more detail. He said:

> I want to consider these and other measures in more detail, particularly in light of a wide discussion about the role and importance of taxation of capital gains. Therefore, I will be bringing forward a discussion paper on this subject.

Senator Murray may not agree with the answer, but that is a crystal-clear answer.

Senator Murray: You are both satisfied?

Hon. G. I. Smith: That he does not intend to do anything. It would take less words to say that.

GOVERNMENT BORROWING—EFFECT ON EXCHANGE VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, my question is for the Minister of State for Economic Development. The borrowing requirements for the fiscal year 1979-80 are around $10.4 billion. For the fiscal year 1980-81 it is anticipated that they will be somewhere in the area of $11.7 billion. The Crosbie projection and budget of a few months ago anticipated considerably less than that, namely, $8.2 billion.

In view of these horrendous amounts of money and the anticipated increase in borrowing necessary to achieve the budgetary expectations outlined last night, I wonder what the Government of Canada feels the impact will be on the value of the Canadian dollar during the coming months?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators with the greatest of respect, I have to tell you again that I am not going to speculate on the value of the Canadian dollar or what interest rates might be. When forecasts are made in this respect, they will be made by the Minister of Finance with support and advice from officials in his department. If and when I do know these forecasts—and I do keep up with these matters—I will be prepared to inform the Senate of them.

As I said before, if honourable senators think I am going to speculate on matters that are clearly the responsibility of the Minister of Finance, they are wrong.

Senator Doody: A supplementary question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. Is it possible the minister is telling us that the Government of Canada arrived at these incredibly large numbers, these huge decisions of last night, without any anticipation or projection as to what effect they will have on the dollar or what effect they would have on interest rates? Is it possible that these decisions were arrived at in complete ignorance of these possibilities?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am sure that the Minister of Finance and his advisers took all of those things into account, and very seriously took them into account.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Is the minister telling us that all of these decisions were taken by the Minister of Finance without consultation with his colleagues in the exercise of collegial responsibility which the Leader of the Government was just talking to us about?

Senator Olson: No, that is not so. Given the content of the question and the manner in which it was put, the Honourable Senator Doody was asking me to speculate on it, and I am not prepared to do so.

Senator Doody: A supplementary, honourable senators. If my manner has disturbed the honourable minister in any way, I apologize to the Senate and to the very tender pride of the minister. I am sure that, as the session progresses, things will toughen up and tighten up, and we will become more congenial.

The point I was trying to get at—and I have obviously not expressed it very well—is whether or not the decisions arrived at and announced last night in the "budget" were decisions arrived at by the cabinet in concert with the Minister of Finance speaking last night on behalf of the government.

On the basis that the minister was speaking on behalf of the government, I assumed—and perhaps I am wrong—that his cabinet colleagues would be familiar with the reasoning behind the programs and policies that were enunciated last evening. If that is incorrect, then I stand corrected.

Senator Olson: Perhaps you do stand corrected. I think it ought to be clear that the matters dealt with in the economic statement made by the Minister of Finance are obviously matters that the entire government takes responsibility for. There is no doubt about that. If there is a question as to effects, such as the value of the dollar and a number of other things, I would be glad to take it as notice.

I apologize for misunderstanding the honourable senator's question in the first instance. I thought he wanted me to speculate, or to give my opinion on some of those things.

I should comfort him by saying that I do not have a thin skin. I do not feel any annoyance at all. Indeed, if I were on the other side of the house, I might be doing precisely what he is trying to do now.

An Hon. Senator: You have.

NATIONAL DEBT—COST OF FINANCING

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, the Minister of State for Economic Development, in replying to a question from Senator Smith (Colchester), stated that the increased deficit was due, in large part, to the high cost of financing the national debt.

Would the honourable minister explain to this chamber how it is we are faced with increased costs in financing the national debt when the Liberal Party campaigned against increased interest rates and, in fact, promised lower rates? According to the Liberal campaign platform, we should have a lower deficit and lower interest rates.

There is a rather strange contradiction, and I am sure it is a difficult one to explain, but I would love to hear the honourable minister try to explain it.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I think it is something of an exercise in futility for one party or another to make some of these claims. It is a bit like the kettle calling the pot black. It seems to me that the opposition made similar statements respecting interest rates leading up to the May 22 election. However, when faced with the responsibilities of office, they were making the same speeches that were made by the government they defeated.

I do not recall that the Liberal Party made any promise that it would intervene in the market to force interest rates down. I am sure we did not say that. We did remind the government of the day, however, when we were in opposition, that it had made certain promises with respect to interest rates which, when faced with the responsibilities of office, it was unable to keep.

There have been statements made on both sides while in opposition with respect to that specific item. However, when one takes office, one finds that there are a number of other factors involved.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I followed the election campaign from the sidelines, shall I say, and certainly the fact of high interest rates was used continually to condemn the previous government. Now the honourable minister states that after a six-month period there is a difference, to the point where he no longer thinks it is that important.

Did the minister ever read the Liberal campaign platform promise on interest rates and, if so, would he relate it to today's high interest rates?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the only thing I can add to what has already been said in respect of this matter is that I not only read it, but accept full responsibility for being part of the committee that designed it.

Senator Phillips: You should be ashamed, but I admire your honesty.

FISCAL POLICIES—GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN IN SENATE

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I appreciate the difficulties that my honourable friend the Minister of State for Economic Development has in reconciling his position on the government side these days with the position he took when on this side of the house, and I recognize his excuse that circumstances alter cases and that—

Senator Perrault: Explanation; not excuse.

Senator Roblin: It sounded like an excuse to those of us on this side. In any event, I recognize that. While I am not prepared to condone it, I am prepared to overlook it for the time being. But what I want to ask the minister is this: Does he not recognize that he has some responsibility to explain in this house what the policy of the government is in these important public matters?

We are told that he cannot give us the answer here; that some other minister is going to do so. But somebody, I think, should be expected to explain the government's financial policies in this chamber. To try to fit together the gleanings from the speeches and press releases is exceedingly difficult.

I am very much interested in the point raised by Senator Doody in respect of debt management. What is the policy of the government on debt management? How does it relate the fact that it is going to have to borrow more money than ever before in the history of this country to the general economic structure in which it is trying to operate? Is the minister prepared at some point to make a statement explaining how he relates the amount that he has to borrow to the problems of the Canadian dollar?

Surely some preparation was made to deal with these problems in advance of this "semi budget" or whatever it is that was brought down last evening. Someone has estimated what the Canadian market will bear in respect of providing this financing; someone has an idea as to whether or not any of it will have to be borrowed abroad. Surely somebody has considered whether there is any room left for the private sector in the Canadian financial markets when these demands are met, and someone has to consider of what relevance the fact is that the deficit is going to be 25 per cent or more of the budget, with interest costs rising to 15 per cent of our national expenditure. Those are all matters of high policy.

Perhaps in the Question Period we cannot elicit answers, but my honourable friend gives me the impression that he does not intend to provide any answers. He says if we expect him to speculate or, if we expect him to deal with hypothetical questions, we are not going to get anywhere. Well, perhaps not, but I would ask him whether he would be prepared at any early date to come to this chamber and to lay before us the fiscal policy of the government, and, as far as I am concerned, the policy with special reference to financing the government debt.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, it seems to me that the answer to that question is clear. Senator Roblin has said that "someone is going to do this and someone is going to consider that" and so on. The answer is, "Yes someone is going to do it, and it is going to be the Minister of Finance, not me."

It is pretty clear from the statement of the minister who has the major responsibility for considering the fiscal framework as well as from that of the President of the Treasury Board, that the fiscal framework even for fiscal 1980-81 has not been fully considered and determined by the Minister of Finance or by the government as a whole. I would tell the honourable senator as clearly as I can that I and my colleagues will undertake the responsibility of bringing those projections into this house. But when I am asked to do the job of the Minister of Finance—and it does not matter whether I am asked from 20 different angles—I will tell you that I am not going to do it.

Senator Roblin: With due respect, honourable senators, we are not asking any gentleman on the other side to do somebody else's job, but we are saying we have responsible government in this country, and we are saying that we have a majority party in the Senate, and we are saying that there are three cabinet ministers representing the government sitting here. Now we must look to them, I suggest, for the elucidation of government policy, and I ask my honourable friend if he is prepared to undertake that responsibility.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I said that my colleagues and I will bring those answers and those explanations and the fullest information possible into this house as soon as the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board have made them on behalf of the government to the other place or in public statements. They will all be brought in here. But it seems to me you are asking us to lead, and we are not the responsible ministers to take those leading roles. That seems perfectly clear to me.

Senator Roblin: It is becoming clearer and clearer to me as well, honourable senators. But I take it from my honourable friend's statement that he agrees with me that he has a responsibility to present government policy in this house.

Senator Olson: Yes, but not leading other ministers' responsibilities.

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, perhaps if the honourable gentleman cannot reconcile his party's campaign promises with what happened last night, his memory will at least extend to that collegial but very poorly authored document which we heard His Excellency read the other morning in which it was said:

> My Government will reduce the federal deficit in a planned and orderly manner—

How would he reconcile that with the increase in the deficit which the Minister of Finance announced last night, the very first time he spoke about this problem?

Senator Olson: Certainly, honourable senators. The Minister of Finance said that he is not prepared now to set the fiscal framework for even fiscal 1980-81 because he has not had time to consider all of the implications. He went on to say a few other things about the importance of the national energy policy, the oil import compensation costs and a number of other things that are involved in this package. I am sure my honourable friend would not expect this government, after the short period of time it has been in office, to come forward with a total responsible fiscal policy, when friends opposite and their colleagues in the other place were in office right up to and including the budget speech on December 11, and they could not tell us what the position was going to be with respect to a very large item in that budget, namely, the energy policy, and the prices related to that policy.

Senator Smith (Colchester): If the honourable gentleman can confuse a few days with 50 days in office, then I must admit that he can do some fancy confusing work with figures. But all I asked him was how you go about reducing the deficit by increasing it.

Senator Olson: It seems to be fairly simple to me. The honourable gentleman, of course, wants to confuse things still further. Whatever was there on March 3 or 4, when this government took over, was there. We could not change that. And one of the things that has been pointed out over and over again was the massive increase from December 11 in two very important sectors, one being the debt service charges and the other being the oil import compensation payments. We had no control of that. Would you want us to refrain from acknowledging that that is part of the expenditure?

Senator Smith (Colchester): You would have been far more frank with the people if you had acknowledged that at the time you were asking them to believe something else.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question to that asked by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition. In reply to that the honourable minister stated that he had no responsibility for economic policy. Will he explain to this chamber why he is as irresponsible as the Leader of the Government in the Senate?

Senator Frith: The question apparently is directed to the Deputy Leader of the Opposition.

Senator Phillips: It was based on his question. Could I please have an answer to my question? Why is the Minister of State for Economic Development—I am never sure of his function—but why is he as irresponsible as the Leader of the Government in the Senate?

Senator Olson: I don't think either one of us is irresponsible.

THE CABINET

Hon. G. I. Smith: I wonder if the Minister of State for Economic Development could tell us whether there is a committee or some other organization within the cabinet called the Policy and Priorities Board or Policy and Priorities Committee?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I think I would take that question as notice. I am not sure. I have not checked out the rules at this stage, and it may be that there is more public information available. I say that very sincerely. But from the experience I had ten or 12 years ago when I was in the cabinet the last time, the composition of cabinet committees and indeed the assignment of work within them was not considered public information.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I have no objection whatever to the minister's taking it as notice, but I should like to ask him also, if he is prepared to answer the question eventually, to indicate to us the members of that Board and what its duties are, so we know who is formulating the policy which may or may not have some influence upon the cabinet as a whole.

Senator Olson: I cannot give the honourable senator that kind of undertaking, because I have not the authority to do so. But the honourable senator can take it from me, even tonight, that the whole cabinet takes responsibility for all of the decisions that are made by all of the committees.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I am not talking about who takes responsibility. I am talking about who makes policy for which you poor fellows have to take the responsibility.

Senator Olson: The full cabinet takes the responsibility and, indeed, makes the policy.

Senator Smith (Colchester): So the honourable gentleman is, in any event, going to take the question as notice, serious notice, and give us an answer, or some reason why he cannot give an answer.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Of course, honourable senators are aware that the previous government on no occasion announced the makeup of various cabinet committees, unless the honourable senator is willing to share that list now ex post facto with the members of the Senate.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I don't know that it was ever asked to give the list. I am simply asking if there is such a body and, if so, what it does and who belongs to it. If the honourable gentlemen opposite, upon reflection, feel that they do not wish to disclose the names or existence of such a committee, that is up to them.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, perhaps I misinterpreted the question Senator Smith put, but for clarification I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate a question concerning the committees on which the three members of the cabinet serve, and concerning the responsibilities of those committees. I do not think that intrudes on cabinet secrecy.

For instance, it should be common knowledge what committees the Honourable Senator Perrault serves on, and, after seeing the television news in which he blasted the local Liberal executives, I am sure they, too, would like to know what committees he serves on. So would I. I would also like to know what cabinet committees the Minister of Economic Development serves on. I have a sneaking suspicion it is very few.

Then, of course, there is my honourable friend the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, and in his case I may find, in answer to my question, that he serves on the fisheries board. I don't know.

In other words, I should like to know specifically what cabinet committees the three Senate members, who are deified within that specific cabinet circle, serve on.

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator is demonstrating an insatiable thirst for information this evening. I can only say that the information which he has requested is not available, and has never been made available by any Government of Canada; nor will it be made available on this occasion. But it can be said that those members of the Senate who have positions of cabinet responsibility are fully occupied from dawn to dusk in the public interest of Canadians.

Senator Phillips: Do you mean that the Prime Minister has not told you what committees you serve on? He has not told the Minister of State for Economic Development which committees he serve on—or the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board? Surely it is time, honourable senators—or honourable ministers, I should say—it is about time you asked the Prime Minister exactly what cabinet committees you are on. Will you do that, and let us know?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PURCHASE OF F-18A AIRCRAFT

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have an answer to Senator Charbonneau's question of April 17, when he asked if the minister could account for the discrepancy between spokesmen for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and McDonnell Douglas with respect to the number of indirect jobs generated by the contract?

The reply is as follows:

> It is extraordinary if two economists ever agree on the ratio of direct to indirect jobs created by a project such as the NFA.
> Officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce used a multiplier of 2.4 to 2.8: that is to say, 1.4 to 1.8 indirect jobs per every direct job generated.
> The number of direct jobs generated—prorated on an annual basis—is 4,000. Using the above formula, this will result in 5,600 to 7,200 indirect jobs for a total of 9,600 to 11,200 jobs, direct and indirect.
> I am not in a position to explain or defend figures provided by McDonnell Douglas if, indeed, they are at variance with our own. Perhaps the variance is the result of a misinterpretation by the press of the McDonnell Douglas figures.

I also have the answer to a question put by the Honourable Senator Duff Roblin, when he asked if the Minister was aware of a statement made by the President of the Air Industries Association of Canada to the effect that the members of the industry would require government support in order to undertake the F-18A contract work. He wanted to know if the minister confirmed its accuracy and what criteria would be used by the government.

The reply is as follows:

> The government has a range of industry assistance programs already in existence which can be of benefit to the aerospace industry as well as other sectors. They include such programs as DIPP, the Defence Industry Productivity Program; EDP, the Enterprise Development Program, and RDIA, the Regional Development Incentives Act.
> The honourable senator has not correctly understood the contract with McDonnell Douglas. Any assistance provided through the above programs to aerospace firms carrying out NFA offset work is not "extra" costs; rather, through DIPP and other programs, the government is covering the startup costs of companies carrying out specific contract work for McDonnell Douglas.
> In terms of specific criteria of assistance programs such as EDP and DIPP, I would refer you to my colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce under whose direction these programs are administered. Suffice it to say, in the administration of these programs as well as in the negotiation of the NFA contract, our goal has been to advance the technological capability and volume of Canadian business.

Honourable senators, I have a reply to another question by Senator Charbonneau, again on April 17, when he asked if the minister could explain the discrepancy between statements made by a representative of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and a representative of McDonnell Douglas with respect to the number of direct jobs generated by the NFA contract?

As you can see, the question is slightly different from the one I answered before, because what I read before related to indirect jobs and this answer relates to direct jobs. The answer is:

> I stand by the estimate of officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce that activities generated through the NFA contract will provide between 60,000 and 70,000 person-years of direct work over the life of the contract.
> The contract is over a 15-year period, prorated on an annual basis. That means about 4,000 direct jobs per year and that is a very conservative estimate of what might ultimately turn out to be as high as 5,000 jobs per year.
> We are not in disagreement with McDonnell Douglas as to the projected overall number of direct jobs to be generated by the contract.
> The contract is of a long-term, competitive nature with the result that some of these figures, in any event, cannot as yet be predicted with complete accuracy.
> In order to get the best possible deal for Canada, our federal negotiators invariably estimated conservatively potential benefits accruing from the two contending packages. This may account for the difference between the two figures quoted by the honourable senator.

FINANCE

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS—INTEREST RATE AND REDEMPTIONS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have a written reply ready for the Honourable Senator Doody respecting the question he asked about the redemption and competitive factor of Canada Savings Bonds. The answer is rather lengthy and if honourable senators agree I will place it on the record as having been read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Olson: Senator Doody asked:

> Will the minister indicate what steps the government has taken or intends to take to make Canada Savings Bonds competitive with the investment interest rates in the private sector?

He then asked this supplementary question:

> What is the current rate of investor redemption? How many bonds and of what value have been redeemed or cashed in to date this year and how does that compare with redemption for the previous two years?

The reply is as follows:

> The present redemption trends with respect to Canada Savings Bonds are being carefully monitored by the government. No decision has been taken to improve the yield on outstanding issues, all of which presently pay 12 per cent in the year ending November 1, 1980, and 10½ per cent each year thereafter to maturity either through a cash bonus payment at maturity or at the time the bond is redeemed.
> While the present level of Canada Savings Bonds redemption is considerably higher than normal, any decision with respect to a change in the yield on these bonds would have to be taken in consideration of the best interests of the taxpayers as well as the holders of Canada Savings Bonds. In view of the very high level of interest rates presently prevailing, a yield adjustment on Canada Savings Bonds would be very costly to the government and might well exceed the cost of substituting other forms of government debt to offset the loss of funds now occurring as a result of Canada Savings Bonds encashments.
> In response to the honourable senator's supplementary question regarding the current rate of investor redemption and how many bonds and of what value have been redeemed or cashed in to date this year, I wish to state that to date in the calendar year 1980 gross Canada Savings Bonds redemptions have been about $1.3 billion. Over a similar period in the calendar year of 1979 and 1978 gross Canada Savings Bonds redemptions were about $975 million and $355 million respectively.

ASSISTANCE TO SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question posed by Senator Muir on Thursday, April 17, related to SYSCO. The question was:

> Will the minister indicate just how soon some possible financial assistance might be forthcoming for the Sydney Steel Corporation?

The reply is as follows:

> I wish to assure the honourable senator that the Government recognizes the importance of employment at SYSCO to the economy of Sydney, Cape Breton, in particular and to Nova Scotia and the Atlantic Region.
> Since 1977 the Government of Canada, through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, and the Government of Nova Scotia have provided joint funding in an amount of $27 million for projects relating to capital work and equipment at SYSCO as well as for business planning studies. These business studies were aimed at seeking means of developing a self-sufficient steel industry for Cape Breton.
> This government reaffirms its willingness to discuss viable future options for Sydney Steel with the Government of Nova Scotia and with management of Sydney Steel Corporation. We are awaiting further information from the Government of Nova Scotia and management at SYSCO. Meanwhile, officials of both governments are continuing discussions.

ASSISTANCE TO AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I ask a supplementary question of the honourable the minister respecting government assistance to the aerospace industry? I take it from what he read that there are no new programs envisaged as being necessary in that connection?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, there are no new programs that are being designed. I would want to examine the question more closely, but there may be some additions under existing programs such as have been described. I am not certain that all that was under way has been completely approved and announced.

It is not a new program, but it may be an extension of a program such as DIPP or RDIA, but no new specific programs for that fighter aircraft acquisition.

Senator Roblin: I thank the honourable the minister. My feeling is that some of the current programs will be developed to the point where one might say that this really is a new concept or a new aspect of the matter we are pursuing. I would appreciate any information that can be obtained.

My second question, which I believe was involved in my first, is: What will be the cost of this, because while these various programs may have been in place for some time, obviously when a new program of this magnitude is introduced, I suspect it will alter the financial contribution and will be much greater than would otherwise be the case.

What new money, under whatever program, will be found by the Government of Canada to help the aerospace industry in this connection?

Senator Olson: I believe I understand the implications involved in the question, and I shall try to provide a reply.

Senator Roblin: Thank you.

TWO-PRICE WHEAT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Second reading of the Bill S-6, intituled: "An Act to amend the Two-Price Wheat Act".—(Honourable Senator Argue, P.C.).

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I ask a question in connection with Bill S-6? When is it the intention of the government to proceed with the debate on this bill?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I cannot answer that question specifically, but if the honourable senator will ask it tomorrow, Senator Argue, who has just left the chamber, may be able to enlighten him.

Senator Roblin: Perhaps the honourable the minister might ask him.

Senator Olson: Yes.

Order stands.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Retirement Age Policies, entitled Retirement Without Tears, tabled in the Senate on Tuesday, April 15, 1980.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, my first words must be of congratulation to His Honour the Speaker. I knew His Honour for many years when he was associated with the labour movement. He was recognized for being always dedicated to the union. He served the movement well for many years and since then has held many important positions. We mortals play many parts during the course of our lives, and Senator Marchand has had wide experience and has done well. We look forward to his leadership in the Senate in his capacity as Speaker, and I congratulate him on his appointment.

I wish also to pay tribute to Senator Grosart, who held the office of Speaker of the Senate for much too short a time but who nevertheless enriched that office during his tenure. He was faced with an unusual situation, with three honourable senators holding cabinet positions, and there is no doubt that he controlled the Question Period extremely well. He is a traditionalist, a student of parliamentary procedure, and he made some innovations. It can fairly be said that it was a good year for Senator Grosart and for the Senate while he was in office.

Referring now to the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Retirement Age Policies, I cannot emphasize too clearly that the report is the result of the dedication of the members of the committee. The report, entitled Retirement Without Tears, is a human document. It is not one that has been spewed out by a computer. It is the product of the members of that committee.

The special committee recommended the abolition of mandatory retirement based on age, the doubling of the Canada Pension Plan benefits, and the extension of the system to cover six million housewives. The committee also proposed ways of improving the position of mobile workers.

Honourable senators found on their desks today a study entitled The Retirement Income System in Canada, which was made by some very competent public servants. This document is of considerable comfort to the members of the committee, because it repeats what we said. It may say it better, and perhaps more often—"Here are the alternatives, and you choose". And we chose them. We knew the alternatives.

Quoting from the press, the Montreal Gazette's headline is: "Retirement grim if pensions go unprotected, says report", and the Ottawa Journal's headline is: "Pensions mean poverty, grim report reveals." The report to which I have just referred is an excellent one and worthy of honourable senators' attention. It supports us in almost every respect.

None of the recommendations contained in the report of the special committee will involve any cost to the government, either provincial or federal. It will not cost the government a penny or a nickel—not even a plug nickel. The workers' premiums will be money that will be saved. It will be invested, it will be indexed, and from it will come pensions and other benefits. It is a form of non-inflationary savings. The employer's contribution will be less than that paid in any other western country.

Here are some 36 recommendations. I would like the permission of the house to have them appended to today's Hansard.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Croll: What I particularly wanted to get across to this house, and to the country, is that this is not just another report. I do not say it is any better than other reports that have been presented, but in politics timing is vital, and the report indicates, as you will realize from what I have told you about the report presented by the government authorities, that the committee, so to speak, is "with it". We are presenting a report to the Senate, but it deals with more than just the problem of compulsory retirement and pensions. It opens the door to a more just society.

Let me just draw a picture for you. The 1950s were dedicated to the youth of this country. They were the fellows who said you couldn't trust anyone over 30, and that anybody over 40 ought to be shot, or something like that. Of course, when they turned 40 they cooled down a bit and joined the world in the ordinary way. The 1960s in this country were years dedicated to the civil liberties movement. We devoted our time to that and made considerable progress. I am sure you remember that well. The 1970s were devoted to the rights of women, and great progress was made in that area.

As for the 1980s, you remember the Prime Minister's words when he took office. He said, "Welcome to the eighties." What I am suggesting is that we now lead the way in that respect, and indicate that the 1980s are for the aged. We have already had some indication of that. On the back burner in this country at the present time there are problems which affect the aged very intimately—the need for increased income, adequate pensions with universality, the ratio of workers to pensioners, medicare and the assurance that it will continue and on a basis of universality, and finally, selectivity in pensions, so that people can pay for their own pensions. The Speech from the Throne indicated that one of the first things we will deal with is income for the aged. There was also provision for dealing with pensions and the right to work.

The time for dealing with the problems that the elderly face is now. They must be dealt with now. Old age is not something that has been newly invented; but it has been newly discovered because of the remarkable rapid changes in the mix of our population. A 65-year-old man can expect to live another 13 years, and a 65-year-old woman 18 years. This is due in large measure to the advancement in medical knowledge, and in this respect, of course, medicare, in its broadest concept, has served us remarkably well. We must see to it that this service remains available to the rich and the poor alike on an equal basis, and that it remains for all time on a universal basis. We hear talk of deterrent charges, but that always adversely affects the poor. I am one of those who believes in universality. I would rather have abuse than non-use of medicare.

The post-war baby boom will soon become the geriatric boom—the elderly population bulge—that will affect us in every respect. Retaining the retirement age of 65 means that a large part of the population will have to be supported by those who are working. Already perhaps three-quarters of our pensioners are living in poverty. We must not allow retirement and poverty to become synonymous. We must see to it that old age is not an affliction for its possessor, nor a burden to anyone else. After all, nothing happened to you or me when we reached 65. The day after that birthday we were just as good as the day before. It is hardly an excuse to use the calendar.

Retirement policies in Canada are inadequate, have been discriminatory and sometimes cruel, and mandatory retirement based on age is an infringement of human rights. It is a myth that old people lose their intelligence and physical capacity upon attaining the magical age of 65. The process of aging is not the same for all individuals. We concluded that the abolition of mandatory retirement is a badly needed social policy in Canada.

Given the statistics of today's society, the awakening to the quality of life for seniors cannot come too soon. At the present time over 2 million, or 9 per cent of the Canadian population, is aged 65 or more; 65 per cent of the single people and 11 per cent of married couples are living on incomes below the poverty level established by Statistics Canada.

I came across a statistic that I think will be new to you and of interest. When the Senate was asked by the Economic Council to study poverty, the ratio of poverty across Canada was 22 to 24 per cent. Family poverty is now at 11 per cent. This is due to women joining the labour force and the lower birth rate. We are also deriving great benefits from important social services such as medicare, which is now available to the people of Canada.

Two out of three Canadians who are 65 years or more do not have access to job-related pensions or the Canada Pension Plan. There is a complete new number of "young old" in this country, and they demand some recognition. The edict of retirement at age 65 has created a new stratum in our society. We do not have a bed of juvenile delinquents, but a bed of growing-old delinquents. Perhaps the best expression used in connection with compulsory retirement was given by Dr. Hans Selye, the founder and president of the International Stress Institute in Montreal, when he said, "It's just fine as long as it doesn't interfere with my work." We must not allow retirement and poverty to become synonymous.

The first question dealt with by the committee was, naturally, mandatory retirement. The question of compulsory retirement, usually at 65, is far from simple. It has become embedded in personal practices, especially pension policy, that any sudden change creates problems. On the other hand, many people are not ready to retire at 65. Their health is good and their minds are clear. They are productive members of society, and to force them into retirement is wilful waste which we cannot afford. What may have been suitable for the industrial and commercial world 50 years ago, when management relied on the calendar to assess personal usefulness, is unacceptable today. We cannot afford the waste involved in the loss of skilled and industrial capacity. In the near future it is expected that there will be urgent demands for skilled workers. Even now we have to import some of our skilled workers. It will be both prudent and essential to preserve our present skilled workers intact as part of our human capital.

One thing has emerged clearly, and that is that retirement is a complex subject. This was confirmed by witnesses who provided expert testimony to the committee over a period of months.

The report I tabled in this chamber the other day is a distillation of many hours of hearings and deliberations by a group of distinguished senators. "Distinguished" is the proper word, for they worked harder than any group I have ever been associated with. The report also reflects the views of a great many specialists.

In one sense this report may be looked upon as the last of a trilogy. First there was the report of the Special Senate Committee on Aging in 1966, which recommended the reduction of the age limit from 70 to 65. This was accepted by the government, and it augmented that with the guaranteed income supplement. Together they made a considerable contribution. It is well to note that 50 per cent of those receiving the old age pension are receiving the guaranteed income supplement. That supplement is based on need, which means there is a great need which we have not met.

Senator Hicks: What was the percentage?

Senator Croll: Fifty per cent.

Senator Hicks: Half?

Senator Croll: Yes.

Then, in 1971, we had the Special Senate Committee on Poverty. It is interesting to note that we sold 26,000 copies of that report, and we are still selling 1,000 a year. It is a recognized textbook in universities and high schools, and wherever sociology is taught. The needs of the poor have earned a place on the agenda. In addition to that, the report established a poverty line which has been updated from time to time, circulated, and given recognition. This is so realistic that it is being used by active bargainers in arbitration proceedings.

There has been a continual commitment by the Senate to the less fortunate in this country who, by now, must be aware of our interest and concern. If anyone is unaware of our concern for the poor and retirees, I remind them that in the last 17 years we devoted three years to the study of aging and achieved good results; three years to the study of poverty; and two years to the study of retirement policies and pensions.

A day or so before the report was placed before you, the government was already dealing with two of the subject matters on which we placed greatest emphasis—more money and pensions, and how they affect people generally. For eight out of the last 17 years we have studied these problems in depth to the benefit of the poor, the old and the needy people of Canada, which is all to the credit of Parliament and particularly to the Senate. Substantial progress has been made, but I would be the first to admit that there are still unattained goals.

In the present report there are recommendations concerning both the next century and the next year, and they are often intertwined. That is why I am trying to get across to the people of Canada that the 1980s are for the aged.

The steady increase in the number of Canadians over 65 raises some new problems and necessitates some new approaches. Not only do the elderly have their specialized needs in society, but society also has many demands to make upon the elderly, who are sources of wisdom, understanding and tradition.

The attitude of the elderly to retirement is undoubtedly changing as economic conditions and opportunities change. We are not immune to the changes that are occurring in other parts of the world. For example, the change in the law in the United States, extending the mandatory retirement age to 70, has some spill-over in this country. This is evident in the new collective bargaining agreement of the automobile industry which increases the age of compulsory retirement to 70. The master agreement which covered all automobile manufacturers in the United States also applied to Canadian workers. Therefore, the United Automobile Workers agreed to the retirement age of 70 in accordance with their agreement, and they are bound by it.

At one time there was a rough rule of thumb that one-third of those reaching the age of 65 would keep on working, one-third would retire before the age of 65 and one-third would retire at the age of 65. This is no longer true. It is indicated that now nearer 50 per cent want to stay on. Certainly freedom of choice would lead to better and more fruitful lives for the elderly. The contention that doing away with mandatory retirement will keep the young people out of jobs was refuted by the young, and proved by all possible information to be untenable. We heard evidence from a student group who said, "We are not for mandatory retirement. We will get our jobs in due course." They took the same attitude in the United States, and we heard something about that. However, now and again the old argument was brought up.

I am now going to refer to the Gallup Poll, if any honourable members opposite still believe in the Gallup Poll. The Gallup Poll of March 15 asked this question:

> Some companies insist on a person retiring when he or she reaches the age of 65—regardless of health. Do you think this is or is not a good idea?

In 1966, 49 per cent thought it was a good idea; in 1973, 43 per cent thought so; today 35 per cent think so. Those who thought it was not a good idea comprised 47 per cent in 1966, 52 per cent, in 1977, and 59 per cent today. There are always some "don't knows", but they comprise a small percentage. This is what is interesting. Of those between the ages of 18 and 29 today, 30 per cent thought it was a good idea; 65 per cent thought it was not a good idea, which is almost twice as many in that age group. In the age group from 30 to 49, 34 per cent thought it was a good idea; 59 per cent thought it was not a good idea. Of those over 50 years old, 40 per cent thought it was a good idea and 53 per cent thought it was not a good idea. Therefore, that contention, whatever merit it once had, just did not hold up.

The title Retirement Without Tears was not chosen by chance but for a very good reason. Far too many of our older citizens suffer during their retirement; far too many see their dignity eroded; far too many cannot afford even the bare necessities of decent old age. Those of us who served on the special committee over the last two years do not have to be told how difficult it is for many people to grow old. The tough question was: What can be done about the situation?

In looking at this question of post-retirement income the committee noted one problem that was a source of great concern, and it had to do with private pension plans. The coverage of private pension plans is inadequate, and all too often the amounts of private pensions are small. According to a survey conducted by Health and Welfare Canada relating to the income of those over 65 in 1975, 74 per cent of the elderly unmarried men and 60 per cent of elderly couples got no private pension based on previous employment. I am told that has not changed. It is even more revealing to note that only 13 per cent of 1975 incomes of elderly couples over 65 years of age came from private pensions; 52 per cent came from social security; 13 per cent from private pensions and 35 per cent from personal savings. It is not that the head of the household did not wish to provide for his wife and children. He did the best he could. He was constantly striving against a system, and in the end he was beaten by the system.

So far as it affects family pensions, the system needs at least altering at the present time, and our recommendations would alter it so that never again will people be able to come before an audience like the special committee and talk about 680,000 women and close to 500,000 men who are receiving supplementary assistance, and many thousands more who are not receiving anything at all, and are not eligible.

For those who are careless and less thoughtful of their families, who try to save money by avoiding survivors' benefits, we want to make it impossible for them to do it again. The disparity is not acceptable. It makes it difficult for elderly people and couples, and doubly difficult for widows. The number of poor old women in this country is scandalous. Often in the social welfare departments they are referred to as the four Ds—divorced, disabled, deserted and deceased husbands. In 1978 there were roughly 680,000 women and close to 500,000 men receiving the guaranteed income supplement. This is a situation that demands immediate and sympathetic attention. Part of the problem is that in the past women have been discriminated against in the labour market, and their participation in the private pension system suffers as a result.

Another dreary feature of private pension plans is that a number of them permit husbands to eliminate survivors' benefits from the pensions. This is guaranteed to impoverish a lot of widows. One expert witness explained the reason. Few employees take the option to provide for pension benefits in their pension plans. He said, frankly, "When a male is retiring and his pension is not too good to start with, he is not going to reduce it by 40 or 50 per cent; he is going to gamble on his future." What the witness neglected to say was that he was really gambling with the future of his wife, or his widow.

There is doubtless a role for private pensions, but they seem to offer little to people with average or slightly above average incomes. There is a very strong argument for relying exclusively on the public pension system and other forms of public income in support of those earning less than roughly $20,000 a year. The basic weakness of private pensions is the lack of coverage and the inadequate protection against the inroads of inflation.

It is interesting to know something of the history of the Canada Pension Plan. There were 12 members from the Senate on the joint committee. Senator Flynn, Senator Denis and I are the only ones now in the Senate. Parliament was anxious for a pension plan of some kind and the Senate was very supportive of this measure, but it could not be effective until two-thirds of the provinces, containing two-thirds of the population, had approved it. Ontario was the key and Ontario was reluctant to enter into it. The insurance lobby was very heavy. They did not want the government to enter into the field, and they brought as much pressure as they could on the Ontario government. For a while, we were not sure that Ontario would go along, but finally a compromise was reached. We would accept for the present a minimum pension which would require a very low personal contribution, and this would give the private industry an opportunity to augment it. They would step in and fill in whatever was necessary so that it would become meaningful.

Well, here we are 14 years later, 14 disappointing and lost years later, and we have no more time for this waiting game. We must do something now. We can set down without difficulty some of the ingredients of a good pension—honourable senators understand that as well as I do—setting aside some of the difficulties relating to funding and investment. From the point of view of a pensioner, the desirable features are, first, liberal vesting rules, but private pensions cannot give that; they give 40 years of age and 10 years service. They cannot give universality or nondiscrimination; they do not have complete portability; they can give tax deductibility, yes, but they cannot give indexing and other protection against inflation. Mandatory survivor benefits can be bought, but they come with the Canada Pension Plan. So, I say that, with the exception of the tax deductibility feature, many private plans, almost all of them, are deficient in comparison with the public pension plan.

There has been a great deal of talk about registered retirement savings plans. They are a very good investment, but they have their shortcomings compared with the public pension system. In the first place, poor people have not been buying RRSPs. They are being bought largely by those in income brackets above $20,000 a year. The public pension system has the advantage of being not only indexed, but there is no front end loading on it. More than that, it is locked in so that a person is not able to spend his savings irresponsibly when he feels he ought to be having a holiday instead of a pension.

When the Canada Pension Plan was introduced it was clearly intended that it be supplemented by the private pension system. No attempt was made to squeeze out the private sector at that time. That was quite a while ago, and I repeat, private pensions have not made the progress they should have made in the intervening years. Sixty per cent of the labour force is still not covered, and of the remaining 40 per cent a disappointingly small fraction ever qualify for full pension—it is estimated that it is not more than 5 to 10 per cent. How many draw bits and pieces it is difficult to find out. For this and a number of other reasons there is a serious question as to whether the private pension industry should not withdraw from the medium and lower income areas, and leave that field to someone who can service it more effectively. There are some things that the government can do better than anyone else, and this is one of them. We proved this with the Canada Pension Plan.

A great deal depends on the steps the private sector is willing or able to take to improve and liberalize several aspects of the private pension. One essential feature is to provide better vesting rules. In this context, vesting means that the employer's contribution to the pension fund belongs to the employee when certain conditions are met. Usually the employee has to have worked with the same employer for 10 years and be 45 years of age. Whether there is any immediate vesting under the pension plan, we recommended vesting within a year.

These rigorous standards put private pensions beyond the reach of the ordinary Canadian, particularly those with interrupted work histories. Canadians on an average change jobs four to five times in their lifetime. The suggestion that pensions in the private sector are inadequate is not some radical or socialistic notion. Listen to what the industry has to say. A year or so ago, a group of Canadian pension experts established the Private Sector Task Force on Retirement Income Issues which had Mr. James L. Clare as chairman of its Subcommittee on Communications. Mr. Clare is a well-known actuary in Toronto and was quoted in the Financial Post of September 22 as having said:

> We know full well that if the private sector doesn't pull up its socks soon, the politicians may say "game over" and impose an enlarged public pension system on Canadians.

One of the weaknesses of private pensions is their inability to cope with the impact of inflation on the real value of pensions. Indexing is no longer a dirty word. It is recognized as a matter of social justice and practical necessity for pension plans to do what is expected of them. In our report, we deal with it as a normal requisite. In testimony and in the deliberations of the committee, a lot of attention was directed to the problem of protecting pensioners from the effects of inflation. Some elementary mathematics showed that when the inflation rate was 10 per cent a year, the real value of a pension would be cut in half in seven years. Our inflation rate at the moment is 9.3 per cent, and it is not likely to slide down too quickly. As a matter of simple social justice, the purchasing power of pensions should be maintained, otherwise the burden of inflation is carried on the backs of the poor and the elderly. This is grossly unfair. Despite this, nearly all private companies have been reluctant to do more than make small adjustments of the order of 2 or 3 per cent a year to compensate pensioners for rising prices.

Equity demands that private pensions have built-in escalation clauses, the same as many labour contracts. If wages are adjusted upwards, when the consumer price index rises, so should pensions. There is a crying need to change despite the doomsayers and the viewers with alarm. Adjustments are now being made on an ad hoc basis but they are utterly unsatisfactory. There must be a more formal commitment.

I have alluded to a number of recommendations of the committee and I would now like to describe the most important ones in summary form. All of the recommendations will be covered, but some of the important ones are that the age of compulsory retirement should be increased one year at a time for five years, after which retirement age should be completely flexible and not subject to mandatory rules. Contributions to the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan should be increased to 8 per cent from 3.6 per cent. This increase should take place over a two-year period, one-half to be paid by the employee and one-half by the employer. Employees and employers should each contribute 1.1 per cent additional for two years. Since the contributions will be roughly doubled, the level of pensions would also roughly double.

The earning ceilings under the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans should be increased to one and one-half times the average industrial wage, or about $20,000 at current rates. Also—and this you will find most interesting—husbands and wives should share equally in any pension benefits under the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans that either spouse earns during the marriage. In other words, each spouse should have a 50 per cent interest in the other spouse's pension benefits earned during the marriage. This would affect between five million and six million married women, who would benefit whether they worked or not. This proposal would be the best method of providing pensions for housewives. If implemented, we would not have applications for the supplement in the numbers we have now.

Honourable senators, over the next little while I should like to give you the general philosophy underlying the report and its recommendations, and to make some specific comments about the underlying demographic problems faced by Canada, as well as a number of specific problems.

From the very beginning, the committee was completely aware that any proposal to solve the associated problems of retirement and retirement income by the major expenditure of public funds would be a waste of time. The committee from the outset was of the view that there should be no cost to the federal treasury, and that is a point stressed repeatedly in the report.

There is a great deal of debate these days on the question of selectivity versus universality. Some belong to one school and some to the other. While the trend today is certainly toward selectivity, those programs already based on the principle of universality are untouchable. No one would think of introducing the principle of selectivity to such programs as old age security or medicare—and I hope we can correct some of the mistakes the government made recently in dealing with medicare. Certainly, the trend today is that the public, the user, should pay more for the services being requested, and that is particularly true with respect to pensions. Pensions represent savings—savings which earn interest and which are indexed and which are eventually returned to the contributor. We need not apologize for insisting that these contributions be made.

The committee also wished to avoid any action that would worsen our inflationary problems. The proposal to increase the levels against the earnings of employees for an extended plan were judged, on the whole, to be anti-inflationary. The increased savings would tend to diminish consumer demand. Although from the point of view of the employer there would be some impact in terms of labour costs which might lead to higher prices, this impact was judged to be both uncertain and small. On the whole, the committee's proposals appeared to be neutral insofar as inflation is concerned.

Another basic consideration which had a strong influence on the committee's attitude was the impact of the bulge in the population which began shortly after World War II. The so-called baby boom has brought with it a series of major adjustments. First, there was the sharp increase in enrolments in our schools, both elementary and secondary, followed by rapid growth in the number of university students. At the same time, the job market was overcrowded. Unemployment among young people was a persistent problem.

The lack of demographic balance will continue to make its impact felt as we move into the next century. Those born between 1945 and 1950 will reach age 65 between the years 2010 and 2015, and even though age 65 is an arbitrary figure, it is a convenient means of identifying the elderly. It is easy to see that the number of elderly people will grow at a rapid rate over the next 25 to 50 years.

Some people have looked at this fact and reacted in the fashion of Chicken Little. These are what I call the "sky is falling" school of actuaries and demographers—vocal but not very sophisticated. The thing they find so alarming is that the number of elderly pensioners is going to increase considerably in relation to the number of workers, resulting in an intolerable burden being placed on the shoulders of the taxpayers in terms of the cost of pensions and the other costs of looking after the elderly. This presumes that those pensions will be funded from general tax revenues and not from the savings of the pensioners. Thus, we have dire predictions about government pension funds going bankrupt. Every now and then someone spouts off about that sort of thing.

The best authority I know of in this country on pensions is the President of the Mercer organization, a gentleman by the name of L. E. Coward. There isn't any better authority on the subject, and I quote from a statement he made to the Canadian Association on Gerontology, as follows:

> I should like to mention one of the strengths and one of the weaknesses of our pensions system.
> It is a myth that our pension system is heading for bankruptcy—a dangerous myth which destroys public confidence in our strongest institutions. It is true that the Canada Pension Plan fund will be exhausted in about 20 years if contribution rates are not raised, but it was always intended that they should be raised from their initial very low level. To say that the Canada Pension Plan is going broke is like saying that your car will crash if you never move the steering wheel.

As a matter of fact, the Economic Council recommended that the premium be increased.

The committee was not impressed by these alarmist views of the future, and there are several reasons for its optimism. The first is that there appears to be a clear downward trend in the number of children—or, for that matter, in the whole group up to the age of 17. This is the age group that needed schools with such urgency just a few years ago, and made it necessary to spend billions of dollars on both capital and operating costs for the education system. Now we have come full circle, with the current problem revolving around the closing of schools for lack of pupils. Again, this involves some conjecture. There does not seem to be any reason why the influx of women into the labour market is not going to continue to grow. This may be an important offsetting factor.

Perhaps of greater importance is the number of workers who will continue to work after the traditional age of 65 once the bogey of mandatory retirement is disposed of. Predictions are risky because it is hard to forecast the influence of labour market conditions or the impact of inflationary price movements on people's attitude to working. Even though the committee looked on the future with optimism, it also recognized that the whole matter of retirement income will grow in importance as time passes, and appropriate action should be taken as quickly as possible. If we shilly-shally now the cost of readjustment in the future will be higher than necessary.

I do not propose to describe in detail all the recommendations of the committee, even the main ones, but I do want to comment on two or three which are of special importance in considering pensions.

The proposal to increase contributions to the Canada Pension Plan to a total of 8 per cent of eligible earnings compared to the current level of 3.6 per cent seems to me to be of major importance. How to achieve the suggested increase to 8 per cent was considered in great detail by the committee. There were a number of options available. One was to introduce the increase of 2.2 per cent to both employees and employers simultaneously. But there was a feeling that an immediate increase of this sort might be disruptive. The possibility of imposing the increases at intervals of six months, spread over several years, was examined, and this was rejected because it might lead to administrative confusion and undue delay.

The final conclusion of the committee was that the best approach was to introduce the increase over a two-year period. This would mean an increase of 1.1 per cent to both employer and employee. The advantage of this approach is that the initial increases are relatively small, and yet there would not be a very long delay in reaching the new level of contribution.

I have here a table entitled "Contributions to Public Pension Plan in Various Countries", and it comes from Social Security Programs Throughout the World 1977, published by the United States Department of Health Education and Welfare. I ask your permission to put it on the record.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[The table follows:]

CONTRIBUTIONS TO PUBLIC PENSION PLANS IN VARIOUS COUNTRIES

	Insured Person	Employer	Government
France	3.45 per cent	7.70 per cent	none
Germany	9 per cent	9 per cent	subsidy of about 16 per cent of total cost
Greece	4.75 per cent	9.50 per cent	contributes as needed
U.K.	7.75 per cent	8.75 per cent	approximately 18 per cent of cost
Italy	7.15 per cent	16.35 per cent	lump sum subsidies
U.S.	6.13 per cent	6.13 per cent	some special old age benefits
Canada (Present)	1.8 per cent	1.8 per cent	none
Canada (proposed)	4 per cent	4 per cent	none

Senator Croll: There is one figure there that belongs to me. That is the one below the line where I indicate what the present contribution in Canada is and what it is likely to be afterwards. Even though this document will be on record, I should like to read some figures from it. In France the insured person pays 3.45 per cent and the employer pays 7.7 per cent. The government pays nothing. In Germany the insured person pays 9 per cent and the employer pays 9 per cent and the government pays a subsidy of about 16 per cent of the total cost. That comes from the general treasury. In Greece the insured person pays 4.75 per cent and the employer pays 9.5 per cent, and the government contributes "as needed," whatever that may mean. In the United Kingdom the insured person pays 7.75 per cent and the employer pays 8.75 per cent, and the government pays approximately 18 per cent of the cost out of the general treasury. In Italy the insured person pays 7.15 per cent and the employer pays 16.35 per cent, and the government pays lump sum subsidies—whatever is necessary. In the United States the employee pays 6.13 per cent and the employer pays 6.13 per cent, and there are some small benefits paid by the government that are of no consequence. Then in Canada the employee pays 1.8 per cent and the employer pays 1.8 per cent, and the government pays nothing. What we are suggesting here is that the employer and the employee should each pay 4 per cent. We have been getting away with pretty low costs for a long time.

What is even more interesting, honourable senators, is that this country has a view on pensions that most of you could not believe. The Scandinavian countries spend approximately 12 per cent of the gross national product on pensions. In Germany the figure is 9 to 10 per cent, in France 7½ per cent, in Great Britain 9 per cent, in the United States it is 5 per cent, and in Canada it is 3 per cent. Somehow we have always gone cheap on pensions in our country. I had always thought that we were very well insured, but in reality we are not.

Senator Rowe: Does Senator Croll have a breakdown for the Scandinavian countries? I gathered the impression in Denmark last year that it was even higher than the figures he has given.

Senator Croll: I am sure those figures have been provided to me.

Once the level of pensions payable increases, the plan will be ideal. I have already said this, but it is worth repeating even at this late hour. One of the most complex issues in the whole field of retirement income is the unsatisfactory treatment of women in the pension system. This is partly due to historical reasons. Not so many years ago the attachment of women to the labour market was regarded as marginal. It is true that many of them did go to work after schooling was over, but this was often for a relatively short time before marriage. Sometimes they were forced by circumstances to go back to work in later years. It was hard for them to build up any pension rights. There was an outright discrimination in some respects. Women often joined pension schemes late and were retired early. Even with the surge of women into the labour market in the last few years they are often in relatively low paid jobs, part-time and non-unionized jobs, and all of this tends to impair their pensions.

One disturbing aspect of the problem of women and pensions is that only 27 per cent of the female workers were covered by private pension plans in 1976, according to Statistics Canada. This compares with 44 per cent of the male labour force. Both figures are dismal. What is worse is the number of unattached women over 65 who have no private pension plan of any kind, and according to data collected by Health and Welfare Canada in 1975, 81 per cent of those women received no pension at all from private sources. For those who did, the average amount was less than $2,000 a year in 1975—not exactly a princely sum.

Even greater difficulty was experienced by housewives who were completely dependent on their husbands and families. The rules of the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan did not permit housewives to contribute even if they could afford to. One of the basic rules of the plan was that contributions had to be connected with paid work. The result has been that housewives were discriminated against, although it was recognized that they did make a real contribution to the economy, even though it was not the sort of thing that could be added to the gross national product.

The committee considered this problem with some care and concluded that the most promising solution was to give wives a half share of the pensions earned by their husbands under the Canada Pension Plan. The converse was also recommended, because husbands should share equally in pension dollars earned by their wives. That is based on the fundamental notion that marriage is a partnership on earth, even though it is made in heaven. There are roughly 5,625,100 married women in Canada now, and the great majority of them will ultimately be affected by the proposal.

The number of old people is growing and will continue to grow. They deserve better treatment, but there is little doubt that they will have much political clout to demand it for very long. They need help now. That is why the emphasis is on things that we can see with clarity now.

The proposal to expand the pension plan as quickly as practical is merely a recognition for the need for action. If you compare the proposed contributions of 4 per cent for employees, and 4 per cent for employers, with contributions paid in other western countries, Canada does not show up too well. Employers in the United States alone contribute 6 per cent, and I have already indicated previously what employers in Germany and Great Britain and all those other countries contribute. In addition, governments are called on to make significant contributions in most of these countries.

We have been coasting along in this country on the cheap, with employers' contributions fixed at 1.8 per cent since the beginning of 1966, and employees' contributions fixed at 1.8 per cent too. That is nearly 14 years. I was there and I was as much responsible as anyone. Practically everything has gone up, and some things have gone sky-high. So we need to restore some better balance.

The argument that additional costs of business arising out of more generous public pensions are catastrophic is not very impressive. It is hardly credible that an increase in payroll taxes in the order of 2 per cent will prove a financial disaster. Profit levels appear to be quite healthy, particularly in certain segments, and whatever burden there is on business rests better there than on the backs of the poor old people.

The evident fact is that the elderly retired people do not have the market power they need. The big unions and the big companies have it and they can keep an even keel when the waves get high. It is the little people, the old, the retired, who get swamped.

In conclusion, let me quote the closing words of the report of the committee:

> A helpful and compassionate approach is needed but this will only come with public appreciation of the twin problems of retirement and income. Your Committee believes that the subject of this report is a major social issue just as important as Old Age Security and Medicare. It is earnestly hoped that this report will contribute to the understanding of the Canadian people and, in particular, their essential role in building a social structure that will be the envy of the western world. Let this be the first firm forward step in "Retirement Without Tears."

This will come about when we dedicate the eighties to the aged.

Hon. Edgar Fournier: Honourable senators, as Deputy Chairman of the Special Senate Committee on Retirement Age Policies, I should like to make a few brief comments. My remarks will be short owing to the difficulties I have to contend with and have had to for the last eight years.

[Translation]

I feel however that I should have failed in my obligations if I did not say a few words in my mother tongue. My remarks are directed to the members of the Special Senate Committee on the Retirement Age Policies as a whole, on their proceedings and accomplishments.

[English]

Honourable senators, I was just repeating in French that my remarks will be short and will deal mostly with the responsibilities and functions of the committee, leaving the detail and the content of the report to other members of the group.

The committee consisted of two groups, the Senate members and the supporting staff. The special committee was appointed on December 7, 1977, with Senator David Croll as its chairman.

Our first duty was to find an executive staff which could meet the requirements. We were looking for devoted people who were not guided by the clock and who were not afraid to work long hours. After interviewing several prospects, surely enough we found our staff members through the public service. I may say frankly and honestly that this is a most devoted executive staff; it is beyond reproach.

After the usual or normal amount of squabbling we were allocated some space on the third floor of the Victoria Building, where we worked under the direction of John Desmarais, Ph.D., with the assistance of Warren James, Ph.D., Ted Wilgress, Ph.D., and Miss Catherine Anderson, a member of the Ontario Bar and the Quebec Bar, and Mr. George Coderre, clerk of the committee. In turn, these persons were assisted by two permanent secretaries and six other secretaries. The workload alternated among the secretaries, but there were never more than two at a time, and these were drawn from the permanent staff. At times when mail was rather heavy, when we experienced problems of all sorts, whether personal or otherwise, the work was still done efficiently and all correspondence was promptly looked after.

From December 7, 1977, to date, the Senate committee has managed to function despite many setbacks. For example, scheduling meetings to please witnesses was a major problem. There were other problems such as trying to arrange for senators to attend the presentation of briefs when they were involved with other obligations or activities. It was necessary for senators to read briefs prior to their being presented, and there was the ever-present possibility that the committee could be abolished at any time. Such problems even formed the subject matter of some of our meetings—and tonight is no exception—because there was the real fear that, if the committee did not survive, all of the work it had already done and all of its financial investment would simply go down the drain.

Prior to the first public meeting, 28 briefs on various aspects of retirement were presented in camera to members of the committee by the Research Branch of the Parliamentary Library, and as a result many statistics were studied.

On behalf of the committee, I extend my thanks to the staff of the Research Branch of the Library of Parliament for their contribution.

The first public hearing took place on November 14, 1978. Subsequently there were 24 public hearings; there were 37 briefs presented by various organizations from across Canada; there were eight oral presentations, and 15 briefs were submitted by mail. All went according to schedule and all the hearings were instructive and well received. The committee retained the services of Mr. Jean Baroux as the French language editor, and Mr. Joseph Sacroug as translator.

This was the mechanism which produced our report, Retirement Without Tears. The cost involved was far below that of a royal commission.

On behalf of the special committee, may I extend my sincere thanks to Mr. Baroux and Mr. Sacroug, as well as to their staff members, for their devotion and long hours of work in order to meet certain deadlines.

My sincere thanks also go to all members of the committee for their continued interest and effort. I apologize for any inconvenience caused by non-attendance at any of the committee's meetings because of other important meetings being held at the same time.

Senator Croll and I wish to express our thanks to all members of the committee. I am sure they are proud of the work that was done. All of us in time will pass on, but the Senate records will exist in the future.

I should now like to pay a personal tribute to Senator Croll, the chairman of the special committee, who engineered and master-minded the whole operation. At times I have been asked by members on both sides of the house: "How do you get along working with Senator Croll?" Perhaps I can best answer that question with the familiar reply: "Birds of a kind nest under the same roof." We are both early birds, being in our offices as early as 7 a.m. practically every day. Long hours mean nothing to us. I should perhaps add that we do not always agree, but our arguments have always been settled in a friendly manner and in the best interests of the committee. For my part, I always kept in mind Senator Croll's immense experience in both public and political life.

I am sure that many senators have little or no idea of the work done by Senator Croll on behalf of the committee during the past two years. It has been a pleasure and a privilege to work with him and to have had the opportunity to participate in the preparation of the report Retirement Without Tears. Never, in all my discussions with my colleagues on the committee and with other honourable senators, did I meet anyone who did not have great admiration for Senator Croll. Not everyone agrees with his politics, but that is to be expected. We all respect Senator Croll and admire him for his many years of devotion to both his province and to Canada.

On April 30 the special Senate committee will present to you, Mr. Speaker, an oil painting of the Honourable Senator Croll in recognition of his devotion to the Canadian people. That painting will place Senator Croll among the many outstanding senators of Canada. I again extend my thanks.

[Translation]

I thank you for your kind attention.

On motion of Senator Deschatelets, debate adjourned.

[English]

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

"AFGHANISTAN AND THE OLYMPICS"—STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

The Soviet Union's move into Afghanistan at the turn of the year caught the world by shocked surprise. The depth of international opposition can be measured by the strength of the vote in the Emergency Session of the United Nations General Assembly called to deal with the question in early January: one hundred and four governments cast their votes in condemnation of Soviet action.

That action continues. The Soviet leaders are proceeding to tighten their hold on what was, and has been for decades, an independent neighbouring country.

Such international behaviour cannot go unheeded. The country responsible cannot claim for itself immunity from the consequences of its own freely chosen course of action.

There has been broad agreement internationally that the Soviet action can only be met by concrete measures, adopted by members of the international community as expressions of concern over unacceptable and unjustifiable policies. These measures are not, and cannot be uniform: nor can they themselves secure the withdrawal of Soviet forces from Afghanistan. They do, however, reflect a full range of national reactions which when added together constitute an impressive and deliberate demonstration of world opposition to the Soviet invasion.

For its part, and after the fullest consultation with allies and friends, Canada adopted a broad spectrum of measures under the previous Government which have been reaffirmed by the present Government. Visits to the Soviet Union by ministers and high-level officials have been cancelled. Similarly a wide range of exchanges in education, culture and sport, along with a wide variety of exports of manufactured goods and agricultural products have been halted. Thus, Canadians in a broad spectrum of fields of endeavour—artists, sportsmen, farmers, academics and businessmen, to name a few—have been called upon to make sacrifices in the process of Canada's response to Soviet aggression.

In the framework of the Government's reaction to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, one issue has remained undecided: participation in the 1980 Olympic Games, scheduled to be held in Moscow in July. This Government believes that the international situation brought about by Soviet aggression in Afghanistan makes it wholly inappropriate to hold the Olympics in Moscow.

Since taking office, the Government has maintained that it is up to the Soviet Union to create the conditions under which the Games may properly take place. Obviously, such conditions do not now exist. Furthermore, there is no present intention on the part of the USSR to create them. We have said from the beginning that an Olympic boycott would be advisable only if effective. Our policy has therefore been to work actively towards an effective boycott. In the course of the last several weeks, we have canvassed our friends in the Western Alliance and Third World states to determine whether a boycott of the Moscow Olympics would be an effective instrument in displaying our abhorrence of the actions of the USSR in Afghanistan. The Prime Minister took a personal initiative in writing a number of world leaders on the subject. The results of these consultations, coupled with conversations I had with foreign ministers present during the recent independence celebrations in Zimbabwe have convinced the Government that the criteria for an effective boycott are now clearly present. I expect similar announcements in support of an effective boycott by other governments within the next days.

To ask our athletes, who have been training for four years and more for their chance at an Olympic gold medal, to forego that chance is a hard thing for any free country to ask of its citizens. The Government is, however, convinced that withdrawal from the Olympics is the clearest and most effective way available to make plain to the leaders of the Soviet Union that the world condemns the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan and its defiance of international demands for its withdrawal. If as the Soviet Union claims, the 1980 Olympics are a vindication of Soviet policies, then by not participating in those Games, we repeat to the Soviet leadership and the Soviet people that the Soviet Government's actions in Afghanistan stand condemned by the world.

The Canadian Olympic Association has requested a firm indication of the Government's position in this matter. The Government has considered the situation thoroughly. We have decided that the circumstances leave us no choice but to urge the Canadian Olympic Association to inform the Organization Committee for the 1980 Olympics that Canadian athletes will not be participating in the Games. The Government does not intend to use coercion to bring about a withdrawal. It will not revoke passports or take powers to circumscribe the right of Canadians to travel freely abroad. But should Canadian athletes participate in Moscow, they will do so without the moral or financial support of the Government of Canada.

Several nations are actively planning for athletic events in which their athletes can participate as some compensation for not having gone to Moscow. If Canadian athletes, through their accredited sport governing bodies, make it clear that they wish to participate in such events, the Government will make it possible for them to do so. Moreover, the Minister responsible for Fitness and Amateur Sport will have his officials meet with national sport governing body representatives immediately to determine whatever opportunities may be available, or may be developed, to offset this setback to our amateur athletes and provide alternative competitive forums in their pursuit of excellence.

The Government is aware that the final deadline for acceptance of invitations to the Games is May 24. While any dramatic change in the situation in Afghanistan seems unlikely, the possibility cannot be entirely excluded. The Government therefore intends to continue monitoring the situation closely. It remains up to the Soviet Union to create the conditions in which the Olympics can take place. Should it become apparent that, contrary to present evidence, these conditions are being created, the Government is prepared to reassess the request it is making today.

Finally, Madame Speaker, we ask Canadian athletes and Canadians generally to support this important decision which has been taken in the national interest. We all recognize the sacrifice this represents for our athletes who have trained so hard and for whom we have so much respect. It is, of course, not their fault any more than it is the fault of other Canadians who are also being asked to support Government policies designed to impress upon the Soviet Union that international terrorism in all of its manifestations—whether by armed students or disciplined troops—is unacceptable to Canada. The Government urges Canadian athletes to respect its advice. We are confident that they and the Canadian Olympic Committee will have the national interest at heart and will decline to participate in the Moscow Games in the interest of Canadians and free peoples everywhere.

SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON RETIREMENT AGE POLICIES

RECOMMENDATIONS

Part I

Retirement

The specific recommendations of the committee are:

1. that the progressive abolition of mandatory retirement based on age become a general policy

   (a) by amendments to the rules governing public servants and employees of companies under the jurisdiction of the federal government;

   (b) by similar action with respect to provincial and municipal public servants;

2. that the mandatory age of retirement be increased one year at a time for five years by amending pension plans or retirement rules or conventions and that at the end of five years the concept of mandatory retirement at a particular age be abandoned completely;

3. that all human rights legislation be reviewed to eliminate any loopholes which permit age discrimination because of employee benefit and similar plans;

4. that a policy of flexible retirement become the standard for both public and private enterprises;

5. that amendments to both federal and provincial human rights legislation be sought at the earliest opportunity to minimize the possibility of discrimination based on age.

Part II

Demographic Trends

In this area the recommendations of the committee are:

1. that, in view of the major institutional changes which will result from the explosive growth of those aged 65 and over early in the twenty-first century, planning be undertaken well in advance at every level of government to anticipate the problems of change;

2. that an essential element of this planning should be to ensure that the savings realized in such areas as education because of a declining younger dependent population be used to offset the increased public expenditures devoted to the older dependent population;

3. that appropriate administrative agencies be expanded at the federal, provincial and municipal levels to plan and co-ordinate the programs needed to meet the increased social and institutional demands of the aging population in transportation, homemaking services, housing and nursing homes and other areas of concern to the elderly.

Part III

The Income of the Elderly

The recommendations of the committee are:

1. that for all those 65 and over no action should be taken to diminish the rights and benefits they now enjoy;

2. that, in view of the inadequacies of the private pension system in Canada, contributions under the Canada/Quebec Pension Plan be increased to 8 per cent, one-half to be contributed by the employer and one-half by the employee and the full 8 per cent to be contributed by the self-employed instead of the current aggregate level of 3.6 per cent. This recommendation involves an increase in the total contributions of 2.2 per cent annually for two years. This would mean that employers and employees each would contribute an additional 1.1 per cent per year until the total difference of 4.4 per cent is made up;

3. that employees be permitted to purchase pension entitlement at the new higher level by paying both the employer's and the employee's share for any desired period prior to the introduction of the higher contribution rates, but not to begin earlier than January 1, 1966, provided the employee earned above the required minimum for any prior year to be included;

4. that the increases in the benefits under the Canada/Quebec Pension Plan be phased in over a five-year period dating from the end of the year that the 8 per cent level of contributions is in effect;

5. that the benefits payable to those contributing at the new level be calculated on an actuarial basis for all those retiring before the payment of the higher pension level is fully effective;

6. that the expanded Canada/Quebec Pension Plan be integrated with or added to existing private pension plans at the option of the employers and the employees;

7. that early vesting, i.e. after one year, be introduced in the pension field under federal jurisdiction and that the provinces be urged to adopt this standard in areas under their control;

8. that, as a general principle, contributors to the Canada/Quebec Pension Plan should be permitted, if they wish, to take actuarially reduced pensions beginning at age 60.

Part IV

Retirement and the Economic Climate

The recommendations of the committee are:

1. that the ceiling under the Canada/Quebec Pension Plan (the Year's Maximum Pensionable Earnings) be raised by 50 per cent to 1½ times the average industrial wage, or approximately $20,000 at current rates, so as to provide workers with a higher level of protection against inflation;

2. that the increase take place in annual increments so that the new level of the year's Maximum Pensionable Earnings is attained by the time the total contribution level of 8 per cent is in effect;

3. that the private pensions system be urged to modify the designs of its plans wherever necessary to protect the long-service employees' pension contributions by calculating pensions on the basis of final earnings or some similar variant;

4. that the provinces and the federal government take appropriate action to require all private pension plans under their jurisdiction to disclose to their participants how their funds are being invested and how they are performing.

Part V

Women and Retirement

The recommendations of the committee are:

1. that the federal and provincial governments and the pension industry be urged to make it obligatory for private pension schemes to provide adequately for survivors;

2. that the reciprocal and equal sharing of pensions under the Canada/Quebec Pension Plan be adopted as the best method of providing pensions for housewives and that the equal sharing of any pension entitlements earned by either spouse during any period of marriage should confirm the fact that marriage has some of the essential qualities of a partnership;

3. that the rules which bar women employed by their husbands in unincorporated enterprises from contributing to the Canada/Quebec Pension Plan be eliminated;

4. that any unfair discrimination against women in the pension field not based on accepted and sound actuarial principles should be vigorously attacked by the provincial and federal authorities responsible for human rights.

Part VI

Special Groups in the Population

The recommendations of the committee are:

1. that, with the introduction of early vesting, the pension benefits of mobile workers under private pension schemes be transferred to the Canada/Quebec Pension Plan;

2. that the fund accumulated by the Canada/Quebec Pension Plan consisting of the pension benefits of mobile workers be managed by a Crown agency consisting of representatives of the insurance industry, financial institutions and pension funds as well as the general public, with the primary purpose of investing the contributions in an efficient manner and protecting the fund against the inroads of inflation;

3. that the benefits that have accrued to individuals be made available to them on retirement in the form of annuities;

4. that the problem of inadequate or nonexistent pensions for seasonal workers be dealt with by creating a special category for such workers under the Canada/Quebec Pension Plan with a premium and payout structure designed to meet the abnormal aspects of seasonal employment;

5. that the appropriate body or bodies provide the public with clear standardized statements of all the conditions attached to RRSPs, including administrative costs, fees for termination and any other aspect of RRSPs relevant to the investor.

Part VII

Assistance for the Aging

The recommendations of the committee are:

1. that increased resources be devoted to homemaking services, particularly by the municipalities;

2. that the federal New Horizons program should be given continued support, that maximum flexibility should be stressed, that efforts should be made to use the skills of the elderly in reaching segments of the elderly population now left out of group activities and that every encouragement should be given to projects involving social services for the elderly;

3. that policy directives should be issued by the appropriate authorities for the purpose of improving employment opportunities of those 65 and over and discouraging the elderly from leaving the labour market;

4. that the retired elderly should organize, protest and show militancy in order to improve their chances of achieving dignity, obtaining higher incomes as well as medical and other services and finding useful work.

Part VIII

Planning for Retirement

The recommendations of the committee are:

1. that both public authorities and private companies should undertake to implement effective pre-retirement programs;

2. that the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission should take appropriate measures to ensure that its offices are better equipped to deal with older workers, including: (a) improved job training facilities; (b) a more vigorous placement program; (c) more advertising of available services;

3. that employers should introduce programs of graduated retirement such as, for example, longer annual holidays or shorter work weeks, for workers approaching the age of retirement.

Respectfully submitted,

William J. Petten
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Petten moved that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate and that it be the first order of the day.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I understand that none of the Orders of the Day dealing with the second reading of bills will be proceeded with today, and I am wondering what the intention of the government is in connection with those orders as far as tomorrow's sitting is concerned.

I understand that today we will be dealing with Order No. 7, which is the debate on the motion for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to His Speech at the opening of the session. Is it the intention of the government to have some of these motions for the second reading of bills moved tomorrow?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): The intention is to have debate on these various bills move forward as expeditiously as possible. However, the material required for the initial speeches is as yet not fully in order.

Senator Flynn: I would have thought, since most of these bills were introduced in the last Parliament, that this material would be readily available. From my recent experience in connection with these matters, I would think you would have very little to add to what was prepared for the introduction of these bills in the last Parliament.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the present government is very concerned about the need to be contemporary in all of the remarks which are uttered in relation to any of these measures. The sensitive briefings required before these bills are advanced have not yet been completed.

Senator Flynn: I suppose it would be more difficult for someone on your side to deal with these bills than it would have been for us.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as the Leader of the Opposition has said, we have had these bills before us previously, and because of that it is hoped that not all of these measures will have to be referred to committee. There will be some, of course, which we will want to refer to committee. Our committees, however, are not yet established. As soon as they are, it is hoped that, for the very reasons Senator Flynn has mentioned, we will be able to clean up that part of the order paper expeditiously.

Senator Perrault: With your enthusiastic co-operation.

Senator Flynn: I understand the subtlety of the argument.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, last evening, in my absence, the Honourable Senator Roblin asked when we would be proceeding with Bill S-6, to amend the Two-Price Wheat Act.

Bill S-6 is a technical bill. It removes from the law the provision to pay a subsidy for two-price wheat, and this needs to be done in the reasonably near future. I hope to be in a position to go forward with this bill before too long, and I would hope, at the time I do move its second reading, to be able to announce the policy on the two-price wheat system that will replace the present policy.

THE ESTIMATES

STATEMENTS BY PRESIDENT OF THE TREASURY BOARD AND THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. I see now that the Minister of State for Economic Affairs has come into the house armed with a big book containing all the answers. I hope he plans to make full use of them. It will be quite a different Question Period from what we have had over the past week, if he does. So if the Leader of the Government is unable to reply to my question, perhaps Senator Olson can.

Can the Leader of the Government tell us, in view of the discrepancy between Mr. MacEachen's estimates and those of the President of the Treasury Board, which precise figure we should use in respect to estimated expenditures? There is a difference of approximately $2 billion between the two figures given. Which figure should we use, the higher or the lower?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I am sure that Senator Flynn realizes, if he read the speeches of the President of the Treasury Board and of the Minister of Finance, that the differences were explained very, very carefully. It is that the amount that was in the blue book was the estimate prepared by the previous government, and the amount of something less than $2 billion—I do not have the figure on the tip of my tongue but it was $58.3 billion as opposed to something like $60.1 billion—was explained by the increase in debt service charges and oil compensation payments since those estimates were prepared.

Senator Flynn: It seems to me that the President of the Treasury Board did not caution the house as to the different figure at which the Minister of Finance had arrived. I was just wondering if, as it appears in some of the replies obtained from the Minister of State for Economic Development, sometimes the right hand of government does not know what the left hand is doing.

Senator Olson: Well, that may be the history of the past nine or ten months, but I can assure the Leader of the Opposition that that situation is changing. The explanation was complete and clear and there was no contradiction between what the Minister of Finance said and what the President of the Treasury Board said. What was in the blue book were the estimates, unamended, which had been prepared. If we had sent them back, then all the printing would have had to be redone. That was explained very carefully. But the Minister of Finance raised that figure by the amount I explained a few moments ago, and he explained why it went to $60.1 billion. It is because of what is now known to be increases in cost of servicing the public debt plus some increases in the statutory provisions for providing for the oil compensation program. So they made it very clear that they knew when they tabled the blue book that it would likely be higher than that, and of course Parliament will see some supplementary estimates to take care of that difference. I would be very happy to arrange to send the Leader of the Opposition the words that explain that clearly and precisely.

Senator Flynn: You mean in the speech of the President of the Treasury Board?

Senator Olson: One or the other or both.

Senator Flynn: I think you will have to couple them to some extent. In any event, the reply to my question, if it had been given simply and directly, would have been, I gather, that the higher figure is the estimated amount of expenditures.

Senator Olson: I think that is correct—by the time we get the supplementaries in to take care of what was explained.

STATUS OF WOMEN

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEES AND TASK FORCES

Hon. Martha P. Bielish: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government. Liberal governments have always been verbose in promoting the advancement of women to positions of direction and authority. Why is it, therefore, that of the six parliamentary task forces recently established and approved by cabinet not a single one has a female chairperson?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the parliamentary task forces, of course, were announced in the other place.

Senator Roblin: That is true enough.

Senator Perrault: Of course, I had no role in determining the membership of those task forces established in the other place, but I have a belief that, if certain parliamentary task forces of importance to Canadians are formed, and in view of the fact that Parliament is comprised of two chambers, those task forces should include members of the Commons and members of the Senate. For example, I know that the honourable senator, with her outstanding background in public affairs in western Canada, would be prepared to serve as a member of any such joint task force formed in Parliament.

With respect to the immediate task forces which have been announced, it is certainly the hope of certain members of the Senate that at least some members of the Senate will be part of those task forces.

Senator Bielish: I have a supplementary question. Does the Leader of the Government not agree that since so many women are attempting, for economic reasons, to return to work, it might have been appropriate for at least the task force on employment opportunities for the eighties to be headed up by a woman? Incidentally, I am perfectly aware that the press release did state that all leaders of both houses were consulted and made aware of all that happened.

Senator Perrault: I understand the honourable senator's concern, and, of course, ability should be the sole criterion when chairmen and members of task forces are appointed or when appointments are made to government bodies and agencies. It must he said, however, that the Right Honourable the Prime Minister is deeply committed to the concept of equality in this country, and not only with respect to males and females; he is deeply committed to the concept of equality with respect to those of different ethnic background and heritage.

There has been a dramatic improvement in the status of women while the Right Honourable the Prime Minister has been leader of the affairs of this nation.

Senator Bielish: I have a further supplementary. I am not surprised that all chairpersons are from the government party. Could the Leader of the Government tell me if any of the women who sit in Parliament on the government side were considered as possible chairpersons for one or more of these task forces? If so, were they found wanting? If not, why were they not considered?

Senator Perrault: May I suggest, with all due deference to the honourable senator, that the line of questioning is, in my view, out of order.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Perrault: The line of questioning relates to decisions taken in the other place. The information sought is not within the purview of members of this place.

[Senator Bielish.]

Senator Smith (Colchester): Of members of the government, surely.

Senator Perrault: I want to assure honourable senators that, insofar as it is within the power of the government in this place, every effort is made to see to it that members of both sexes are given major responsibility. We have serving us today as Acting Speaker one of the distinguished parliamentarians in Canada, the former Speaker, the Honourable Renaude Lapointe, who served for a number of years with great distinction as Speaker of the Senate.

In the other place the Right Honourable the Prime Minister has indicated the great importance of acknowledging ability regardless of sex by appointing another outstanding woman, the Honourable Jeanne Sauvé, as Speaker of the House of Commons. She is the first woman Speaker in the history of the House of Commons. During the years in which there were Conservative governments, action of this kind was never taken.

Senator Flynn: How many years?

Senator Perrault: The chairman of the government caucus is a distinguished and able woman, namely, Senator Neiman, and we are proud of that fact. There are many other examples.

Senator Bielish: My question pertains to the six parliamentary task forces and not to any other appointment.

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator's views will be noted carefully by all those who serve here in Parliament.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Did I understand correctly, from the words of the Leader of the Government, that it was the intention to make these study committees joint committees of the Commons and the Senate?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I believe that there are certain committees and task forces which should be made up of representation from both chambers. The membership of committees must, of course, be drawn up on the basis of the subject to be studied and the matters under consideration. I am sure the honourable senator will agree with me that the expertise that resides in this chamber is such that it should be made available in the interests of the Canadian people when committees of Parliament are formed.

A number of representations have been made to me by many senators to the effect that they would like to see a greater degree of participation in certain parliamentary task forces and committees. I would certainly be interested in the views of the official opposition on this subject.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend did not answer my question as to whether or not there would be joint committees. I suppose we can regard that as par for the course, because one of his skills is in avoiding the question. I have to admit that, as a former "question answerer" myself, it is not a bad idea sometimes.

Will these proposed committees report to Parliament, and what is the plan with respect to their responsibilities? Are they going to be reporting back to Parliament?

Senator Perrault: I would be pleased to bring a report to the Senate on this subject. I can say that representations have been made with respect to having certain senators participate in these task forces. I know it is an initiative that would be supported by the Leader of the Opposition. I would be pleased to bring to the Senate a statement about the length, duration, nature and terms of reference of these task forces. I believe it is of importance to us, and certainly it will be reported here as soon as possible.

Senator Roblin: I thank my honourable friend. I would appreciate that action on his part. I raised the question with respect to the reporting procedure because there has been a report circulating that these committees would not be reporting to Parliament but would, in fact, be reporting to the government, which is something quite different.

Speaking for myself, I would certainly like to reserve my position. If it is found, on analysis, that the report is not to be made to Parliament but to the government, that would mean two quite different things and it would certainly affect my attitude with regard to serving on such a committee.

Senator Perrault: I quite understand the honourable senator's position. He has made a good point. That information will be obtained and hopefully we can have a report on it tomorrow afternoon. It should not be a difficult question to answer.

Senator Flynn: For once.

THE ESTIMATES

TABLING OF BACKGROUND PAPERS

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government. A few moments ago the Leader of the Opposition directed a question to the Leader of the Government in which he asked whether certain bills were coming forward for consideration. We were told that we had to wait for those bills until adequate background information was supplied.

Senator Perrault: And the committees brought into being, yes.

Senator Donahoe: Having heard that explanation and the reply, I assume that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander, and what is good practice in this house is also good practice in the other place. So I am inspired to ask the following question: In the light of the very sparse information that was supplied with the estimates brought down in the other place yesterday, can the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us whether he knows if it is the government's intention to table more detailed background papers to the estimates?

● (1430)

In particular, can he tell us if it is the government's intention to table five-year revenue and expenditure forecasts such as those which accompanied the Crosbie budget?

Before the answer is given to my question, I should like to point out to the Leader of the Government that it was only last week that the Auditor General of this country said that in his opinion too often incomplete and sometimes incomprehensible spending figures are presented to Parliament. In the light of that criticism and in the light of the paucity of the information provided with the estimates, can we now be told whether we can expect these further five-year revenue and expenditure forecasts to be provided with the estimates?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): May I, honourable senator, attempt to answer this question in a general fashion, and then I would like to defer to my colleague, Senator Olson, who is deeply concerned with the economic policies of this government.

Senator Smith (Colchester): He always says he isn't.

Senator Perrault: First, this government has spelled out very clearly its intention to provide more information with respect to government programs and many other aspects of government operations. Secondly, when one makes reference to the recent report of the Auditor General, one should bear in mind that his remarks were directed in large part to the activities of the government that was removed from office on February 18.

Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Perrault: The Honourable Leader of the Opposition should think carefully about the remarks of the Auditor General as they relate to some of the activities of his own party when in power.

May I point out also, with regard to the suggestion that somehow the government is reluctant to come forward with legislation and proposals for the future, that the predecessor government refused to call Parliament for five months—150 days of inaction—which is hardly exemplary conduct in our parliamentary system.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I rise, honourable senators, on a question of privilege. The Leader of the Government has said two things that he should correct. He said in the first place that the report of the Auditor General referred to the previous government.

Senator Perrault: Well, part of it.

Senator Flynn: I would want this to be on the record, that it is now only a part of the report that is referred to. I would also like the leader to identify what part of it does apply to the previous administration.

In the second place, when the Leader of the Government refers to the time we waited to call Parliament, I would ask him how long the official opposition, combined with the socialists, gave us to introduce the program that we had elaborated during the five months the Leader of the Government refers to.

Senator Lamontagne: That is not a question of privilege.

Senator Flynn: It is indeed, because it is a question of interpretation. You should know that.

Senator Perrault: As usual, I dislike engaging in partisan dissertation.

Senator Flynn: That goes without saying.

Senator Perrault: Perhaps members on the other side should be most acutely aware of this section of the Auditor General's report which applies to their activity or inactivity through their term in office.

● (1435)

Senator Flynn: There was no inactivity.

Senator Perrault: As far as this government is concerned, however, we accept this new mandate without a spirit of recrimination about the past, and we will get on with the future.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

GOVERNMENT'S LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Hon. G. I. Smith: In regard to this business of bringing forward bills for consideration, perhaps the Leader of the Government would enlighten those of us who do not understand, and tell us why it is impossible or difficult for the house to debate bills on second reading until committees are appointed.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it will be the intention to move ahead with these bills tomorrow afternoon. This is the present plan.

Senator Flynn: Good.

Senator Perrault: In certain cases it may be necessary to refer them to committees. Perhaps on negotiation with the Leader of the Opposition we can discuss certain bills where referral to committee may not be necessary. We are as anxious as honourable senators in opposition to move ahead with the excellent legislation before us.

Senator Flynn: My specific question was whether the item concerning the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne would be stood tomorrow.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): It will not be stood tomorrow on this side. We hope we will also have a bill for tomorrow.

Senator Flynn: That is all we wanted to know.

FINANCE

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—CIDA EXPENDITURES

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, earlier the Leader of the Government in the Senate, to whom I referred yesterday as the "Minister of Irresponsibility," referred to the Auditor General's report. In that report the Auditor General referred to the expenditures in connection with CIDA, and he stated that a particular item, a boat, would not float. Would the Leader of the Government assure this chamber that the cabinet will have a meeting on board this boat which does not float? I think this would be very important and that it would solve many problems facing this country.

Senator Perrault: You made a statement.

GRAIN

FEED BARLEY AND OATS—EXPORT PERMITS

Hon. Martha P. Bielish: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. Many farmers in central Alberta have been able to find markets for crushed and rolled feed barley and oats in the United States. I believe there have been misunderstandings between the Canadian Wheat Board and farmers as to whether they can ship this product by permit.

Can the minister inform me where the product must originate and what the price should be?

More specifically, my questions are: First, are permits issued by the Canadian Wheat Board readily available to farmers wishing to export their feed barley and oats to the United States and, secondly, what are the conditions attached to these permits? Are farmers able to ship from their farms by truck at their negotiated price to prospective customers across the border? Are there restrictions as to the form of the product—that being whole grain, crushed grain, or rolled grain—and if so, why?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I shall be very pleased to take that question as notice and bring a comprehensive answer to the honourable senator.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

IRAN—DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Leader of the Government, which I would ask him to direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As nations around the world, many of them less secure in energy than Canada, line up to express their outrage at Iran's breach of international law, has Canada given any further thought of severing diplomatic ties with that country? Is a decision being made on it, or when can one be expected?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Consideration is being given to a number of options that may be available should that very difficult situation continue. That question will be taken as notice.

CUBAN REFUGEES—CANADIAN COMMITMENT

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: While on the question of international matters, may I point out that apparently Canada has made an unofficial commitment to accept 300 refugees from Cuba. Could we determine from the Secretary of State for External Affairs how this would compare with the numbers that were accepted from Chile?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): That question will be taken as notice. I think, however, honourable senators are aware of Canada's outstanding international record in accepting refugees from persecution wherever that persecution may occur. Indeed, Canada's record is one of the very best in the world. This is a policy that has gone beyond the bounds of any partisan difference, and Canadians can take pride in that fact. I am not certain of the exact numbers, but that information will be obtained.

Senator Nurgitz: Given Canada's outstanding record, as the Leader of the Government has explained, since smaller and poorer nations have allegedly declared their willingness to receive proportionately much greater numbers, is Canada intending to increase its commitment in offering freedom to people in various countries who have endured oppression for some considerable period of time?

Senator Perrault: If details are made available to me by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, I would be most pleased to communicate that information to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. However, if there is a suggestion that Canada is not doing proportionately as well as certain other countries in the matter of receiving refugees, I disagree. For example, I suggest that the honourable senator study Canada's record in providing haven and refuge for the so-called boat people. I understand that Canada's record is among those of the top half-dozen nations in the entire world. Canada's record is substantially better than many, many countries with far larger populations.

Senator Flynn: Thank you for the compliment to the previous administration.

Senator Perrault: It is a record in which members of all parties can take pride.

NEWFOUNDLAND

ANNUAL SEAL HUNT—NEWSPAPER REPORT

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, it is only a month since the seal hunt finished in Newfoundland, and I think it might be appropriate to raise this question, which has to do with an article in the Washington Star in the United States, reported in yesterday's Ottawa Citizen, which indicated that protests from those in the United States against the annual Canadian seal hunt contain more than a little cultural arrogance, not to mention misinformation. In view of the fact that the matter is now clear, would the Leader of the Government ask the Minister of Fisheries, or the government, to send a letter of commendation to the Washington Star for pointing out to the hypocritical protesters that they are indeed wrong?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Over the years successive Canadian governments have been engaged in a program of public information with respect to the seal hunt. I am sure that Canadians welcome efforts by any publication, domestic or foreign, to explain the Canadian position. However, I would suggest that the initiative proposed by the honourable senator be the subject of a letter to that publication. Alternatively, the honourable senator may wish to address it personally to the Honourable Mark MacGuigan, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, for communication through channels in Washington. I do not believe that this Washington Star article should necessarily be the subject of any Senate resolution as such.

Senator Marshall: I have already done that.

ANNUAL SEAL HUNT—DYE SPRAYING OF SEALS BY PROTESTERS

Hon. Jack Marshall: I have another question on the seal hunt. The same protesters, particularly the Greenpeace Organization, deliberately went to the seal hunt this year and sprayed the pelts of seals with a green dye, which may possibly hurt the meat and the animals themselves. Would the Leader of the Government inquire whether the appropriate government department will investigate the effects of that green dye on the seals, to further point out the hypocrisy of the protesters, particularly the Greenpeace Organization?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): That question will be communicated to the appropriate minister, and a reply will be obtained.

FINANCE

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—EXPENDITURE CUTS

Hon. C. William Doody: I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development relating to the Auditor General's report, which I realize is a very touchy subject and on which we are not supposed to go into any detail. My question concerns one of the points the Auditor General raised in relation to what he feels are serious financial management problems within the Government of Canada. Could the minister tell us what steps the government took in looking at expenditure cuts for arriving at that horrendous deficit figure of Monday night's budget of $3.7 billion? What steps were taken to try to cut expenditure, in financial management terms, before we got into that rather startling new deficit figure?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the expenditure cuts were related to many things, including a whole lot of last-minute promises that the previous government made just before the election. It is a fact that the Minister of Finance stated in his presentation last Monday night that there was some reconsideration of some of the ongoing programs to determine their continuing viability. He also made it very clear that if any significant new programs were to be introduced they would either be matched by increased revenue or would be delayed. There is, therefore, a fairly intensive review of expenditures so that the deficit, which is of concern to this government, and of the previous government too, is going to be brought under control.

Senator Doody: The only program that I am aware of offhand that has been cut to help the expenditure side of the ledger is the aid to the shipbuilding industry or the fishing industry in eastern or Atlantic Canada. Are there any other specifics that the minister could identify, or is that the program that is intended specifically to ease the burden?

Senator Olson: The Minister of Finance said, of course, that he will not at this time reintroduce three measures affecting the deficit, namely, the common stock investment plan, and the changes in the treatment of both capital gains and registered retirement savings plans. He went on to say that he would want to consider these and other measures in more detail.

He also said, in addition to what the honourable member mentioned, the following:

> I am also not now making provisions for private corporations to be given tax contracts for investing in particular regions of the country.

That was the subject matter of a question raised yesterday. He also announced the following:

> —additional depletion allowances for oil and gas exploration in the frontier and offshore areas will not be continued, but will be replaced by a new incentive program to sustain the effort set in motion by the tax measure.

I could go on and read that speech, but I am sure that the honourable senator has access to it. Indeed, I am sure that every member of this house has read the speech, so I really do not think I need put it on the record again.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): What you are suggesting is that you cannot do anything but read the speech.

Senator Olson: What I am suggesting is that the honourable senator asked me specifically whether there are any other measures having to do with reducing the deficit. Since he apparently was not aware of them—otherwise I assume he would not have asked the question—I just drew a few of them to his attention. That is all I did.

Senator Smith (Colchester): It did not sound like that to us.

MEASURES TO ENCOURAGE INVESTMENT

Hon. C. William Doody: Along the same lines, now that Senator Olson has read into the record the various program cuts brought forward Monday evening to try to slow down investment in Canada, I also notice that the gracious Speech tells us that the Foreign Investment Review Act will be amended to provide for performance reviews and other changes designed to strengthen it—I presume, they are designed to strengthen it. With the Foreign Investment Review Act strengthened and more vigorously enforced, plus the various items designed to discourage investment which the minister just mentioned, does the government have any plans, then, to encourage investment, preferably, Canadian investment—although history does not tell us that that is very likely—in the less developed areas of the country, particularly Atlantic Canada?

[Senator Olson.]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, Senator Doody, of course, said things in the preamble to his question with which I completely disagree. There are no provisions to discourage investment. In fact, there are encouraging signs of a significant increase in business investment in Canada to increase our capacity. That is also referred to in the Speech. So, what the honourable senator is trying to do is say black is white.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Shame.

Senator Olson: He comes along, makes an assumption, and asserts what he says is true, when it is exactly opposite to what the facts are. I am sorry that he puts that kind of premise on his question, because the question then falls to the ground and there can be no reply to it.

Senator Smith (Colchester): There is no reply, in any event.

NATIONAL UNITY

THE CONSTITUTION—MEETING OF PREMIERS OF WESTERN PROVINCES

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government. At the conclusion yesterday of a meeting of the four western premiers held in Lethbridge, a call went out for a permanent conference of first ministers to deal with the Constitution, with the first meeting to be convened soon after the Quebec referendum. I should like to know whether the government is receptive to the request of the four western premiers for such a conference?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Asselin has posed a good question. However, I have not had an opportunity to study the complete text of the premiers' statements. An answer will be forthcoming.

Senator Asselin: My question is supplementary to the one I just asked. Can the government leader tell us whether the government intends making proposals for constitutional changes before the date of the referendum to provide Quebecers with an alternative to the question asked by the Quebec government during the referendum campaign? If not, will the government undertake to table immediately after the referendum these constitutional changes which are necessary and which everyone recognizes as necessary to safeguard Canadian unity?

[English]

Senator Perrault: The question will be taken as notice.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—ARREST OF DR. ANDREI SAKHAROV—OFFICIAL PROTEST BY CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, as swiftly moving world events have overtaken us during the recent parliamentary hiatus, I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether the Canadian government has forwarded an official protest following the arrest, degradation and internal exile by the U.S.S.R. of the the eminent scientist, leading human rights activist and Nobel Peace Laureate, Dr. Andrei Sakharov, who dared to condemn the U.S.S.R. intervention in Afghanistan?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have no knowledge of any such communication, but an inquiry will go forward and information will be sought.

PRICE OF 1980 SILVER DOLLARS

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. In view of the great interest that numismatic collectors have shown in the new 1980 Canadian silver dollar, is the leader now in a position to answer the question I put to him some time ago?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the information has as yet not been received. It will be made available as soon as it is received.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

BOYCOTT OF 1980 OLYMPIC GAMES IN MOSCOW—ALTERNATIVE GAMES SITES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Leader of the Government in connection with a statement made yesterday in the other place regarding the Olympic Games. As reported to me, the government undertook to support properly organized alternative international sporting competitions as a way of compensating athletes for not having a chance to go to Moscow.

I ask my honourable friend whether the government is considering taking any initiatives in this respect in contrast to supporting alternatives that might be suggested by others?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Possible alternative sites have been under active study by a number of nations, including Canada. The time frame is such that it may be extremely difficult to organize an international event of this kind in one place. However, a number of governments are studying the possibility of either regional or national alternative games to provide opportunities for athletes who have invested many years of training, effort and money to prepare themselves for Olympic competition.

I understand that the question of some form of alternative games is being pursued actively, not only by Canada, but by a number of other countries as well.

Senator Roblin: That is an encouraging response, honourable senators, but I should like to ask my honourable friend if he does not think it would be possible for the Government of Canada to take an initiative of its own on this subject. I had in mind the fact that in several cities in this country there are existing Olympic class facilities. Certainly in the city of Montreal there are, and also in the city of Winnipeg. I am sure there are Olympic class facilities available in other parts of the country as well.

While I appreciate that the Government of Canada might not feel inclined to move on this in terms of the Canadian picture alone, I am sure that if it took an initiative it might receive a favourable response from the provinces and cities concerned. What bothers me is the concept of this matter being allowed to drift. Time is a problem, as my honourable friend has said, but the longer we allow it to drift—and in Canada we have let it drift for several weeks, to say the least—the harder it becomes to do anything. Somebody should stand up and say, "Look here, we are concerned about these athletes who have dedicated their lives for the past four years to training for the Olympic Games, and we propose to do something ourselves." These athletes are, in a sense, the innocent victims, and if this were to take place, it would be a very heartening initiative, and I ask my honourable friend to urge the government to take it.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the policy of the Canadian government with respect to the Olympic boycott issue represents anything but "drift" and "indecision." Since this government assumed its responsibilities following the February 18 election, we have been in continuing contact with other nations in an attempt to evolve a united position.

Senator Flynn: Who are your allies—the socialists?

Senator Perrault: That initiative has resulted in the declaration by an ever-increasing number of nations that they, too, intend to boycott the Olympic Games in Moscow. It has always been the Canadian position that there should be a strong and united approach on the part of as many nations as possible with respect to the boycott.

The plight of the athletes has always been a matter of profound concern as far as this government is concerned. A number of initiatives have been launched, not only by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but also by the Honourable Gerald Regan, who, in addition to being Minister of Labour, is Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport, to determine ways in which the excellence of these athletes can be brought to the attention of the Canadian people and the people of the world, as well as ways in which their competitive abilities can be measured in some type of meet or event.

Various proposals have been studied. We discussed earlier the idea of holding alternative games at one site, and it was determined that there would be very serious practical impediments to the staging of such an event. Another alternative proposed by some is the idea of a regional games, involving a more limited range of nations.

A number of nations, including Canada, are considering the possibility of what has been termed "enhanced national games." These would be what one might term "national super games." Perhaps various sites across the country could be employed to enable the Canadian people to witness the excellence of our athletes in competition. Such an event might include invitations to athletes of other nations to participate, with Canadian athletes, in turn, participating in the national games organized by other countries.

That is a long way of saying that, yes, this government is very concerned about the situation now confronting our Canadian athletes, all of whom have invested a good deal of time and effort in bringing their skills to competitive form.

The questions asked by the Honourable Senator Roblin are precisely the questions we have been grappling with, wrestling with, in recent weeks.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, without wishing to appear ungracious—because obviously my honourable friend's heart is in the right place—I have to inform him that this "After you, Alphonse" routine that the government went through in arriving at this decision was unnecessary. To my mind, the Canadian people would have appreciated, and supported in large measure, a prompt statement from the government at the very time it took office. "Pussyfooting" is perhaps an unfair word, and I do not really mean it in its pejorative sense, but it is that kind of hesitation that gives rise to a lot of concern in the public mind.

I appreciate what my honourable friend has said about a national competition. However, in my opinion, such an event would not really do the trick. Our athletes are looking for international competition, and I see no reason why, given the facilities we have around this country, there could not be such competition.

Winnipeg, as an example, has an Olympic size swimming pool at which international competitions could be held. I am sure the government would receive an enthusiastic response from the City of Winnipeg in connection with the use of that facility.

There is no practical necessity in having all events take place at the one site. Indeed, in many cases they are spread around a bit now. Modern communications being what they are, that is no problem.

I would urge my honourable friend to do what I asked him to do in the first place, and that is to take the initiative in terms of establishing alternate games. Certainly, I think I am safe enough in saying that the citizens of the province of Manitoba would certainly be willing to co-operate with the Government of Canada in respect of the Olympic size pool facility at Winnipeg, and I am sure similar inquiries would strike the same responsive chord in other parts of the country.

Senator Perrault: The senator's representations will be closely noted, and all of us in the Senate appreciate the spirit in which these recommendations are offered. Certainly, there is no doubt that there are many Canadian centres which would be willing to host certain events.

Again, I emphasize that the Olympic boycott decision was not taken with undue reluctance. Canada was not dragged into this position "kicking" and "struggling." Indeed, the announcement made yesterday, and its timing, came as a result of close consultation with Canada's friends in the community of nations.

PARTICIPATION OF CANADIAN ATHLETES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, I would ask a further question of the Leader of the Government in connection with the Olympic Games. In the event that, following the meeting of the Canadian Olympic Association, some of our athletes decide to participate, has the government given any thought to cancelling the passports of such athletes?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): There is no intention at this time to do so. However, athletes who decide to participate in the Moscow Games would receive no financial assistance from the government.

VISIT TO CANADA OF U.S. SECRETARY OF STATE

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, mindful of the importance of the visit today to Canada of Secretary of State Vance, and recalling the enormous interest in meetings between American and Canadian statesmen exhibited by the government members some months ago when they were in opposition, could the Leader of the Government indicate what points will be put forward by the Canadian government in discussions with Secretary of State Vance and, in particular, but not exclusive of, points in reference to the developing situation in the Georges Bank, which is causing anxiety to our fishermen.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there are a number of issues on the agenda for discussion, including questions of importance to those living on both coasts of Canada and at points between. However, I do not feel free at this time to particularize with respect to that agenda. If possible the registered information will be obtained and communicated to honourable senators.

AIRLINES

APPLICATION OF EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS TO EXTEND SERVICE

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. I assume he is aware of the recent decision of the Canadian Transport Commission in refusing the application of Eastern Provincial Airways to be allowed to fly from Halifax to Toronto. Assuming he is familiar with that decision, is he aware whether Eastern Provincial Airways has launched an appeal from that decision with the Government of Canada?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have not heard of any such appeal. I shall attempt to determine whether in fact an appeal has been launched. I have no personal knowledge of it.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I now have a reply to a question asked by Senator Doody on April 16 last with respect to a new Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act. It is a rather lengthy reply, and I would ask that it be taken as read. If that is not the wish of honourable senators, I shall read it.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I would prefer that my honourable friend read it. I see he has one sheet of paper in his hand. If that is it, I would prefer that he read it. It is rather important.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I wish to reply to a question asked by Senator Doody during the Question Period on Wednesday, April 16, concerning the status of negotiations between the Government of Canada and the provinces for the re-negotiation of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977.

The honourable senator's inquiry stemmed from certain remarks made by the President of the Treasury Board on March 16 of this year. In an interview on the CTV program Question Period, the Honourable Donald Johnston pointed out, in effect, that the shares of revenue between the federal government and the provinces have changed over the past few years and that it is important to review the implications of these developments.

The main components of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977 are fiscal equalization, tax collection agreements and established programs financing arrangements covering hospital insurance, medicare and post-secondary education.

As you know, the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements have a five-year term. The current fiscal arrangements period began on April 1, 1977 and will end on March 31, 1982. Periodic review of these arrangements is necessary precisely because circumstances change over time. The quinquennial renegotiation of the fiscal arrangements is clearly a very important exercise in the area of federal-provincial relations. The current arrangement now has slightly less than two years to run and technical work has already begun at the officials' level. Formal discussion at the ministerial level is not yet under way but when it does begin it will certainly be placed in the broad context of the issue of revenue sharing.

The tax collection agreements have no expiry date but are constantly under review by the provincial and federal governments. Established Programs Financing has no expiry date but it is open to the federal government to modify should this be deemed necessary. The plans of the federal government, then, are to review the fiscal arrangements in concert with the provinces in the light of the emerging pattern of revenues by level of government. This review will culminate in renewed fiscal arrangements for the period beginning April 1, 1982. It is too early at this stage to project with any certainty exactly what modifications the fiscal arrangements will undergo in this process.

Senator Roblin: May I ask a supplementary question on that? Could my honourable friend give us a target date as to when he expects meetings with the provinces to take place?

Senator Olson: I do not think I could give a precise date, but I am sure that the federal government is now in the process of trying to get some commitment—perhaps "agreement" is a better word—from the provinces as to when this begins. As my honourable friend knows there are some differences between the arrangements with different provinces with respect to this, although they are generally uniform. I suppose it would culminate in a full-scale federal-provincial conference, but I am sure that is quite a long way down the road.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, April 17 consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's Speech at the opening of the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament, and the motion of Senator Rousseau, seconded by Senator Hays, for an Address in reply thereto.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, in opening this debate the Honourable Senator Rousseau and the Honourable Senator Hays did not only themselves and their party proud, but they did us all proud. I congratulate them very sincerely. I can only wish that those two honourable senators had been able to collaborate in the writing of the Speech from the Throne, or in the writing of the Prime Minister's inaugural speech in this Parliament, both of which could have used a dose of the balanced optimism about Canada that those two honourable senators expressed in the course of their speeches.

Some very fine things have been said about our former Speaker, Senator Grosart, and deservedly so. It is no secret that we in the Progressive Conservative Party were very happy with his appointment as Speaker last fall. I suppose it can be related now that last summer, at the time that the question of the appointment of a Speaker for this house was under consideration, messages came from the other side, in the mysterious way that messages have of coming in these corridors, to the general effect that so far as the Liberal Party was concerned, they too would be more than delighted if the Prime Minister of the day saw fit to appoint Senator Allister Grosart as Speaker of the Senate. The advice was superfluous, but it was very welcome, nonetheless, and turned out to be very good advice in the event. For us, we have not so much lost a Speaker as we have regained a party spokesman of immense experience who manifestly enjoys the respect of parliamentarians on both sides of this chamber.

As far as our new Speaker is concerned, I am one of, I suppose, many thousands of Canadians who have followed his career with admiration and respect for a long time. He has many achievements to his credit. There have been two relatively recent events in his career that some people might regard as being—and he himself might regard as being—the low points of his career, but which I thought were very revealing of the values and the integrity that he brings to public life.

One was his resignation from the administration a couple of years ago on a matter of principle, on which, as it turns out, in my opinion, he was not only right but prophetic. The other was a decision in 1976, in the almost impossible political circumstances of that year in Quebec, to enter the provincial field and seek a seat in the National Assembly, to enter a campaign to fight for the kind of Canada that he and we believe in. He went into the provincial election in Quebec in 1976——with the results that we know, but they do not depreciate his gesture which was both courageous and exemplary.

[English]

Honourable senators, the election is over. After a brief interruption the Trudeau government is back in power. It is not at all to denigrate that achievement—and it was an achievement by the Leader of the Liberal Party and the Liberal Party itself—it is not to denigrate it to say that theirs is not a massive national mandate. Over half of their elected members come from one province, and they have no representation from three provinces. I know that the Right Honourable the Prime Minister has sought to overcome the regional imbalance produced by the election returns by appointing several distinguished members of this place to the administration, and I congratulate them, although I am not very encouraged by the results to date of those appointments.

In the last Parliament, the present Minister of State for Economic Development, Senator Olson, made a very interesting speech on energy policy. If any of those ideas have penetrated the consciousness of the Minister of Energy, Mine and Resources, it is certainly not apparent to date.

Last night there was a series of questions in this house from Senator Nurgitz and Senator Balfour as well as myself concerning the insensitive decision of the government, of the Minister of Finance, to cancel Mr. Crosbie's measure to permit farmers a once-in-a-lifetime deferral on capital gains tax on the sale of their farms if they transfer the gains to a registered retirement savings plan. That was a measure that was of some importance to many farmers everywhere. They had been seeking it for many years. Yet the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board was unable to provide a rationale for it.

It is clear that, even if he supports the decision as a matter of cabinet solidarity—and I take it that he does—the decision, even although it had disagreeable and unwelcome consequences for farmers, is not one that he participated in. It is bad news for farmers that such decisions can be taken without the participation of Saskatchewan's or, I suppose, Alberta's representative in the federal cabinet. It is all well and good to appoint senators to the administration in order to overcome the regional imbalance, but it is futile if those ministers are given what Gordie Howe, another great son of Saskatchewan, once called the "mushroom treatment." In any case, the honourable gentlemen opposite have the privilege and responsibility of governing.

The Clark government that was elected on May 22 had a very short stay in power, but it was long enough to formulate and present our proposals to deal with some of the major problems and opportunities facing our country.

The Clark government had worked out an agreement with the oil-producing provinces and we had put forward a national energy policy that went beyond price, went beyond oil, and went beyond the short term to solve the problems with which we are now confronted. The Progressive Conservative Government had analysed the state of federal finances and its impact on our national economic goals, and our solution was in the measures proposed by Mr. Crosbie's budget last December.

Those policies, in particular our energy policy and our fiscal and economic policies, were not accepted by Parliament. They were not endorsed by the electorate in February. I happen to believe, and events as they unfold are reinforcing my belief, that time will vindicate those policies.

In any case, we will stand by them until the present Trudeau government implements policies that solve the problems rather than worsen them.

The present Trudeau government has four or five years to solve our problems, to produce results; but they do not have, as they seem to think they have, four or five years in which to develop solutions at their leisure. It is vital to the national economy, to the private sector, to provincial and municipal governments, to individuals and institutions who have decisions pending, that there be an honest, clear statement of this government's fiscal and economic policy.

There has hardly been a good word for the performance of the Minister of Finance two nights ago from any of the players in the Canadian economy, whether labour, small business, big business, farmers, the housing industry or other levels of government. This is not because the minister proposed harsh measures, but because his performance was so transparently an attempt to buy time until this disorganized government gets its act together.

A respected commentator, Ronald Anderson, says that the minister confirmed "what many had suspected; the federal government is adrift on a sea of troubles—without a compass." Mr. MacEachen's statement, says Mr. Anderson, is "a pointless, ineffectual policy statement that does not even pretend to have a purpose."

Honourable senators, with such an assessment of the government's posture all too general, confidence in the Canadian economy can only be adversely affected.

Mr. Crosbie last December brought in budgetary policies that were designed first of all to reduce the national debt and get government spending under control. This was not because we regarded a balanced budget as an end in itself, or because we have any doctrinaire objection to deficit spending, but because in our judgment the federal deficits we inherited and the $8.6 billion that we were spending in annual interest charges were a drag on the economy.

During the last Parliament in this place, Senator Everett had some things to say about budgetary deficits. I will not associate him with Mr. Crosbie's budget, but I think most of us would associate ourselves with Senator Everett's statement of November 20 here, when he said:

> I believe we have to control spending and eliminate deficits simply because deficit spending prevents us from employing the sound fiscal measures that will make our economy more efficient and more productive.

And after referring to various fiscal incentives for housing and oil exploration and the like, Senator Everett said:

> The reason you control government spending, the reason you eliminate deficits, is to have the ability to bring into play those kinds of measures. If you are in a deficit situation, as we are today, you can only do so much, and the result is that you are precluded from doing many things that you should be doing.

I believe the former Prime Minister and the former Minister of Finance would associate themselves with those statements. Mr. Clark said in a speech a day or two after the budget was presented:

> We see a lower deficit as absolutely essential to achieving our far more important goals of lower inflation and lower unemployment.

It is clear that the present government takes a far different view. During the election campaign Mr. Trudeau condemned the Progressive Conservative Government for what he described as our "obsession" with the deficit. The ambivalent reference to the deficit in the Speech from the Throne and the lack of any program to contain expenditures in Mr. MacEachen's speech the other night indicates that lowering the deficit is no longer an objective, much less a priority, of the Government of Canada.

Even in this house during this debate the Leader of the Government dismissed concerns about government spending by referring to them as "that old chestnut." The minister would do well to read or reread the admonitions of the Governor of the Bank of Canada on that very subject.

Well, there is room for argument on these matters, but as time goes on the stalling and the temporizing of the government and its inability to come to a decision will only add to Canada's problems.

In the words of Senator Lamontagne in the last session:

> Such neglect can only be described as the Titanic approach to economic planning.

Senator Lamontagne nods his head in agreement. I am delighted to see that.

Senator Lamontagne: That was your approach.

Senator Murray: I am using his words to describe the approach of the present government, obviously. Senator Lamontagne went on:

> We want the suspense to stop. We want this government to govern.

And so say we.

Senator Asselin: What is your answer?

Senator Lamontagne: Those are very good words.

Senator Murray: They are very good words and very apt at this time in our history. Nowhere is the need more urgent than to clear up the confusion about government policy and to bring in solutions than in the field of energy policy.

• (1530)

In 1973 the Prime Minister of Canada committed his government to self-sufficiency in oil and oil products for the end of the 1970s. In 1976 the target was reduced to "self-reliance", and the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources without elaboration told us that the difference between self-reliance and self-sufficiency was "subtle but real".

During the election campaign, Mr. Trudeau again attacked our "obsession" with self-sufficiency. The Minister of State for Economic Development, on March 20, said:

> Canada must speed up its objective of oil sufficiency. It can and must be done before 1990.

That statement has, for all practical purposes, been disavowed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in the other place.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources made a speech in the other place a few days ago about energy policy. It is one that the Minister of State for Economic Development, and Senator Austin, who made a speech in this place last session about energy policy, should read, because I challenge them to find in that speech an energy policy that this country can understand, much less live with.

We now have the unedifying spectacle of ministers trying to cover their tracks on the question of oil pricing and the commitments that were made about oil pricing during the election campaign. There have been at least three different positions taken. The entire country is bracing itself for a breach of faith on oil prices as dramatic as the Trudeau reversal on wage and price controls.

The previous government had committed itself to the objective of self-sufficiency, of ending our dependence on foreign sources, which are unreliable as to supply and certainly unpredictable as to price. The price was to go no higher than 85 per cent of the world price or the Chicago price, whichever is lower. There was to have been an 18-cent increase in the excise tax on gasoline with a 10-cent rebate for farmers, fishermen and urban public transit. There was to have been a refundable energy tax credit of $80 per adult and $30 per child to shelter low and middle income families from the impact of higher oil prices.

There was to have been a self-sufficiency tax which would have netted $6 billion over five years, every nickel of which was to have been reinvested in energy-related projects. It would have partially financed a Canadian Energy Bank to help Canadians invest in Canadian resource development, particularly in the frontier regions. It would have helped finance pipeline construction, develop hydro, coal and more experimental sources, fund home insulation, furnace retrofits, fuel substitution, urban transit and other conservation measures. It is worth putting those elements of the energy policy on the record.

The Government of Alberta was to have loaned $2 billion to the energy bank. They agreed to invest $3 billion in equity and debt in the next two oil sands plants. They would have helped fund five new energy projects in other provinces. Alberta was to have sold natural gas at 85 per cent of the price of oil and 65 per cent of new gas going to eastern Canada, and at the same gate price in Quebec City as in Toronto.

When he spoke in this chamber last session, Senator Everett referred to the longer term problem of the redistribution of natural resource revenues. Our colleague, Senator Macquarrie, the other day made reference to the former Prime Minister's speech at Spruce Grove during the last election campaign. That speech was prepared not for an election campaign but for a meeting of first ministers which was to have been held in this city on December 13 had parliamentary events not intervened. It is clear that the next item on the agenda—and in our judgment it was a logical progression, once the matter of pricing had been settled—was to obtain an agreement on the entire question of redistribution and of the fiscal imbalance in this country.

The energy policy of the Progressive Conservative government and the agreement reached with Alberta have been on the record for some time. We shall see whether the Trudeau government can do better. We know that they can impose a price. We know that there are constitutional provisions, which today most people would regard as rather Draconian, that they can avail themselves of. The question is whether they can obtain an agreement with the producing provinces and come up with an overall policy and program that is as beneficial to Canada as ours would have been. I hope they can. But it does not look very promising. Not only is there no agreement with the producing provinces but—I say this on the authority of a reply given by the Minister of State for Economic Development some days ago—but there is not even a federal proposal on the table. Not only is there no agreement with the producing provinces, but there is no agreement among federal ministers.

Since 1973 we have lurched from one improvisation to the next from year to year. Are we going to have more of this, and with what result in terms of our dependence on foreign sources? I am told that we now import about 25 per cent of our oil and that at the rate we are going it will be about 40 per cent by 1985, or about 200 million barrels annually by that time.

[Senator Murray.]

Serious people who read the speech of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will find it hard to believe that a responsible minister, purporting to state the government's energy policy, delivered a speech so devoid of hard policy. The truth is that there is a vacuum in energy policy at the federal level, and that until the vacuum is filled this country will be at a standstill in terms of the kind of planning we need to solve a national problem and achieve national objectives. The country will pay a heavy price—and I am not speaking about the price of a barrel of oil or a gallon of gasoline. I am talking about the price in economic, social and even political terms if a national policy is not put into place soon.

These are matters on which Her Majesty's loyal opposition, convinced of the soundness of our policies, will be holding the government rigorously to account. We would, of course, prefer to have been in government implementing our own policies, but we are now in opposition. We will be as diligent and as conscientious in carrying out that responsibility as we would have been in government, believing as we do that in our parliamentary system the one role is as vital as the other and that at this time in our history the Conservative Party has a role to play that no other party can play in defending our institutions and preserving our Confederation.

There are several comments I would like to make on this issue because it is very important to defend our institutions. Since coming to power in 1968, the Trudeau government has more often than not been characterized by its attitude of intolerance rather than by its spirit of liberalism and democracy. The unreasonable attack launched by Mr. Ouellet against the information media and especially against Radio-Canada is but a recent example. In October 1969, Prime Minister Trudeau himself lost his temper because a Radio-Canada reporter had asked an American businessman, David Rockefeller, what would be the attitude of foreign investors towards an independent Quebec.

Prime Minister Trudeau used this interview as an excuse to launch a virulent attack against Radio-Canada during which he even threatened to "lock up the joint". He even suggested that the federal government could produce programs on its own. After the Quebec elections of 1976, we witnessed a concerted attack by federal ministers against Radio-Canada. Mr. Ouellet said he had a list of the Péquistes in the ranks of the French network. And for this insult to political liberties of Canadian citizens, Mr. Ouellet was publicly congratulated in the house by the Prime Minister of Canada.

An inquiry by the CRTC proved that Mr. Ouellet had purely and simply embarked on a witch hunt. At about the same time, the minister was interviewed on CBC. During the interview he mentioned the mandate of the corporation by saying, and I quote:

[English]

> It is written right in the law that Radio Canada and CBC have a clear mandate from Parliament to foster national unity, therefore if when it comes that there is a question of the referendum, I don't want to see Radio Canada on the fence presenting as a neutral body the two sides. I think mostly, that they should not present the other side. I think it would be unfair to chuck them out and refuse them (sic) to present the other side, but as an instrument of Canadian unity with a mandate to foster Canadian unity, I believe that... Radio Canada... should be promoting Canadian unity and being (sic) on the side of those who want this country united—

It seems pretty clear that the minister and his colleagues are applying whatever legal weight attaches to the parliamentary mandate given the CBC, plus their own moral suasion, if I can call it that, to try and influence the professional news coverage and editorial judgment of the journalists and producers employed by Radio Canada and the CBC.

[Translation]

On the eve of the Quebec referendum, it seems that Mr. Ouellet and his federal Liberal colleague are preparing a replay of the campaign of political intimidation against the management and reporters of Radio-Canada.

Senator Asselin: It is not true?

Senator Goldenberg: No, it is not true.

Senator Asselin: No. So you are saying the opposite of what Mr. Ouellet said.

Senator Murray: So I for one would not be surprised if last week, because of his excessive language, the minister had swung more new votes over to the yes side than René Lévesque. In any case, we consider any political interference with the freedom of speech or the freedom of the press as more detrimental to Canadian values than an independentist movement could be.

Honourable senators, with respect to the state of our federation, the Speech from the Throne makes an analysis with which I find myself in deep disagreement. It paints a dark, even alarmist picture of the attitudes in the different regions and provinces of Canada. The writers of the Speech from the Throne do not find anything positive in the economic, social and cultural aspirations of our regions. They warn us against the enticement of regional isolationalism. They see divisive forces everywhere in this country. They claim the Canadian tradition of sharing is being challenged. Wherever they look, they see only quarrels, feelings of envy and bitterness, recriminations, and we are called upon to check the forces of disintegration which, if we believe the Speech from the Throne, exist in all areas of this country.

The Canada that is described in the Speech from the Throne, that Canada that is supposedly being assailed by the forces of disintegration in all regions, I must say that is not the Canada I know. Of course, there are very serious disagreements in federal-provincial as well as interprovincial relations.

There will always be difficult problems to solve in our federation, but I repeat, the depressing and pessimistic picture painted by the Speech from the Throne is not a true picture of what Canada is today.

The Prime Minister of Canada in his first statement in this parliamentary session indulged in an equally pessimistic analysis of the attitudes of Canadians.

[English]

The Prime Minister spoke of "the enemy within". He spoke of Canadians acting as though the language and culture of other Canadians was a threat to them. He spoke of Canadians slamming the door, one in the face of the other. The Prime Minister is wrong in describing those attitudes as if they reflected the state of affairs generally across the country. It is a distorted picture he gives of the country, especially when he says not a word about the progress that has been made, or about the willingness of virtually every other province to proceed with constitutional reform; not a word about the fact that he has had a letter on his desk since 1977 from the Premier of Ontario proposing that education rights in both languages in that province and across the country be guaranteed in the Constitution; not a word about the fact that for 10 years or more New Brunswick has sought to have its official languages act effectively entrenched; not a word about the tens of thousands of ordinary Canadians who are trying, through various spontaneous or voluntary efforts, to send a message to Quebec to stay. The Prime Minister's description of a Canada everywhere selfish and divided is inaccurate, and does a disservice to Canada. That kind of unfair caricature of Canadian attitudes can only reinforce the false arguments of those in Quebec or elsewhere who think and say that national unity in Canada is impossible.

The Right Honourable the Prime Minister says that the enemy within "is when loyalties are no longer to the whole, but there is a conflict of loyalties, when we seek protection of our wealth, our rights or our language not in the whole country, but in a region or province of that country." The tug between regional identity and loyalty to the nation has existed since the beginning in this country, and we have managed, from the beginning, to harmonize and reconcile those forces that tug at each of us personally and are reflected in our institutions.

I read the news reports on the recent C.D. Howe Institute study, and I have heard what the western premiers have been saying and, in fact, said only the other day about their dissatisfaction with the status quo and their determination to have changes made. However, none of that warrants the almost apocalyptic vision that has been conjured up for us by the Right Honourable the Prime Minister recently, nor does it warrant his very mistaken admonition to parliamentarians, when he said:

> —when we disagree, that that disagreement not be based on regional interests, on the fact that it might be the duty of provincial governments to serve, but be based on the concept of the whole which we try to serve in our different ways.

I have quoted just one of several excerpts along the same line from the Prime Minister.

That is to suggest that a parliamentarian must put regional interests behind him when he comes here. That also suggests that a parliamentarian should leave these matters to provincial governments and that this is not the place to represent regional perspectives. That is to further suggest that a legislator cannot really be a good Quebecer, Nova Scotian, Ontarian or Albertan and a good Canadian at the same time, and that we must always choose. That seems to me to be René Lévesque's line, and I find it astonishing to hear it coming from the lips of the Prime Minister of Canada.

I trust that that distorted picture of the state of Canada today is not to be used as a pretext for the federal government's going on the political warpath at some future time against the provinces because that, I believe, would really be damaging to Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Will the honourable senator accept a question? In view of the recent admonition, as I understood it, from the Premier of Ontario to the federal government that it stay out of the Penetanguishene situation, could we have some particulars of the letter that is supposed to have been sent suggesting the entrenchment or the establishment of certain educational rights in Ontario? Do I understand that a letter was sent by the Premier of Ontario to the Prime Minister?

Senator Murray: I am sure it is a matter of public record. It was sent in September 1977 by the Premier of Ontario to the Prime Minister of Canada. I do not have the text with me, but I am sure it is available either from the Prime Minister's office or from the office of the Premier of Ontario. It is very much on the record as suggesting that we proceed at once to guarantee language of education in Ontario and in the other provinces.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne: Why can the premier not proceed in his own legislature at the moment?

Senator Frith: That is what I do not understand. "We should proceed" means who should proceed? Does it mean Ontario and the federal government should proceed on the question of language rights in Ontario?

Senator Murray: That the federal Parliament and the provincial legislatures should proceed to entrench the rights to education in either of the official languages across the country. That letter is on the record.

Senator Frith: Quite apart from the record, I am quite satisfied to have the honourable senator's recollection since he must have a clear recollection or he would not have referred to this matter in his speech. Is the suggestion, as he understands it, from Premier Davis that the federal government and Ontario should get together about entrenching language rights in what—the federal Constitution, and giving jurisdiction over education and language rights to whom?

Senator Murray: No, no change of jurisdiction at all, but guaranteeing, in the Constitution, the right to education in either of the official languages across the country.

Senator Frith: Without any change of jurisdiction?

Senator Murray: No change.

Senator Frith: Therefore, jurisdiction for education would stay as it presently is, with the provinces, but that it would be entrenched in the Constitution in all of the provinces, and those rights would be guaranteed. Is that the position of Ontario?

Senator Murray: Yes, as I understand it, that is the position taken by the Premier of Ontario in a letter sent to the Prime Minister of Canada in September 1977.

Senator Lamontagne: On that basis, why is the Premier of Ontario not using his constitutional responsibilities and competence as they exist now to provide, through a bill in the Ontario legislature, rights for francophones in Ontario?

Senator Murray: Although it might not be in order, perhaps we could have a debate about the progress that has been made with regard to education in the province of Ontario and in some of the other provinces.

Senator Roblin: In Manitoba.

Senator Murray: And in Manitoba, as Senator Roblin suggests. Perhaps then we could discover where we have made progress, and where we seem to have been backing away from bilingualism instead of proceeding towards it.

Senator Lamontagne: He is not doing anything.

Senator Murray: Senator Lamontagne says that Premier Davis is not doing anything. That is an interesting accusation to leave on the record.

Senator Lamontagne: In terms of legislation.

Senator Frith: I should like to ask another question. I perhaps misunderstood, but I drew the inference that in some way the federal government is standing in the way of the effectiveness of the New Brunswick Official Languages Act. What I heard was that the Prime Minister was not taking into account the progress that has been made, and the indication was that someone was blocking the entrenchment or the effectiveness of the New Brunswick Official Languages Act. I did not understand what that meant.

Senator Murray: At least as far back as the Victoria Conference, and perhaps before that, the Province of New Brunswick has sought, effectively, to have those rights to the two official languages contained in its own Official Languages Act put in the form of constitutional guarantees. I did not suggest that the federal government had blocked that. I referred to the New Brunswick position, along with the progress that has been made elsewhere in the country, as an indication of the improvement in attitudes that has taken place in this country. I think a balanced résumé of the situation in the country, had the Prime Minister chosen to give one, would have included those facts.

Senator Thériault: Do I understand Senator Murray correctly to suggest that the Prime Minister and the federal government should proceed without the consent of the provinces and have those rights entrenched in the Constitution?

Senator Murray: No, absolutely not; there is no justification for that inference at all. I was talking about the change in attitudes and the progress that has been made in the country in this field in the last ten, twelve or more years, and I pointed out the positions taken by the present Government of New Brunswick and by its predecessor in those matters as an example of that kind of progress, period. There was certainly no suggestion that the federal government ought to proceed without the consent of the provinces to amend the Constitution in matters of provincial jurisdiction.

Senator Thériault: What is the honourable senator suggesting that the Prime Minister of Canada should do to help those basic rights to become entrenched in the Constitution?

Senator Murray: What I was saying is that the Prime Minister of Canada, in the Speech from the Throne for which he is responsible, and in his own inaugural speech in this Parliament, has painted a picture of the state of opinion, attitudes, and the state of affairs in this country which, in my judgment, is unduly pessimistic and even apocalyptic. If he had wanted to give, as he should have given, a balanced résumé of the situation of the country he would have pointed to the progress that has been made in New Brunswick, Manitoba and Ontario, and attitudes generally across the country.

● (1600)

Senator Lamontagne: I admit Senator Murray has of course the right to criticize French-speaking federalists who are now fighting for the survival of their country, but I wonder why he did not choose to attack also those who are advocating separatism in Quebec and who are attempting to convince Quebecers by statements which are quite often false and dishonest?

Senator Murray: I leave such a task to the honourable senator and his colleagues.

Senator Lamontagne: Thank you.

Senator Asselin: Senator Lamontagne did not understand that Senator Murray more particularly referred to the statements on the CBC and the press made by the minister, André Ouellet.

[English]

Hon. H. Carl Goldenberg: May I clarify a point raised by Senator Murray? I understood him to say he feels that the Government of Canada should seek to entrench the language rights in the Constitution. I think I am right in that. That is what he said, and suggested that the Government of Canada has not tried to do that.

Senator Murray: I am astonished that the honourable senator should infer that from my speech. I am well aware of the suggestions and proposals that have been made by the Government of Canada for some time in regard to entrenching language rights. I pointed out two matters—one was a letter from the Premier of Ontario in September 1977, and the other was a long-standing proposal from the Government of New Brunswick—as examples of the progress that had been made. I said, as I have repeated several times since, that I alluded to those matters simply by way of saying that a balanced presentation or assessment of the situation of the country should have included reference to those facts. That is all.

Senator Goldenberg: I did not question what the honourable senator said. I believe I am the only one here who attended the Victoria Conference in 1971. I was there officially. We embodied in the Victoria Charter a proposal to entrench language rights, and it was only because one of the provinces refused to agree that that charter was dropped. If I misunderstood what the honourable senator said I apologize, but I think for the sake of the record it should be remembered that we tried that in the Victoria Charter. Also, there were federal-provincial conferences in 1978 and 1979 which were not successful, largely because the present Premier of Quebec would not negotiate and walked out. That is what should be remembered.

Senator Murray: Indeed, honourable senators, and that is the opposite of what the Prime Minister of Canada describes as Canadians slamming the door, one in the face of the other, and that is the opposite of what the Prime Minister of Canada describes as Canadians having unjustified fears about being threatened by another language and culture. That is a sign of progress.

Senator Goldenberg: I certainly agree with the honourable senator about the progress. I happen to know Canada very well, and there has certainly been progress.

Referring to his statement about the letter from Premier Davis—who, incidentally, is a very good friend of mine, and for whom I have worked at different times—I wonder why within his jurisdiction over education the premier does not take a stand on the Penetang school problem, since it is being used by the separatists in Quebec as a very strong argument against Canada.

Senator Asselin: Did you advise the Premier of Ontario to do that?

Senator Goldenberg: He did not consult me.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Senator Goldenberg has got a great imagination.

On motion of Senator Leblanc, debate adjourned.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

BOYCOTT OF 1980 OLYMPIC GAMES IN MOSCOW—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz, pursuant to notice of Wednesday, April 16, 1980, moved:

That the Government of Canada formally support the boycott of the 1980 Olympic Games by the United States of America and that the Government take note of the resolution adopted by the Ontario Legislature, via a free vote, calling upon the Government of Canada to boycott the Games;

That the Government of Canada affirm its solidarity with the dissidents, cultural and religious minorities in the Soviet Union, who, like the people of Afghanistan, are now under totalitarian Soviet dictatorship; and

That the Government of Canada affirm Canada's strong continued support for international human rights and worldwide peace.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I understand that the main body of the motion moved by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz refers to a matter that has already been resolved in the other place, and I wonder whether it is the practice, or in accordance with the rules, of this house that, in the circumstances, we should proceed with this motion.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): If I may speak to that point of order, I see no reason why the motion cannot be proceeded with as it is framed. It is quite true that some changes have taken place in one particular clause of this resolution since it was originally framed. However, I personally can see no objection to allowing the Honourable Senator Nurgitz to proceed with it. Indeed, if he wishes to comment upon the cancellation of the Games, as I would feel free to do if I were making a speech, I think it would be quite in order.

Hon. George J. McIlraith: If what the Honourable Senator Roblin has said is true—and I quite accept that it is—surely the correct procedure is for the mover of the motion to make the necessary amendment in the paragraph of his motion that appears to be slightly out of date in its wording. Surely that would be correct procedure in the circumstances. I do not think there should be any difficulty with making the necessary changes in the wording of this particular motion.

Senator Roblin: I see no reason for that. If that were the case, the resolution would have to be dropped from the order paper and reintroduced at a later time. If the mover of the motion, in the course of his remarks, wishes to make any reference to that point, I think that would be quite in order. I can see no parliamentary way of amending this resolution without withdrawing it and proceeding with it again.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Speaking to the point of order, the point rised by Senator Thériault is evidently one of interest, but I think a combination of the suggestions by Senator Roblin and Senator McIlraith would solve the problem. It is my respectful submission that we allow Senator Nurgitz to proceed. He can make comments of an amending nature. I think that is Senator Roblin's idea, and that would, I think, also comply with the point well taken by Senator McIlraith.

[Senator Nurgitz.]

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, far be it from me to prevent Senator Nurgitz from proceeding. As many senators present are aware, I have been in Parliament and the provincial legislature for 20 years or so, and in that respect I am always interested in procedure and decisions made in that regard. I do not necessarily agree with Senator Roblin when he says that there is no way of amending the motion without dropping it. If these are the procedures followed in this chamber, well and good. I just want to be informed. With any legislature or Parliament, the house is always the master of its own destiny, and with unanimous consent of the house, the motion could be amended and proceeded with.

Senator Roblin: I am not going to give consent.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, at the outset, I do commend the government's action announced yesterday by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the other place. I am pleased that the Government of Canada will boycott the 1980 Moscow Olympics.

I suppose there are some more partisan who might argue that this government has moved too slowly, but I am, honourable senators, pleased and proud that it has indeed moved in the right direction and I applaud them for this. I think the people of Canada approve of the boycott and, what is perhaps more important, I think people in all parts of the free world approve of it.

If there is anything that has become apparent once again during the last few years, it is our interdependence within an ever more difficult and challenging world. While we may have occasional disputes with our neighbours to the south, we share a common strategic interest and responsibility that must not be underestimated. Our world position, as a free and independent nation, is not diminished by our capacity to know who our friends are, and to act accordingly. Independence is not diminished by loyalty. Freedom to support one's friends is, I suggest, what the free world is all about.

Honourable senators, I am delighted that the present government has adopted the position of the former government of Prime Minister Clark in support of the boycott, thereby renouncing, hopefully to some extent, any significant partisan decision on this issue, an issue which surely commands from each and every one of us a farsighted view beyond the bonds of partisanship.

The heroism of Ambassador Taylor stood as a lonely beacon of friendship to our American neighbours at a particularly low time for them. It is fitting that we should have moved on this front, to advance and deepen that friendship, at a time when Americans will remember precisely who their friends are.

Honourable senators, I know there is no naiveté in this chamber about the international intentions of the Soviet Union. Their record is discouragingly consistent. Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Afghanistan—the actions speak clearly of the ever-present Soviet threat. The world reacted angrily to incursions in eastern Europe. Surely, we must not overlook the Afghanistan adventure simply because our cultures and ways of life are so different.

It is totally naive to talk, as boycott opponents do, of "injecting politics" into the Olympic Games. Unfortunately, the Soviet Union's approach to the Olympics is highly political itself. That is the reality to which we in the west must respond, and as a Canadian I am proud that our government has. Unlike the International Olympic Committee, the Russians do not pretend that politics and sports do not mix. The 1980 Soviet Communist Party handbook declares that holding the 1980 games in Moscow will be:

> —convincing testimony of the general recognition of the historic importance and correctness of the foreign policy course of our country.

Honourable senators, the Nazis before the 1936 Games were no more straightforward than that in declaring their views.

It appears that the recent purge of dissidents in the Soviet Union is directly related to the Moscow Games. Peter Reddaway, a distinguished lecturer at the London School of Economics and an expert on Soviet internal dissent, describes their policy in a recent publication. Honourable senators, allow me to put a few relevant passages on the record:

> The present purge is basically a pre-Olympian exercise, and well illustrates the inseparability of sports and politics in the Soviet Union. For many months, the KGB has been striking against people in the provinces. Far from stopping political oppression when the trials of Orlov, Shcharansky, and others ended in August 1978, the authorities simply turned their attention away from Moscow to individuals and groups whose fate aroused less interest abroad . . . In fact, since August 1978 no fewer than 97 trials have taken place on which reliable information has reached the outside world. Two hundred and seventeen people have either been sentenced at these trials, or forcibly interned in mental hospitals without trial, or are now in pre-trial detention . . . Beyond these cases, which mostly involve the court system, thousands of people have been interrogated during the last 17 months in connection with political cases, and nearly a thousand have had their homes searched by police. Many of these have been dismissed from their jobs, threatened with arrest, subjected to KGB blackmail, forced into emigration or assaulted by officially sponsored thugs . . . Two people have committed suicide as a direct consequence of KGB persecution, and two more have been murdered in circumstances strongly suggesting official direction . . . Those who oppose a boycott of the Games, seeing them as a chance for foreigners to talk to Russians, might ponder, among other things, the terrible price that dissidents are being forced to pay by the regime.

Honourable senators, surely we all appreciate the value and use of an Olympic boycott. Totalitarian regimes have a great need for legitimacy that democracies do not fully understand. The need to have examples on a regular basis of international respectability and adulation is absolutely basic to a totalitarian regime's program of sustaining public support and compliance. The Soviets have always taken sports very seriously in this regard. We all know that their "amateur athletes" train often as part of the military—as part of the forces of the state serving the purposes of the state.

The preparations in Moscow have been extensive and expensive. An Olympic Games without America, Canada, Germany, the United Kingdom, Japan and many others—or indeed a cancelled Games—would be noticed by the average Soviet citizen. Questions would circulate within a population deeply interested in sports. What Soviet propaganda now treats as a local police action in Afghanistan can now be seen, even to them, as having far more consequence. I believe that we have gained the attention of millions of Soviets through the clear symbolism of an international boycott of the Olympic Games.

Honourable senators, surely we all applaud the boycott. Hopefully, we ourselves will do more than just boycott. Hopefully, we will seek to broaden and deepen the commitment to the boycott among non-aligned nations in Africa, the Middle East, South America and other parts of the world.

Let us for a moment look at what the Soviets have done in the past. They have not been bashful. The Soviet Union has a long and consistent history of boycotting international sporting events. Until 1952 the "bourgeois Olympic movement" itself was boycotted.

Let me give you a few examples of boycotts by the Soviet Union. The qualifying round of the 1974 Soccer World Cup was boycotted because it was held in Chile; the 1976 Chess Olympics were boycotted because they were held in Israel; the 1979 Women's World Basketball Championship was boycotted because South Korea was the host. Numerous sporting events have been boycotted by the Soviet Union because they were held in West Berlin.

The evidence is clear. The Soviet Union has used the Olympics as an instrument of national policy. As such, it is also clear that Moscow has invested heavily in the Games. Let me quote from Time magazine of January 28:

> There is probably no single action short of war that would punish Moscow more than to have the Olympics taken away or spoiled.

For those who worry sincerely about the Olympic movement, I offer the view that the Olympic movement will survive quite comfortably, having been unused by the Soviets for propaganda gains at a time of Soviet adventurism. That is as important to the credibility of the Games as any other standard of judgment.

Honourable senators, Canada has acted as a key player in the wider context of a world where peace can only be sustained through a clear determination on the part of the nations of the west to stand united.

Before concluding, I should like to thank the many honourable senators on both sides of the house who have encouraged me respecting this motion. I am appreciative of their kind and encouraging words. I wish to address a particular word of thanks to the Honourable Joe Sullivan. As we all know, Senator Sullivan, because of ill health, has been unable to attend our sittings. However, he tells me that he is following each and every one of us through his avid reading of Hansard. Senator Sullivan, on noticing my motion, called me on a couple of occasions, and I would like to thank him for leaving me with several worthwhile thoughts and ideas, all of which I have included in my remarks.

In conclusion, I should like to deal briefly with some comments in connection with the athletes. It is regrettable that the Chairman of the Canadian Olympic Committee sees fit to "oppose the government in its efforts toward worldwide peace. After having read some statements by Mr. Pound today, I have only one comment to make, and that is that other countries have, in the name of freedom, asked their youth to make greater sacrifices than the foregoing of a series of Games.

Having said that, I do believe that efforts ought to be made to provide another forum for appropriate competition. The hundreds and, indeed, thousands of hours spent in preparation should not be wasted. Canada should lead the campaign for alternative Games to allow for competition between all of the boycotting countries. We might call them the "1980 Freedom Games." As I understand our Prime Minister, we were not able to be a leader in the boycott movement; but certainly we could be a leader in the movement to provide an alternative set of Games. This would be a real opportunity for us in the international arena and, what is perhaps more important, a step in the direction of Canada's national unity. All across this great country of ours we have facilities such as Edmonton's Commonwealth Games Stadium, Winnipeg's Pan Am Pool, and the Montreal Olympic Stadium, all of which could form an important network for the staging of international competitions this summer.

We all know that the Olympics are a media event. That being so, I do not see why it is necessary to have all the athletes in one place. The television cameras can put them all in one place at a given time. We see this constantly when, during one hockey game, we have highlights of a game played in another city. I do not see why Canada as a nation should not offer these various sites for such Games. It would be great for our national unity, it seems to me, as well as showing the rest of the world that we are sticking together.

Honourable senators, in asking our athletes to make the sacrifice of not going to Moscow, we owe them the effort to bring about alternative Games. The Olympic boycott is a non-military weapon of significant impact, endorsed by the Olympic Trust, endorsed by a free vote in the legislative assembly of our most populous province, and one which I sincerely congratulate our government for implementing.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Haidasz, debate adjourned.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave, tabled:

> Report of the Commission to Review Salaries and Allowances of Members of Parliament and Senators (Mr. Alfred D. Hales, Commissioner), appointed in accordance with the terms of Order in Council P.C. 1979-2167, dated August 9, 1979.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, April 24, 1980

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR IN GALLERY

THE HON. PETER DREW DURACK, ATTORNEY GENERAL OF AUSTRALIA

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I should like at this time to bring to your attention the presence in the South Gallery of Senator the Honourable Peter Durack, Q.C., Attorney General in the new Liberal/National Country Party coalition Ministry of Australia.

On behalf of all senators, I want to tell him that we are honoured by his presence in the Senate chamber.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-2, to amend the Immigration Act, 1976.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next, April 29, 1980.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government) tabled:

Report of the Canadian National Railways, together with the Auditors' Report on the Accounts and Financial Statements thereof, for the year ended December 31, 1979, pursuant to section 40 of the Canadian National Railways Act, Chapter C-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Firearms Report to the Solicitor General of Canada by the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for the year ended December 31, 1979, pursuant to section 106.9 of the Criminal Code, Chapter 53, Statutes of Canada, 1976-77.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, April 29, 1980, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

TANKER TRANSPORTATION OF CRUDE OIL ON WEST COAST

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a question for Senator Olson, who I believe is the minister responsible for pipelines. Can the minister tell us whether or not the government was able to secure a commitment from U.S. Secretary of State Vance, during his visit to Ottawa yesterday, that the U.S. will not allow oil to be shipped via tanker down the west coast?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I cannot answer specifically—

Senator Flynn: What else is new?

Senator Olson: I cannot answer specifically as to whether or not there was a commitment that oil would not be shipped via tanker down the west coast. I shall attempt to obtain an answer to the question. I do know that there was some discussion about the matter in the talks held with Secretary of State Vance.

Senator Nurgitz: If I may, I have a supplementary. The minister, when he was sitting on this side of the chamber, was condemning the American decision not to proceed with the Trans Mountain pipeline. It is my understanding from following the newspaper reports during the recent election that not only his leader in the other place, but many candidates in British Columbia, promised the people that, if elected, they would see to it that there would be no tanker traffic along the British Columbia coast.

Does the minister expect his government to deliver on this promise made to British Columbia voters?

Senator Olson: I am sure the honourable senator recognizes that we gave a commitment to try to minimize that, and we were critical of the previous government for failing to take action to encourage the United States authorities to consider the overland route which would have eliminated, at least, some of the tanker problem. I am sure the honourable senator also recognizes that while we will try to urge the United States to minimize the amount of tanker traffic out of Valdez, or wherever down the coast where it could naturally hurt our west coast, we really do not have the authority to impose that on the United States authorities.

PRICE OF DOMESTIC OIL—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. The Minister of Finance has stated that $1 billion would be cut from the deficit as soon as the oil-pricing agreement is finalized with the provinces. I would assume from that that the government must already know what oil-pricing formula it intends to have the premiers accept. I wonder if the Leader of the Government would share the formula with us.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I must say that the hope for a deficit reduction expressed by the Minister of Finance is limited to the process of oil-policy negotiation lying ahead.

Senator Doody: I appreciate the candor of the answer given by the leader. I would assume, however, that the figures in the statement made by the Minister of Finance a few days ago, and the subsequent comments made by the government, indicate that these hopes must be based on some premise. Could the leader indicate what these projections or premises are so that we can get some indication as to how these numbers are arrived at?

Senator Perrault: It is evident that the implications of the question are detailed and very profound. I assure honourable senators, however, that the negotiations with the provinces will proceed in the finest spirit of co-operative federalism.

Senator Doody: Well, then, in the spirit of co-operative federalism, would the Honourable Leader of the Government indicate what the price would have to be to achieve this $1 billion hoped for saving?

Senator Perrault: Well, honourable senators, the development of an oil-pricing formula proved to be extremely elusive for the preceding government; consequently, I know that the honourable senator would not expect me to offer an immediate, offhand judgment on this occasion.

● (1415)

Senator Doody: I have a supplementary question. I am not asking for an offhand judgment, in all fairness to myself and to the government. I am asking for some clarification or elucidation of the statement. As for references to the previous government, I rather think they are irrelevant right now. I know that I tried to restrict myself to comments about the previous government when I was on that side of the house and I really think yours is not a productive line to pursue.

Senator Perrault: I am pleased to answer that question directly, then, in the new circumstances. The price will be fair and equitable to both sides.

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Flynn: What do you mean by "both sides"? Name them. What are the "both sides"?

Senator Olson: The consuming provinces. That is obvious.

Senator Asselin: You refuse to answer the question?

OWNERSHIP OF CANADIAN OIL INDUSTRY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to continue to pursue the question of oil; from a slightly different standpoint, however.

I recall that in the gracious Speech from the Throne reference was made to a policy of Canadianizing the ownership of the Canadian oil industry within a certain period of time. I wonder if, as a result of that policy, the government has made a calculation of what funds would be involved, if that program were to be fully realized.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I do not think the calculation of the amount of funds in the first, second, third or any of the fiscal years involved between now and 1990 has been worked out. I suppose it would depend on the nature of the incentive to have that happen. I am sure the honourable senator agrees that an increase in the equity ownership by Canadians of Canadian resources is a desirable thing. It depends, therefore, on when it starts. My hope is that it will be soon. How rapidly it is accelerated towards the 50 per cent objective by 1990 will, of course, have to be taken into account year by year. I do not think that there are any figures available at this time.

Senator Roblin: Well, I am rather surprised, honourable senators, that a policy like that would be announced without any calculation having been made of what is involved. That is what my honourable friend appears to be telling me.

I would ask him whether he would agree that, if it were to be done today on the basis of today's current market prices, it might be in the neighbourhood of $4 billion. That is the estimate that has been made by people in the marketplace. I offer that piece of information to him because he does not seem to have any himself. Would he agree that that figure is in the ballpark?

Senator Olson: Well, honourable senators, I think that a government has the right to state its objectives without having calculated in detail the ten-year projection of expenditures necessary in each of those expenditure years.

Senator Flynn: For a Liberal Government, that is right.

Senator Olson: If the honourable senator is suggesting to me that $4 billion would buy all of that, I would suggest that that figure is low.

Senator Roblin: Of course, I find it incredible to think that the minister who is in charge of the economic development policy, which obviously depends on the use of money and the money that is available in the economic system, would find it unnecessary to make such a calculation before announcing the policy. However, as that seems to be the case I will pursue the matter a little further by asking another question.

In view of the fact that the government has a policy of repatriating the oil industry in the country, what means does it propose to invoke to see that that policy is achieved? What steps is it proposing to take to ensure that this goal of 50 per cent ownership is achieved within the time period involved?

Senator Olson: It will be done by a single incentive or a combination of incentives so that Canadian companies or individuals will be in an advantageous position to do that. That is the simple answer.

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: I will then ask a simple question: Is it possible for my honourable friend to say whether the instrument he intends to use for this repatriation is Petro-Canada?

Senator Olson: Petro-Canada will be an active player in that, but we also recognize that the other players—that is, the private industry—will also be a major player in the attempt to bring 50 per cent of this asset into Canadian hands during the next ten years.

Senator Roblin: Then I ask my honourable friend what these incentives will be to pursuade Canadian players to do it. I want to tell him that I am not asking the question out of idle curiosity, because it means a great deal to the development of our oil industry in this country to know what the position of foreign investors is likely to be, and how that is to be compared with the position of Canadian investors. I am sure my honourable friend will agree that without knowledge of this kind the "self-reliance" in oil, let alone "self-sufficiency," will be a difficult question. I suggest to my honourable friend that it would be advantageous if the government were to lay this policy before the people in the oil industry as soon as possible.

Senator Olson: The honourable senator can ask the question as many times as he wishes, from many different angles, but the reply that I gave to his first question, that it will be a single incentive or combination of incentives, is still the answer, and the government is not yet ready for public announcement. No matter how the honourable senator wants to twist it around, that will be the answer.

Senator Flynn: For how long?

Senator Roblin: Can my honourable friend give me an estimate of when he thinks he will be able to pull his policy together?

Senator Olson: I could say soon, and we could then have a discussion on the definition of what "soon" means.

Senator Flynn: You are very good at killing time.

Senator Frith: Use the term they used: "In due time."

Senator Roblin: There is no policy; that's for sure.

PRICE OF DOMESTIC OIL—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I have another question for the Leader of the Government. Once again I am in pursuit of the fascination I have for that elusive $1 billion that is going to be cut from the deficit. Perhaps the government leader could indicate whether it is the government's intention to ask the producing provinces to accept less than they received under the Clark agreement. Maybe that will account for the $1 billion.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): I would appreciate it if the honourable senator would repeat the essence of his question. I was diverted momentarily.

Senator Doody: I will be delighted to do so, in anticipation of an answer. My question is directed to the government leader and is in pursuit of an answer to that fascinating $1 billion saving that we discussed a little earlier. Perhaps it is the intention of the government to ask the producing provinces to accept less than they agreed to accept under the Clark government. Would that be one of the ways or the way in which the government intends saving that $1 billion?

Senator Perrault: The Honourable Senator Doody poses an intriguing question. No one ever quite determined what the previous government had offered or what the producing provinces were prepared to accept. It was impossible for that government, apparently, to achieve any signed agreement with the producing provinces. Despite this failure, Senator Doody talks in terms of some shadowy and ephemeral agreement which had been negotiated by the Conservative government. Yet the Canadian people were never informed of the details of that alleged agreement. I suggest that the honourable senator is really in the realm of mythology. May I say, to quote one of the more profound remarks of the Leader of the Opposition when he was on this side of the house, an answer will come "in due time."

Senator Doody: If I may be so bold as to suggest that many Canadians feel that the time is due, may I also suggest, in the interests of mythology that the government leader expressed so profoundly a few moments ago, that perhaps in a mythical vein he could tell us whether, in view of the mythical agreement, there will be a mythical decrease in the price to the producing provinces?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, all I can say is that, in the history of this nation, when governments have been headed by Liberal Prime Ministers, major federal-provincial agreements have been negotiated. Many great historical agreements have been involved, and there is every reason to believe that agreements in the field of energy pricing can be obtained.

Senator Doody: I think we should all rise.

An Hon. Senator: And bow.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Since the Leader of the Government mentioned in this debate—because the government leader's reply has transformed this into a debate—that the agreement would be announced in due course, due course, I would suggest that if the Liberal Party had been more responsible when it defeated the government in December, the "due time" would long since have arrived. The decision has been postponed by at least eight months. Following that preamble, my question is: Assuming that the price at which the government may reach an agreement for the next two years is about $4 a barrel each year—and that is the minimum, I am quite sure, because people are talking now about $7—

Senator Olson: The truth is that it would have been in total something between $7 and $11 under the previous government's plan.

Senator Flynn: Wait a minute! Don't try to confuse the issue any more than you already have. All right, let us say $8 a barrel. What would the 9 per cent tax mean? Am I correct in saying that it will probably amount to something in the order of 20 cents to 24 cents a gallon? I suppose that a ready answer is too much to expect. Take the question as notice.

Senator Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will be pleased to take that question as notice, but let me say that during the many months of inaction on oil pricing by the previous government, to use a gasoline analogy, they were "unable to get the lead out."

Senator Flynn: There is an unparliamentary word I could use to describe your reply.

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: A supplementary. As a follow-up to the extremely optimistic answer given by the Leader of the Government about the success of the negotiations going on, are we to understand from that optimism that the government has already excluded using the legislation which would allow it to set the price of oil itself?

[English]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, at least in the initial stages the main emphasis is certainly going to be on negotiations conducted in the best spirit of co-operation.

[Translation]

Senator Tremblay: Another supplementary.

I understand that it is at that initial stage that optimism applies but that using the legislation I referred to is not excluded in a second stage?

Senator Lamontagne: Why not?

Senator Tremblay: I want to know if it is excluded or whether it is the intention of the government to use that special, not to say very peculiar, legislation?

Senator Asselin: Senator Lamontagne just asked "why not?"

[English]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, may I say that this government will not proceed on the assumption that there is going to be failure. We have great faith in the ability of

[Senator Flynn.]

I would suggest that if the Liberal Party had been more responsible when it defeated the government in December, the "due time" would long since have arrived. The deci-

FISHERIES—CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Jack Marshall: I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Yesterday in the House of Commons there was unanimous consent of all parties to the stepping up of negotiations between the United States and Canada on the ratification of the fisheries boundaries. Could the Leader of the Government indicate what plans the government has for stepping up these negotiations and coming to the final agreement which is so necessary to the fishing industry in Canada?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): The question will be taken as notice. However, there were discussions relating to fisheries matters during yesterday's meeting between Mr. Vance and Canadian officials. I will take the question as notice and endeavour to obtain a statement which can be made on the subject as a result of this meeting.

Senator Marshall: I thank the leader, but I should also like him to inquire and include in the statement information about the loggerhead situation between Canada and the United States in respect of seabed mining—law of the sea. Would he have that included in the statement?

Senator Perrault: I would be pleased to obtain that additional information if it is available.

INCOME TAX

UNINCORPORATED BUSINESSES—DEDUCTION OF SALARY PAID TO SPOUSE

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question in connection with the recent statement in the other place on the budget. As I understand it, one of the highlights of that statement was a new tax regulation for professional businesses such as carried on by doctors and lawyers which permits the deduction of salaries to be paid to spouses. Can the Leader of the Government tell me if this is, in fact, part of that arrangement?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, of course, to term the statement made by the Minister of Finance the other day as "a budget" is a misnomer; it was not a budget.

Senator Flynn: Why would you say that?

Senator Perrault: As far as the technical aspects of the question are concerned, the speech made by the Minister of Finance stated that this government will introduce several of the other notices of Ways and Means motions tabled last December, including the measure providing for the deduction of salaries paid to spouses by persons carrying on an unincorporated business and the temporary small business development bond provision enabling small businesses to obtain financing at lower interest rates.

Senator Roblin: You are going to do that?

Senator Perrault: Yes, it is in the statement, and I know honourable senators will be elated at the news.

Senator Roblin: I am glad to see that the present government is picking up one or two good policies from its predecessors in spite of the lamentable view it takes of that government. I do not know whether my honourable friend is right in correcting me with respect to the word "budget" that was bandied about here a minute ago. It is a reasonable imitation of a budget, I will say that. However, my real concern is this question of exemption from taxation for deductions of salaries paid to spouses. Is this limited to spouses of professional men and to spouses engaged with their husbands in small businesses?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is my understanding that it is not, in fact, subject to those limitations, and we on this side are pleased to note that the Deputy Leader of the Opposition has stated he is glad that certain policies are to be adopted and that he has inferred that the statement made the other day by the Minister of Finance is "reasonable." We agree that it is reasonable.

Senator Roblin: If I said it was "reasonable," I am certainly sure it was a slip of the tongue because it occurred to me to be a most unreasonable document in many respects, and certainly when viewed in the light of the financial needs of the country.

My question is in respect to the spouses of farmers. Are they also to be included in this deduction of salaries paid to spouses, as was, I believe, proposed in the former legislation?

Senator Perrault: My understanding is that as long as an enterprise qualifies under the category of "business" the deduction will apply.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CUBAN REFUGEES—CANADIAN COMMITMENT

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: My question is directed to the Leader of the Government. Yesterday I had the temerity to ask the leader whether Canada would be enlarging its commitment to take in Cuban refugees, and I was sent away to do some homework and return with some details about any country assisting the refugees. The insinuation, clearly, honourable senators, was that no smaller country would have done more.

Would the Leader of the Government convey to the Secretary of State for External Affairs Costa Rica's commitment to unlimited numbers; Peru's commitment to at least 1,000; Colombia's and Venezuela's commitment to 500 or more; and ascertain whether Canada, in light of that information, is going to increase its commitment to take in refugees?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as yet I am unable to meet the commitment made yesterday to obtain details with respect to refugees who have been taken in by Canada. I reiterate what I stated yesterday, that this country has achieved a worldwide reputation for its willingness to assist those victims of persecution, whether by taking them in as refugees or assisting them in their vicissitude by other means. For example, few Canadians realize that until relatively recently Canada was the third largest contributor to Palestinian refugee relief in the Middle East—a remarkable record for a nation of Canada's resources and size.

Canada has been in the forefront of assisting refugees from Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Uganda and from many other areas. Let me say, honourable senators, that this policy has had the general support of all political parties, including our friends in opposition. It is a record that is a source of pride to all Canadians. Our assistance to refugees cannot be measured solely in terms of the number of refugees accepted here from any one area. Aid is extended in the form of medical help, food supplies and other forms of assistance.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, perhaps I was not clear enough, and I take the blame for that. Could the Leader of the Government tell us whether Canada is considering increasing its commitment beyond 300? That is the simple question.

Senator Perrault: I will attempt to provide a simple answer tomorrow. It will be brought to this chamber as soon as possible.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Is my perception correct that the recent press reports indicate that all the Cubans who have taken refuge in the Peruvian embassy in Havana are going to be accepted by Puerto Rico?

Senator Perrault: I am aware of some reports that appeared in the newspapers. I am unable to say at this time whether those reports are authentic. The Honourable Senator Asselin, who had a responsibility in that area in the previous government, may have some information. I see him nodding his head.

Senator Flynn: Are you going to ask him to help you out?

Senator Asselin: Do you need my help?

SOMALIA—ASSISTANCE RESPECTING REFUGEES

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, my question is also, alas, about the issue of refugees, of which there are in the world today a number equal to about half the population of this country. In light of the visit today of the minister from Somalia, General Ghalib, asking for increased assistance to that small country, which is trying to cope with a million and a third refugees, can the Leader of the Government give me an assurance that the government will give sensitive attention to this very urgent request, and will he keep this chamber informed as to the actuality of that response?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senator, I am pleased to provide the undertaking that we will be sensitive to these requests for assistance from other nations. I know that the honourable senator, with his long experience in foreign affairs policy formulation, is aware of the fact that a balance must be struck and achieved between protecting Canada's interests and the jobs of Canadians at a time of high unemployment and of meeting our moral commitment to assist refugees from various forms of persecution. Successive Canadian governments have attempted to develop their policies with respect to refugees along these lines.

Senator Macquarrie: By way of clarification, let me say that, so far as I understand it, the priority the Somalis have is not that these people emigrate to Canada, but that assistance be given to that small struggling country dealing with its enormous problems.

Senator Perrault: I will take that question as notice.

FINANCE

STATEMENT BY MINISTER—ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF ATLANTIC REGION

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, in the course of this afternoon's proceedings, the Leader of the Government in the Senate has indicated to us that what transpired in the other place the other evening was not the presentation of a budget but a speech made by the Minister of Finance. We are all well aware, I am sure, that that speech comprised, in short, extracts from the Crosbie budget. The matters dealt with in that speech, as a result of their adoption by the Minister of Finance, now form part of the fiscal policy of this government.

My question is directed not so much to what was contained in that speech as to what was not contained in the speech. There were certain things from the Crosbie budget which, as the Leader of the Government was quick to say, were omitted, such as the 18-cent increase in the excise tax on gasoline. Various other items were also omitted from that part of the Crosbie budget that was adopted by the Minister of Finance, and it is to those items that I direct my question.

Can the Leader of the Government give us the rationale for withdrawing from those parts of the Crosbie budget that were adopted the proposal for tax incentives to new industries locating in parts of Quebec and the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): First of all, honourable senators, I vehemently deny that it was a budget the other night. However, this is a matter that is being discussed in the other place. Certainly, it would not be in order for the Leader of the Government in the Senate to attempt to discuss points of order raised in the other place.

Secondly, honourable senators, the honourable senator has requested the rationale for various statements made during the eloquent speech given by the Honourable the Minister of Finance the other night in the other place.

May I quote a rather important paragraph from his statement? His historic words are:

> I am also not now making provisions for private corporations to be given tax contracts for investing in particular regions of the country. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion has considerable flexibility under existing legislation to support regional development. These mechanisms will naturally be under review, prior to the expiry of the legislation next year.

I think the regions of the country can draw real hope from that statement.

Senator Donahoe: A supplementary question: Will the Leader of the Government tell us whether those incentives—those available under the policies of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion—were not also present and available at the time the Honourable John Crosbie's proposals for tax contracts were made in his budget?

Senator Perrault: There seems to be a view held by certain members of the opposition that somehow there is some moral obligation on the government which was given a mandate on February 18 to implement all or some of the Honourable John Crosbie's proposals. We do not regard that as our obligation.

Senator Flynn: I was quite sure the Leader of the Government would say that. This government has no moral obligation, period.

THE CABINET

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have a couple of delayed answers.

First, I wish to reply to a question posed by Senator Smith (Colchester) during Question Period on Tuesday, April 22. Senator Smith asked if there was, and I quote, "a Policy and Priorities Board or a Policy and Priorities Committee."

I wish to inform the honourable senator that there is a Cabinet Committee on Priorities and Planning which is chaired by the Prime Minister. The Cabinet Committee on Priorities and Planning addresses the broad strategy for priorities and planning of the government.

Regarding the honourable senator's request for the membership of this committee, I wish to state that this government has taken the position not to release the membership of the committee.

Senator Flynn: Are you a member of that committee?

Senator Olson: I have just said we will not release the names, and I am asked this question. I am sorry, I do not understand.

Senator Flynn: I wonder if the minister knows if he is or is not a member.

Senator Olson: I know whether I am a member or not, but I am not going to give that information out.

FINANCE

GOVERNMENT BORROWING—EFFECT ON EXCHANGE VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I also have a reply to several questions from Senator

Doody and Senator Smith (Colchester) during Question Period on Tuesday, April 22, regarding government borrowing and its effect on the exchange value of the Canadian dollar.

It is virtually impossible to determine with any degree of certainty the impact of different magnitudes of borrowing requirements on either interest rates or the exchange rate. This is so because the government has many alternative ways open to it to finance its borrowing requirements, because it can finance part or the totality of its requirements in Canadian or in foreign capital markets, and because it depends on what types of expenditures or investments these borrowed sums of money will be committed to.

Furthermore, there is a host of other factors which influence simultaneously the value of the Canadian dollar in either direction—for example, oil discoveries—and it would be an exercise in futility to attempt to separate the effects of public financing policy from the effects of other government-related and non-governmental actions on the value of the Canadian dollar.

The best we can say is that financing of government borrowing requirements is designed by the competent authorities in a way to minimize pressures on interest rates and the value of the Canadian dollar.

THE CABINET

COMMITTEE ON PRIORITIES AND PLANNING

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I should like to put a question to my honourable friend with respect to the committee of which he spoke when he answered the first question today. Is it true to say that the members of that committee are cabinet ministers?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I think it is true to say that memberships of the cabinet committees are made up entirely of cabinet ministers.

Senator Roblin: Do I understand my honourable friend correctly to say that it is the considered policy of the government not to say which cabinet ministers sit on which committee?

Senator Olson: That is right.

Senator Roblin: Has my honourable friend any difficulty in reconciling that statement with the Speech from the Throne promise of a Freedom of Information Act?

Senator Olson: No, he has not.

Senator Roblin: Does he not consider that the public have some right to know who their masters are, who is planning the economic destiny of this country?

Senator Olson: They not only have the right, but they do know that the entire cabinet takes responsibility for all decisions made by committees or the cabinet.

Hon. Lowell Murray: That raises an interesting supplementary question. Does this committee on Priorities and Planning have a decision-making role?

Senator Olson: The decisions are made for and on behalf of the entire cabinet.

Senator Murray: I assume, then, that decisions made by the Cabinet Committee on Priorities and Planning binds the entire cabinet, and that the full cabinet receives word of those decisions by way of an information item on their agenda?

Senator Olson: If the honourable senator is asking me to reveal the documents and circulation of cabinet documents, I can tell him now, so that he does not waste his time, that I am not going to answer any questions about that. I can only go back to what I said a few moments ago—and it seems to me that it ought to be clear, but I will repeat it—the whole cabinet takes full responsibility for all decisions made by the cabinet. There is no deviation from that position.

Senator Murray: I appreciate that statement by the minister, but the point I want to confirm—and he has confirmed it a second time—is that decisions are, in fact, taken by the Committee on Priorities and Planning which, of course, bind the whole government and for which, according to the convention of cabinet solidarity, the entire government takes responsibility.

In other words, what we have under another name is an inner cabinet and an outer cabinet, the only difference being that with the present government we do not know who the members of the inner cabinet are.

Senator Olson: Well, the honourable senator can put that construction or interpretation on what I said, but it would not be mine. Therefore, I do not accept responsibility for his interpretation.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Would my honourable friend opposite be kind enough to inform us who the Chairman of the Committee on Economic Development is? He will not tell us who the members are. Who is the boss; who is the chairman?

Senator Olson: The Prime Minister is the Chairman of the Committee on Priorities and Planning, and I said that a few minutes ago. I am sorry my honourable friend missed it.

Senator Roblin: Are you telling us that the Prime Minister and the rest of his colleagues decline to identify the other members of the committee?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, there are several other committees as well. There are committees on economic development, social development, foreign and defence policy, legislation and house planning, government operations, communications, Treasury Board, labour relations, security and intelligence, the public service, and other special committees of cabinet. I guess my honourable friends opposite do not understand straight, simple words, and that is all I am capable of giving them.

Senator Flynn: I agree.

Senator Olson: We do not release the membership of any of the committees. That has not changed since five minutes ago.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I have to admit that I understand very well what my honourable friend is saying to me, but I have to tell him that I do not like it.

Senator Olson: I do not happen to care very much whether you like it or not.

Senator Flynn: Are you chairing the Committee on Economic Development?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, my honourable friends opposite are trying to get me to say something I have already said I am not going to say. I think they might as well stop.

Senator Flynn: We might as well cancel Question Period as far as you are concerned.

Senator Frith: Is that a motion?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, today we are enduring an incredibly inquisitive assault by the official opposition. The Leader of the Opposition said a moment ago that it pains him that certain information is not available, or makes him unhappy that this information is not available. I might say he demonstrated a very high threshold of pain during the tenure of the Progressive Conservative Government, a government which refused to reveal very much about the make-up of its committees.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, this is not the first time that the Leader of the Government has made that statement. We let it go by several times the other day. I do think, in fairness and for the record, it should be pointed out that a very quick examination of Senate Hansard of the last Parliament will show that, in reply to questions concerning the Cabinet Committee on Economic Development, Senator de Cotret not only elaborated on the terms of reference of that committee, but stated which ministers were members of it.

Senator Perrault: The point I make, honourable senators, is that all of the matters relating to the operation of cabinet committees and the minutiae that are being demanded of this government—

Senator Roblin: Just give us the names.

Senator Perrault: —were never provided at any time by the previous government. There were names bandied about from time to time, but we were never given a list.

Senator Flynn: Did you ever ask?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators certainly are aware that this is nothing more than an exercise in political gamesmanship. No government provides information of this kind.

Senator Roblin: You are off base.

STANDING COMMITTEES

FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF SELECTION ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the First Report of the Committee of Selection, which was presented yesterday.

[Senator Olson.]

Hon. William J. Petten moved that the report be now adopted.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before the question is put I should like to raise the matter of a co-ordinating body for Senate committees. It will be recalled that some time ago the question of co-ordinating the activities of committees was raised, there being some concern that the meetings of Senate committees required some co-ordination. It will also be recalled that our late colleague Senator Bourget undertook that task for a period of time. It was a new idea and one which, while it had not then matured, more or less worked to the satisfaction of honourable senators, and as well there were expectations that it would grow in effectiveness.

I have discussed with my colleagues opposite the possibility of re-establishing such a co-ordinating role for a committee of senators, and the suggestion is that Senator Lafond serve as the chairman of such a co-ordinating committee, working with the two whips and, subject to their wishes, other honourable senators they wish to add. The basic objective of that committee's work will be the co-ordinating of times of meetings so that there will be no undue duplication, and that honourable senators, as much as possible, will not find themselves required to attend two committee meetings at the same time.

There will be other aspects to this activity, and I respectfully suggest that we at least have recorded the fact that such a co-ordinating group will be working. We can let them define the extent of their jurisdiction and activities within the framework of the objective, namely, the efficient co-ordination of the activities of the committees of the Senate during this session.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I would like to thank Honourable Senator Frith for giving me prior notice of his intention in this matter, and I would like to say that we entirely concur in the proposition. We are delighted to know that Senator Lafond will be the chairman of this committee, which performs a very useful service indeed. The whip of the official opposition, Senator Macdonald, has instructed me to volunteer his good offices in connection with it.

Senator Macdonald: When did I instruct you to do that?

Senator Roblin: When did you not instruct me? I am under orders here. I know that whip when I hear it. In any case, honourable senators, I am sure that this is a move that can be very useful, and I welcome the nomination of Senator Lafond for the task.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Lafond: Honourable senators, I accept this assignment on faith and in the knowledge that I can count on the co-operation of all honourable senators. I believe that there can indeed be more to this task of co-ordination than just setting a timetable and assigning rooms, and I shall do my best to further the maturity of this responsibility. For the immediate future I would like, as soon as the committees have had their organization meetings, to have a meeting with the committee chairmen and the Whips on both sides, and after that I would ask leave to report to the Senate.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

CANADA-FRANCE TRADE AGREEMENT ACT, 1933 SUPPLEMENTARY CANADA-FRANCE TRADE AGREEMENT ACT, 1935

BILL TO REPEAL—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John Morrow Godfrey moved the second reading of Bill S-5, to repeal the Canada-France Trade Agreement Act, 1933 and the Supplementary Canada-France Trade Agreement Act, 1935.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of Bill S-5, an act to repeal the Canada-France Trade Agreement Act, 1933 and the Supplementary Canada-France Agreement Act, 1935, is to proceed with the implementation of a decision taken by Canada on December 15, 1977 to terminate the Canada-France Trade Agreements of 1933 and 1935. This termination became effective on March 15, 1978. Following this termination, the Canada-France Trade Agreement no longer has any effect in international law, although the relevant implementing legislation has not yet been abrogated. This bill will regularize the situation.

The only part of these agreements that had any practical effect at the time of termination was Article 11 of the 1933 Agreement, which provided for the mutual protection of appellations of origin for goods produced in either country.

In recent years this article created difficulties in Canada-France relations as a result of a series of court actions undertaken in the late 1960s by French producers concerning the use of the designation "champagne" by Canadian producers.

In future, protection in Canada for appellations of origin, not only from France but from all other countries, will be provided by the new Trademarks Act which the government introduced into this chamber in the winter of 1978 and which will, I understand, be re-introduced in a few months' time.

This bill was originally introduced by the Liberal Government in the House of Commons on March 16, 1978, as Bill C-34. This was never proceeded with as they had forgotten to include in the bill the repeal of the Supplementary Canada-France Trade Agreement Act, 1935.

A new bill, C-4, was introduced in the House of Commons on October 16, 1978, and it did not receive second reading.

Bill S-2 was introduced in the Senate on October 30, 1979, by Senator de Cotret on behalf of the Conservative government, and it received second reading on November 7, 1979. The bill was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on that day but the committee never got around to considering the bill before the defeat of the government. I might say at this point that I do not know why it was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce because, in my opinion, there was no need for it to be considered by that committee.

I spoke in the debate on the motion for the second reading of Bill S-2 on November 7, 1979, as reported at pages 279-281 of Hansard. There is no point in my repeating what I said at that time because any interested person can look it up, but I did refer to the unethical conduct of Château-Gai Wines Limited over the years in promoting the sale of their Canadian champagne. It is my opinion that if it had not been for the really quite inexcusable conduct of that company, as disclosed in a judgment of the Quebec Superior Court delivered in December 1968, the trade agreement would have been repealed earlier than it actually was.

This is the fourth bill which has been introduced to repeal these agreements. Everything that needs to be said about it has already been said, and I suggest that it should receive quick passage without being referred to a committee.

On motion of Senator Charbonneau, debate adjourned.

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's Speech at the opening of the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament, and the motion of Senator Rousseau, seconded by Senator Hays, for an Address in reply thereto.

Hon. Fernand Leblanc: Honourable senators, the honour I have of sitting in this august place also carries heavy responsibilities of which I am quite aware. I will certainly make all the necessary efforts not only to feel at home and familiarize myself with the very important work being done in this house but also to try to reach the degree of perfection of my predecessors and present colleagues.

I am pleased to join all honourable senators in extending the customary congratulations to our new Speaker, the Honourable Jean Marchand, whom I had the pleasure of knowing for many years while we were both sitting in the other place. Throughout those years I was in a position to appreciate his great qualities of leadership, cordiality, sincerity and particularly dedication to the cause of the unity of this country.

As head of the "no" committee in the provincial riding of Mercier, whose elected representative since the election of 1976 is a member of the Parti Québécois, I deplore to a certain extent that the new Speaker of the Senate should be subject to certain restrictions; but since the referendum should be a non-partisan consultation, as Quebec Premier René Lévesque suggested, I do believe our Speaker will be able to continue to bring valuable co-operation to the "no" committee. We need his co-operation, that is certain. I wish him well in his new functions, particularly good health, which he will need to carry out the many tasks that fall on a Speaker of the Senate.

I also want, of course, to pay tribute to the Speaker of the Senate for the 31st Parliament, Senator Grosart. Although his reign was very short, he proved he was worthy of such an honour because he carried out his duties with control and tact.

It also gives me pleasure to pay tribute to the Honourable Senator Yvette Rousseau, the mover of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, and the seconder the Honourable Harry Hays, for the magnificient work they did in making their speeches.

I would also be remiss if I did not immediately extend my most sincere congratulations to those honourable senators who have been called upon to be part of the cabinet. I agree entirely with the wise choice of the Right Honourable the Prime Minister.

Senator Flynn: He did not have any choice.

Senator Leblanc: I am convinced that our three senators who have been selected to be ministers will be able to carry out their duties with competence and dispatch. The polarization of the vote among Canadians is, I think, further illustration of the importance of maintaining the Senate to give the people a justified and essential representation of all regions of Canada within the government's executive branch.

Honourable senators, if I have reached such a high office, I owe it in particular to the people of the riding of Laurier who, on five different occasions, from 1964 to 1979, put their faith in me. I succeeded in the riding of Laurier the Honourable Lionel Chevrier who had replaced my father-in-law who was called to the Senate in 1953 under the government of the Right Honourable Louis St. Laurent. Most of you have known Senator Lefrançois, to whom I want to pay tribute. He would have been very proud, I am sure, of my entry into this place if God had allowed him to live to this point.

I also want to take this opportunity to extend my best wishes to my successor in the riding of Laurier, David Berger, a thirty-year-old bilingual young man who wants to devote himself entirely to public life and whose business studies and experience prepared him well for his role as the representative of Canadians in the riding of Laurier. Having known him for over a year, and consequently having learned to appreciate him, I am convinced he will have a long and fruitful career.

Honourable senators, the debate on whether to abolish or reform the Senate has grown in magnitude over the last ten years. I wish to take the opportunity afforded by my first speech in this house during the Throne Speech debate to make my humble contribution to this issue. Before going any further, I would like to thank the Library research staff, which has been of great assistance to me.

Since I am a liberal with both a small "1" and a capital "L", I have, as you will have guessed, a marked tendency to support reform rather than abolition.

First of all, I would like to review the proposals to abolish the Senate. Let us look first at Bill C-60 on constitutional reform introduced in June 1978. The main proposals contained in this bill concern the designation of members of a new house, the House of the Federation. This bill also considered the legislative powers of this new house and the powers concerning certain federal appointments.

Then came the report of the Task Force on Canadian Unity which contained proposals inspired by the Bundesrat of the Federal Republic of Germany in relation to a new chamber which would have been called the Council of the Federation. These proposals also provided for the method of appointment of the members of this house, its legislative powers, the ratification of certain treaties, the proclamation of a state of emergency and the approval of certain federal appointments. There were major differences on these points between Bill C-60 and the recommendations of the Task Force on Canadian Unity.

It should be noted that replacing the present Senate by a Chamber of the Provinces was also recommended by the Advisory Committee of Ontario on Confederation, the Committee on the Constitution of the Canadian Bar Association, as well as in a working paper prepared by the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada when it formed the official opposition before the 31st Parliament.

On the other hand, we must take into account the opinion expressed by Mr. Edward McWhinny, Head of the Department of Political Sciences at Simon Fraser University, when he appeared before the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Constitution on September 26, 1978. He recommended a very cautious approach to the proposals inspired by the Bundesrat of the Federal Republic of Germany. He explained that the Bundesrat is not, in fact, a legislative body, nor is it a second house according to a recent decision of the German Constitutional Court.

Mr. McWhinny emphasized that it is essential to understand the political party system of Western Germany if we want to understand the workings of any given institution of that country where the government is formed by a national consensus and which must call on coalition governments almost constantly. Consequently, always, according to this distinguished Canadian, there is a risk of exaggerating the role of the Bundesrat as concerns the development of executive policies if we underestimate the important factor of changing coalitions and coalition governments.

More recently, in January 1980, the Constitutional Commission of the Quebec Liberal Party published a report entitled "A New Canadian Federation". The authors state that the Canadian Senate is, in their opinion, no longer adapted to the needs of modern federalism. They propose that it be abolished and that the central Parliament now consist of only one chamber. They also suggest the creation of an intergovernmental agency of the federation which they call "Federal Council". This designation aims at stating clearly that this body would be a special intergovernmental institution and not a legislative assembly controlled by the central government, since the central government would not have a delegate entitled to vote within the Federal Council. However, it could send representatives to this council to express its opinions.

The authors recognize that the mechanisms suggested are new. They maintain however that these are basically in agreement with the proposals of the Pepin-Robarts report, the Government of British Columbia, the Advisory Committee of Ontario on Confederation, the Canada West Foundation and the Committee on the Constitution of the Canadian Bar Association.

It is clear that the German Bundesrat was used as a model by the authors of the Liberal document. But it is practically impossible to foresee how the Canadian constitutional system would react to the introduction of that Federal Council, an institution that is absolutely foreign to our British parliamentary system. In that respect, honourable senators, it is interesting to read the article by Jose Woerling published by the newspaper Le Devoir on Januray 16, 1980 under the heading "The Federal Council, a long shot".

Moreover, with the establishment of the dual committee, the authors of the Liberal document are proposing a very substantial addition to the German model, thereby introducing an unknown quantity, the influence of which on the performance of the total system is difficult to forecast. One important criticism that could be levelled at the Liberal constitutional document is that it does not specify what would happen in a case where the Federal Council would refuse to ratify. In view of the two-thirds majority required within the council in certain matters, which include the federal emergency powers and the power to spend, we can imagine that ratification refusals would be numerous. This in my view is a shady area, and is of major consequence since the Federal Council is the cornerstone of that proposal for a renewed Canadian federation. My major criticism is this: That proposal would abolish an institution that has proved itself and wants to modernize from within and by itself.

On this subject of abolishing the Senate, we must remember that the then Justice Minister Lang accepted one of the recommendations made by the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution, of November 23, 1978, which suggested that the matter of the bill's constitutionality should be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada.

The honourable judges pondered over two very specific questions, of which the first is as follows, and I quote:

> Does the Parliament of Canada have the legislative authority to abrogate sections 21 to 36 of the British North American Act, 1867, as amended, and to amend the other sections of that act in which mention is made of the Upper House or the Senate, in such a way as to delete all mention of the Upper House or Senate? In the negative, in what regard or regards, and to what extent?

On December 21, 1979, the Supreme Court of Canada brought down a unanimous negative decision on the matter. In fact, when the question was put here in the Senate as to whether the Parliament of Canada can abolish the Senate, the unanimous reply was "no".

Moreover, in its decision the Supreme Court states that the Senate has a vital role to play in the Canadian federal system on the basis of the considerations of the British North America Act and the parliamentary debates of 1865, according to which one of the objectives of the institution of the Senate, as a part of the federal legislative system, is precisely to ensure the protection of the various regional interests in Canada.

The Supreme Court of Canada does not give a definitive answer to parts of the second question, but it does give negative replies to the other paragraphs of the question. As the second question is very long, and seeing honourable senators already have been sent a copy of the decision by the devoted Clerk of the Senate, Mr. Robert Fortier, I shall not quote it in extenso, but shall merely draw your attention to paragraphs A, C, D, E(i), (ii), (iii), on which "for lack of details on the context, or of a written bill" the court does not commit itself definitively, contrary to paragraphs B, E(iv) and F, on which it renders a definitive ruling.

In short, the Supreme Court's reply to the second question is that all federal acts must be approved by the Senate and that Parliament does not have the power to change the number or the proportion of senators, nor is it empowered to legislate on the election of some or all senators. Senator Connolly has in fact explained in detail the ruling of the Supreme Court in his speech of April 17, 1980.

Here are some of the questions I would ask the abolitionists: What criteria do you use to say that all senators are rejects and that this body known as the Senate must be rejected as a bunch of inept, unfit, incompetent and senile people? What criteria do you use to say that all Senate employees must have the same fate? Did you estimate the cost of establishing an alternate body? Are you sure that such a body would really satisfy the hopes and wishes of Canadians? Have you considered the political impact of such a drastic change in our system? Have you considered that this might hinder the workings of our system? Have you considered that, despite your good faith, you would create parliamentary chaos?

It would be most interesting, honourable senators, to have some answers to these questions and to others which you would certainly want to add.

To examine the various recommendations made on the reform of the Canadian Senate, I think we must first of all go back to a document entitled The Constitution and the People of Canada, published in 1969 by the federal government. This document was presented in the context of the federal-provincial effort for constitutional reform which started in February 1968 but which unfortunately ended in failure by the now famous Victoria conference of June 1971.

Regarding the Senate, the document indicated that it should be reorganized to provide for the expression in it, in a more direct and formal manner, of the interests of the provinces and areas. A revised Senate should have the same powers it now has, except that the Senate's rejection of a bill could be overcome by the lower house, in accordance with specific procedures. The Senate should be invested with a new jurisdiction to approve nominations by the federal government. The Senate should get a special responsibility in dealing with legislative measures concerning official languages and human rights. There are other proposals that would be too long to list here.

The thing to remember, however, is that the main objective of the federal government's 1969 proposals was to develop in the Senate a strong instrument of federalism in which there would be effective expression of the interests of all citizens.

In 1972, the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada published a report whose Chapter 13 dealt specifically with the reform of the Senate. The committee recommended a new distribution of Senate seats, a new method for the selection of senators, but not the election of the senators, a change in the compulsory retirement age, a power of suspensive veto for six months, reformed legislative attributions, no special jurisdiction to confirm appointments.

In 1973, the Honourable Senator David Croll, in a speech made in the Senate, submitted a 12-point plan for reform of the Senate. There followed a most interesting debate on March 13, May 31, June 12 and 19. Not all speakers were necessarily in agreement with the twelve proposals of Senator Croll, but they agreed generally that some of the changes proposed would have to be accepted to improve the work done by the Senate.

In the Throne Speech debate that followed the 1974 election, Prime Minister Trudeau proposed what he called a "humble start" to Senate reform. He suggested two simple reforms: to limit the duration of senatorial appointments and to grant suspensive veto to the second house.

In a study submitted in June, 1974, to the Canadian Political Science Association, Professor Colin Campbell proposed some changes which he considered essential to ensure the Senate greater efficiency: the appointment by the provinces of some senators; the redistribution of Senate seats among the provinces, a right of suspensive veto for six months to a year; special responsibility as regards approval of certain federal appointments and certain fields which are subject to special policies, such as official languages; change of procedure concerning the appointment of the Speaker of the Senate and of the government and opposition leaders.

More recently, during a symposium on the Senate organized by the Canadian Parliamentary Group, held in Ottawa on January 26, 1979, Mr. John Hayes spoke of the upper house in other countries; Senator Jacques Flynn spoke of the workings of the present Canadian Senate, Mr. Mark MacGuigan, member of Parliament and now minister, dealt with Senate reform, and Senator Richard Stanbury gave the senators' reaction in this regard.

Mr. Hayes stated that we must realize that if important changes are made in the Senate they will affect the workings of our entire parliamentary system. Senator Jacques Flynn stated that by and large the Senate had well fulfilled its role of reviewing legislation considering the delicate situation it finds itself in of being an appointed house while also enjoying absolute veto.

The Honourable Mark MacGuigan stated that the report by the Task Force on Canadian Unity signaled a new approach in the debate on the reform of our federal institutions. He expressed the view that the report would send into oblivion Bill C-60's proposals on the second chamber.

He further said that the matters of exclusive federal jurisdiction could not be discussed in the Federal Council proposed by the Pepin-Robarts report, a significant and major difference from the West German model. He concluded that the recommendations of the Pepin-Robarts report had the merit of narrowing the discussion on Senate reform to the two following choices: some version of the current Senate that would implement the recommendations of the report tabled by the Joint Committee on the Constitution in 1972, or a formula similar to that proposed by the Pepin-Robarts group and inspired by the West German model.

Senator Richard Stanbury objected in principle to the establishment of a Federal Council as proposed by the Pepin-Robarts report. He added that in his view no valid proposal had in fact been put forward to replace the Senate. His experience had convinced him that the role filled by the Senate was absolutely essential to this country's welfare. And, further, that the best contribution to the issue of the second chamber's reform evolved from the work done by the Special Senate Committee on the Constitution that looked into the Senate's own mechanics, in order to determine how the latter could be reformed to correct its current weaknesses. While permitting interesting exchanges, the discussions at that forum on the Senate pointed to the difficulty of reaching a consensus on Senate reform.

In its first report of October 1978, the Special Committee of the Senate on the Constitution stated that:

> This report will not discuss specific alternative proposals for the composition, role and veto power of a second chamber in Canada. Reform is required. Senators would promote it and would be anxious to assist in the process. But the constraints on the time available to your Committee have prevented it from undertaking such a study in time for this report. The committee, having been reconstituted by the Senate, intends to do so in the coming months.

Unfortunately the election of May 22, 1979, prevented the committee from submitting its more complete second report. Finally, on December 13 of last year, the day the 31st Parliament was dissolved, Senator Stanbury put forward a motion proposing that the Senate form a special Senate committee on the Constitution in order to carry on and finalize the work done during the preceding session. I sincerely hope that the committee will be re-established soon, early in the 32nd Parliament, so that all Canadians may peruse that report complementing the preceding one.

It is impossible to cull all the remarks made by all Canadians and senators interested in this matter which is very much in vogue: Senate reform. In fact, we are trying to square the circle, but honourable senators must realize that the Senate as we know it is now on the wane and we should co-operate to help bring about the necessary reform based on efforts made especially during the last decade, while trying to win other people over to our side. Senators are quite capable of making an in-depth study of proposals to deal with the difficulties and contradictions of Senate reform.

I myself would like to make certain recommendations which are not intended to weaken the Senate but rather to revitalize it.

The first has to do with senators being asked to serve as members of the executive boards of a number of federal government agencies. With this in mind, I would like to give a concrete example concerning the Economic Council of Canada which had on its board the Honourable Senator-Minister Olson.

During a Senate Finance Committee meeting last December 4, the Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, Dr. Sylvia Ostry, stated as follows, and I quote from page 3 of the English text:

> —I would like to draw your attention to the list of part-time members of the Economic Council at the front of the Review. This slim document represents the considerable effort of all of those members acting in purely voluntary roles with no remuneration of any kind than travel expenses. I would therefore like to take this opportunity to express the appreciation of myself, Dr. Slater and Dr. Lévesque for the direction, assistance and collaboration of all the Council members. Their influence on, and contribution to, this and other Council documents are of immeasurable value—

Since there is already a senator on the board of the Economic Council, I am convinced that this concept could be applied to other federal government agencies and that members of the Senate would be happy to make such a contribution.

Since Canadians have a poor understanding of the work of the Senate, because it is under-publicized, another recommendation would be to televise the debates of the Senate to improve communication with the public and make Canadians more aware of the extremely important role played by our assembly. I know that the senators have already looked at this sensitive issue. I dearly hope that we can develop a system which will meet with the approval of the Senate. This would certainly be one way of improving the reputation o the Senate, since Canadians do not know enough about the Senate or its very important work. Unfortunately, the Canadian press has often been unfair to the Senate and the senators, and this has caused among our young people and the general public an unjustifiable lack of respect towards our political system, and especially the Senate, which helps to perpetuate the myth that senators do not contribute to the welfare of the population.

Moreover, the Senate could immediately use its committee system to examine the regional effects of certain federal statutes or of some policies which can have a considerable impact on federal-provincial relations.

Having reflected on the matter, and following the decision of the Supreme Court, I now believe that we must consider reforming the existing Senate rather than replacing it by a second chamber with a federal function but which would still be controlled by the provinces. I therefore believe that we would be wise to base our reform on the proposals contained in the report of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution published in 1972, as well as the reform proposals suggested by the other senators and agencies mentioned earlier, and wait for the final report of the Special Senate Committee on the Constitution, because it seems to me, without of course anticipating the contents of this report, that there will be a consensus on the following points: a redistribution of seats in the upper chamber to ensure better representation for the western provinces; a new method of appointment to the Senate, which would enable the provincial governments to propose to the federal government a certain number of candidates for appointment to the Senate; and also a suspensive veto for the Senate which would clearly provide that the decision of the House of Commons would prevail after a suggested delay of six months.

In support of my comments concerning reform of the Senate rather than its abolition, I would like to quote from a study prepared for the business council on matters of national interest in May 1979. On page 105 of this report entitled "Parliamentary Government in Canada: A Critical Evaluation and Proposals for Change", we can read the following:

> The Role of the Senate in the Legislative Process
> In our interviews with parliamentarians, it was obvious that the legislative role of the Senate is highly regarded by nearly all members of Parliament even though it does not receive much publicity.

One cabinet member stated that, and I quote:

> The Senate includes some of the best intellects in the country who work at polishing up legislation, and their work in this regard is excellent.

That is all from the cabinet member in question, but the report goes on to say:

> Our interviews also showed clearly that the Senate is still not playing fully its extended legislative role for reasons which go from simple negligence on the part of the government and the House of Commons to the attitude of the elected members who reject the idea that their non-elected colleagues can have a considerable influence on legislative matters.

The report goes on as follows:

> We think the legislative potential of the Senate should be developed by the government and the House of Commons. The excellent performance of the Senate in analysing and improving government bills should encourage more referrals to its standing committees. In addition, its impressive record in the presentation of useful recommendations on the matter of the government proposals in the white paper also suggests it should be given a more important role in this process.
> We must recognize above all that the House of Commons can turn some of its heavy responsibilities over to the second House. In particular, it can take advantage of the Senate's experience and time and, in the case of committees, benefit from a non-partisan approach to bring about solutions to the problems and the issues that are raised.

I, for one, have the impression that abolitionists could concentrate on improving the structure of the House of Commons, particularly the representation of the people there. I think at this time the first priority should be to put forward the idea of setting up a system of proportional representation in this country to reflect the will expressed by Canadian voters during the federal general elections. If it is true the Senate should be reformed in the not too distant future, it is even truer, I think, that the House of Commons should undergo drastic changes in the immediate future.

Honourable senators, I thank you very much for your indulgence. In concluding, I want to say that one should not infer from my position on the future of the Senate that I am opposed to all aspects of a constitutional reform. On the contrary, I think it is urgent that the federal government and the provinces find areas of agreement to actually bring about concrete improvements in a renewed federalism. Many studies made in the past half century can be used as a basis for that renewal, as they contain all the necessary elements to continue to guarantee this country's unity in diversity.

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Retirement Age Policies, entitled: "Retirement Without Tears", tabled in the Senate on 15th April, 1980—(Honourable Senator Deschatelets, P.C.).

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, as the Honourable Senator Bird is prepared to speak to this order this afternoon, and if there is no objection, I would ask that she be permitted to proceed now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Florence B. Bird: Thank you, honourable senator, for yielding the floor. I promise not to speak for more than an hour and a half!

[Translation]

Honourable senators, it is a sad story I wish to relate to you this afternoon. It is a story of worry, loneliness and poverty.

In short, it is the story of thousands of elderly women in this country who do not have enough money to lead a decent life today.

Still I am pleased to tell you that the report entitled "Retirement Without Tears" brings a little hope for tomorrow's elderly women.

[English]

Honourable senators, your committee was shocked and deeply concerned when we understood what is happening to old women and men in Canada today. This afternoon I want to talk about the plight of elderly women, because so many of them are poor.

Women live, on average, seven years longer than men, and therefore there are more women than men over the age of 65, but it is their poverty which concerned your committee. At the present time, three times as many unattached women as men over the age of 65 are living in poverty. In 1977, 60 per cent of all unattached women over the age of 65 had incomes below the poverty level. By "unattached" I mean those who are widowed, divorced, separated and living alone without families. In 1977 also, 81 per cent of unattached women over 65 had no pensions at all. As Senator Croll mentioned in his summary of Retirement Without Tears, in 1978, 671,000 women were receiving the guaranteed income supplement.

There are a number of reasons for this deplorable situation. Only 27 per cent of women are enrolled in private pension plans; they receive lower pensions because they are, in general, working in the low paid so-called "women's occupations," such as the service industries and clerical work. They still receive lower pay than men even when they are doing work of equal value; the wages and salaries of women are about 60 per cent of those of men. About 22 per cent of all women in the labour force work part-time, so their wages are generally lower than those of full-time workers. They do not receive pensions and they do not earn enough to provide for their old age.

Those few women who do have pensions have very poor pickings—very poor pickings indeed, honourable senators. Those who had pensions from employer-sponsored pensions, miscellaneous superannuation and annuities received an average of only $1,976 per year in 1971 dollars. This pitiful retirement income has been steadily eroded by inflation. Indeed, as you know, its buying power has almost been cut in half.

What about women in the Canada Pension Plan? Most women who do part-time work earn so little that they do not qualify for membership in the plan. Those who do qualify usually have low wages, and have often been able to contribute for only a short time because they had family obligations. In 1978, the average income for women from the Canada Pension Plan was $1,113 a year.

Your committee was obviously faced with the need to find some sort of solution to alleviate the present poverty of men and women over 65 years of age, as well as the long-term threat of poverty in the future for an aging population. We suggested that something should be done right away to reduce the present plight of these unhappy old people, and I am happy to say that this government is going to do it. In order to reduce the burden of their suffering at the present time, the government has now undertaken to raise the GIS by $35.00 a month for every married couple. It will also raise the GIS by $17.50 to the 23 per cent of unattached males and the 76 per cent of all females over the age of 65 who are receiving the GIS. Unfortunately, this increase will not raise all of these poor people above the poverty level, but at least it should help some of them to get somewhat better nutrition than they get now.

What about the long-term economic future of elderly women, of which your committee is certainly aware? For younger women the future is better than it was for those who are 65 and over today. Federal and provincial human rights commissions are now tackling the problem of equal pay for work of equal value, and I think there is reasonable hope that women will, in the future, have better pensions because they will receive higher wages.

A larger number of married women than in the past are also working. In 1977, 44 per cent of all married women were working, and 60 per cent of the women in the labour force were married. On the other hand, many women want to stay at home, at least when their children are young, and any civilized society should make it possible for them to do so.

In 1977, an attempt was made to meet this problem. Parliament passed a bill to amend the Canada Pension Plan enabling contributors to drop out any months of low or zero earnings spent at home caring for children under the age of seven, which otherwise might affect entitlement. The Province of Ontario vetoed this legislation, and British Columbia also voted against it. Since then, the Province of Quebec has included the drop-out proposal in the Quebec Pension Plan. This means that in nine provinces, Canadian housewives who must stay at home, or who wish to stay at home to raise their children, will continue to receive very small pensions. I sincerely hope that, at future federal-provincial conferences, this matter will be raised again and that Ontario and British Columbia will be persuaded to see the light.

Even if this amendment were passed, it would not be a complete solution to the problem of the future poverty of married women who want to stay at home with their children. In recent years, there has been a great deal of discussion about the need to provide pensions for these women. It has, for example, been suggested that housewives should be allowed to make voluntary contributions to the Canada Pension Plan. Your committee rejected this for two reasons, the first being that contributions to the plan are based on paid work and are compulsory, and the second being that, although a woman might be able to contribute if she had money of her own or if her husband paid for the contribution, it is likely that this would only help people in the middle and higher income brackets who can provide security for their wives in other ways. It will not help the working poor who are the ones who will need it when they reach the age of 65.

Men with low wages are, in any case, unlikely to make contributions on behalf of their wives. I say that because in 1976, which is the latest year for which I can supply you with figures, nearly 94 per cent of the pension plans in the public and private sector covering 42 per cent of all plan members provided no widow's pension. The reason for that depressing fact is that in many plans an employee is offered the option of taking a pension that ends when he dies or of having some fraction of it paid to his widow. Since it is more expensive to provide survivors' benefits and the benefits are lower, all those men settled for a larger pension in their lifetime and failed to provide for their wives. That is very sad. Of course, no member of this house would commit such a devious crime.

After careful consideration, your committee decided that the best way to provide wives with a pension would be to accept the principle that marriage is a partnership between equals. Therefore, it recommended that the pension of a husband and wife be shared—that is, it would be split 50/50 when either member of the couple is eligible for Canada Pension Plan benefits. This means that, when the husband reaches the age of 65, a wife automatically, whatever her age, would receive half of the husband's pension, as the husband would when the wife reaches the age of 65.

I am trying to avoid using the word "spouse", honourable senators, because I have a compulsion to make its plural "spice" and I know that is not correct. So, I am trying to avoid having you laugh at my efforts. I know too that the plural of "mouse" is not "mouses".

At the present time, when a husband or wife dies, the surviving spouse receives a survivor's benefit of 60 per cent of the other spouse's pension. If, as your committee recommends, the wife already has received one-half of her husband's pension, presumably she would, on the death of her husband, automatically receive 60 per cent of the half that he has retained. This amounts to 30 per cent of the total. If added to the 50 per cent which the wife already has, her pension would be 80 per cent of the total. The same rule, of course, would apply to the husband. I am just avoiding the word "spouses".

This is a more realistic survivor's benefit than the present benefit of 60 per cent, since it is now recognized that one person cannot live as cheaply as two, because so many basic costs such as rent, hydro, heating and taxes are not cut in half for a person living alone.

Honourable senators, there is nothing revolutionary in the idea of pension splitting in the light of legal changes that have already taken place. That is why your committee approved of this idea. The concept that marriage is a partnership between equals was first recognized in law when, in 1970, the marital regime called Partnership of Acquests was introduced in Quebec. Since then, all other provinces have studied, proposed or enacted reforms providing for an equitable sharing of the family assets acquired during a marriage or divorce, separation or death.

The concept of marriage as a partnership between equals has been recognized by Parliament. In 1977, after agreement had been reached with the provinces, the Canada Pension Plan was amended to provide for the equal division of credits, starting with the first year of marriage, or 1966, whichever is later, upon the dissolution of a marriage by divorce or annulment. On application, pension credits of the husband and wife are added together and divided 50/50. If this is not crystal clear, I would be very glad to answer any questions.

Your committee feels that a great deal of humiliation, ill health and alienation can be alleviated for thousands of old people in the future if its recommendations are implemented. The recommendations are pragmatic, farseeing and compassionate. They recognize the need, and, I think, the right of all of us—men and women alike—to end our days in comfort and dignity. They recognize the responsibility of governments to make that possible.

On motion of Senator Deschatelets, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, April 29, at 8 p.m.

RULES OF THE SENATE

DISTRIBUTION OF 1980 EDITION

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, upon taking your seats this evening you will have found on your desks the 1980 issue of the Rules of the Senate. Since the last printing in 1976, a number of amendments were approved by the Senate, some of which were pasted inside the front cover, with other amendments being pasted over the original rule in the book.

This reprint, which became necessary as a result of the small number of rule books remaining for distribution, incorporates the amendments approved by the Senate up to and including the amendment of December 4, 1979. The index has also been updated. An additional copy will be distributed to honourable senators through their postal boxes.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CABINET

ABSENCE OF MINISTERS FROM SENATE CHAMBER

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I note with regret that we lack the presence of two out of three of our distinguished members of the cabinet. I recall during the previous session that some complaints were heard from this side of the house, occupied at that time by my good friends opposite, about similar absences. I am wondering if there is a good reason for the Leader of the Government's absence. Perhaps he is dealing with some grave problem in British Columbia. I ask the Deputy Leader of the Government if he can shed some light on the situation surrounding Senator Perrault's absence.

Senator van Roggen: You are walking into this one.

Senator Flynn: Did the honourable senator have a comment?

Senator van Roggen: I made an interjection, and I apologize to the Leader of the Opposition. I muttered under my breath too loudly that the Leader of the Opposition was walking into this one, because Senator Perrault is in Ottawa tonight undertaking some very important business.

Senator Flynn: For once I would be pleased to know more about that.

I would inform the Deputy Leader of the Government that Senator Perrault so far has taken as notice 32 questions, to which we have received no replies as yet. Before I put the list of those questions on the order paper, perhaps the deputy leader could ask the Leader of the Government to arrange to have some replies made available for the Senate. The record so far is rather poor.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, so far as I know, Senator Perrault left British Columbia with all problems solved. He is in Ottawa tonight attending a dinner given for some visiting native Indian groups. He expects to be present in the Senate shortly. I told him that I would try to handle his obligations for the first half hour or so, or until he arrived.

As to the list of unanswered questions, the point is well taken. We are also concerned about them. I inquired just 20 minutes before the Senate sat this evening about getting replies later this week or the following week. We hope to clean up the backlog very soon.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CONTRIBUTIONS TO BANDS AND COUNCILS

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government, but in view of the invitation of the Deputy Leader of the Government I will ask him if he will be kind enough to convey my question to the leader. It is particularly appropriate that the government leader should be where the deputy leader said he is, because it may fit in with the subject of my question and might enable him to answer it.

My question refers to Treasury Board Order No. 763729 which says that it deals with Treasury Board approval of terms and conditions for the payment of contributions to Indian bands and councils.

I refer the Leader of the Government to the draft agreement concerning financial contributions to Indian bands and Indian councils. This agreement purports to have been drawn up pursuant to the Treasury Board minute, or order, to which I referred, No. 763729, and I understand the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has been trying to persuade Indian bands to sign it, effective as of April 1, 1980.

My specific question is as to whether any Indian bands in the maritime provinces have refused to sign that agreement on the grounds that there was insufficient or perhaps no prior consultation with Indian representatives as to its contents before the document was drawn.

Perhaps the deputy leader would permit me to add a supplementary question before he answers the first question. As a supplementary I would ask the Leader of the Government if this is so, how many bands have refused; was there any such prior consultation, if so, with whom, and if not, why not?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on behalf of the Leader of the Government in the Senate I will take the original question and the supplementary as notice.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

INTERNATIONAL SPORTS INVOLVING CANADA AND U.S.S.R.—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, my question was also intended to be directed to the Leader of the Government, and in his absence I find that I am not able to do as the previous speaker has done and accept the invitation of the deputy leader to address the question to him, since it is a matter that deals with government policy. The only other senator on the other side this evening who should be aware of government policy is the Minister of State for Economic Development. I therefore address my question to him.

Is the Canadian government, having taken the decision that Canadian athletes should punish the Soviet Union by not attending the Olympic Games, prepared to reconsider its apparent decision that sports contact at other levels—for example, the Canada Cup hockey series—should continue unabated?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I am not sure that there has been a statement of government policy on that, but I would be very happy to take the question as notice and refer it to the two ministers who are responsible, namely, the Minister of External Affairs and the minister responsible for sports.

Senator Donahoe: I have a supplementary question. In the event that the stand taken is as it appears to be, namely, that the government will not take issue with the holding of the Canada Cup series, and given that at least five National Hockey League players—Charlie Simmer and Marcel Dionne of the Los Angeles Kings; Larry Robinson of the Montreal Canadiens; Bobby Smith and Steve Payne of the Minnesota North Stars—have all said publicly that they will not participate in the Canada Cup series if Soviet players are invited to attend, will the government, in those circumstances, undertake to reconsider its policy on this matter?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will make sure that that message, or that information, is conveyed to the appropriate ministers.

ENERGY

EXCISE TAX ON DOMESTIC CRUDE OIL

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development.

Does the government intend to impose a tax on domestic crude oil over and above the negotiated price which will be shared between the producing provinces, the federal government and the producers? A simple yes or no will suffice.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Well, a simple yes or no is not possible at this time. I would like to look at the import of the question, and I can assure my honourable friend that the government's policy with respect to an excise tax on gasoline and diesel fuels is clear. That will not be changed.

Senator Flynn: Give us a blended answer.

Senator Olson: There may be negotiations involving some aspects of this question and I will ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to look into that in a little more detail before I give an answer. My honourable friend knows very well that a yes or no answer to any question is not a complete answer.

Senator Balfour: I have a supplementary question. Is the honourable minister prepared to concede that such a tax, in whatever form it may be imposed, will necessarily be passed along to the consumer of petroleum products in the form of higher prices?

Senator Olson: I know that the minister is not willing to concede that.

Senator Balfour: By way of a further supplementary question, is it true that the implementation of the so-called blended price system proposed by the government will result in transferring the cost of the existing import subsidy program to the Canadian consumer? Again, I would invite a simple yes or no answer.

Senator Olson: The honourable senator can give the invitation but, of course, he knows very well that the price of domestic supplies, or any of the other factors in the formula leading up to the amount paid as compensation, could be construed as being paid by the consumer; there is no question about that. There is no question either, as indeed the previous government stated over and over again, that the price of crude oil and the price to Canadian consumers all across the country is going to increase.

Senator Balfour: Another supplementary. Is the Minister of State for Economic Development, on behalf of the Government of Canada, prepared to make a commitment now that the total increase in the 1980 price of oil, including all extra taxes in whatever form they may be imposed, will not exceed the $4-per-barrel increase provided for in the Crosbie budget?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, of course, we have never made that kind of a commitment. We have said that the total price to the consumer in the package that we are about to begin negotiating will not exceed the total price of what was involved in the previous government's proposal, including excise tax.

Senator Flynn: Did you consult Senator Davey?

Senator Balfour: I should like to pose another supplementary question to the Minister of State for Economic Development, but before doing so I would remind him that the Crosbie budget's excise tax increase of 18 cents did not apply to heating oil supplied to the Canadian consumer. Is the Minister of State for Economic Development, on behalf of the Government of Canada, prepared to acknowledge that a per-barrel tax, as compared to the 18-cent-per-gallon tax, means consumers of home heating oil will inevitably pay higher prices than they would have under the previous government's proposal?

Senator Olson: No, honourable senators, I am not willing to concede that.

Senator Asselin: What are you waiting to see?

Senator Balfour: As a final supplementary, will the honourable gentleman explain why it is in the interests of the economic development of Canada for the Government of Canada to contract for the purchase of 50 million barrels of oil daily from Mexico at the highest prevailing world price while, at the same time, repudiating its agreement to give Alberta oil sands plants world prices for their oil?

Senator Olson: If the honourable senator wants an answer based on that preamble to the question, I suppose I would have to say that there is no question left because I do not agree with the preamble. However, I will be a little more charitable than that.

Senator Flynn: Why do you not agree?

Senator Olson: I would suggest to the honourable senator that such matters as security of supply are to be taken into consideration. In case the honourable senator has not heard, the security of supply from the Middle East has been put in even greater jeopardy than it was some time ago. I think any responsible government has an obligation to obtain sources of crude oil from a more secure geographical position or political position, whatever you want to call it. That is part of the attempted negotiations that are now going on.

• (2030)

With respect to the relationship between that and the price for tar sands oil, it is a fact that that price is now about 300 per cent of what it was when the deal was negotiated. There was a provision in that agreement whereby there could be a limit to how much that could increase on the upside, and in the interests of those people who made investments in the plant there was also a limit so that it would not go down so far that they could not recover their investment. It seems to me that a 300 per cent increase is at least somewhere near the point where that ought to be invoked.

Senator Balfour: I thank the honourable senator for his aristocratic put-down. He has failed to answer the basic question. Why is it in the interests of the economic development of Canada to pay Mexico the highest prevailing world price for crude oil and at the same time deny the synthetic oil plants in his own province of Alberta an equivalent price?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, we are talking about a mix of supplies. I am sure the honourable senator would agree that if we had the capability of bringing on enough Canadian supplies immediately, with the security necessary to make sure that we have it in the immediate or medium-term future, that would be the most desirable way of doing it. We are committed to bringing on more Canadian supplies as quickly as they possibly can be brought on. I do not think the honourable senator would try to argue that any price is a fair price no matter how high that gets. It happens to be 300 per cent now of what it was when it was negotiated. Would the honourable senator make the same argument if it was 1,000 per cent or 2,000 per cent? Some reason has to apply to these things.

Senator Smith (Colchester): The price of oil has risen by more than that.

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: How do you reconcile this Mexican deal when it is known that there is a glut in oil supplies throughout the world right now, to the point where some countries are talking about curtailing their production?

Senator Olson: If the market forces are at work with this glut, presumably the price is going to come down, and no doubt we will get a better price than Senator Balfour has been talking about.

Senator Charbonneau: I am just asking why we should pay a higher price for Mexican oil when we could get it at a much lower price elsewhere.

Senator Olson: I hope the honourable senator is right. In the meantime, we have not closed the deal with Mexico, so I am not sure if the honourable senator knows what the price is going to be. Certainly if there is a lower price, or even the prospect of a lower price, by the time those negotiations are completed I am sure he can rely on the negotiators on the Canadian side to take advantage of that situation.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

IRAN—DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: I have a question for the Leader of the Government, and perhaps the Deputy Leader of the Government could convey it to him. It is a follow-up of the matters raised last week on the Iranian crisis. In view of the continuing deterioration of matters in Iran, is the government considering severing diplomatic relations with that country, and, if so, when can that statement be expected?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on behalf of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, I will take that question as notice.

ASSISTANCE TO CHRYSLER CORPORATION

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: Honourable senators, I would like to address a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development. Is a final resolution of the question of government assistance to the Chrysler Corporation soon to be forthcoming?

• (2035)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I think that I could say "very soon."

Senator Flynn: You only "think."

Senator Charbonneau: I have a supplementary question. In contemplating financial assistance, does the government feel it is establishing a precedent that might oblige it to assist other manufacturers, such as the Ford Corporation, which incurred domestic losses last year, or independent parts manufacturers? These parts manufacturers, as well as the Ford Corporation, are facing enormous losses this year.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will not make an announcement for or on behalf of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. When he has completed negotiations with Chrysler, I would expect that he will make an announcement and give an undertaking on the matter.

Perhaps I could answer the part of the question relating to the explanation as to how the government arrived at whatever offer has been made.

CROWN CORPORATIONS AND AGENCIES

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, my question is for the government leader or, in his absence, for his deputy. Like previous questions I asked, it stems from the Speech from the Throne, a document which obviously needs to be thoroughly examined, in which one must try and extract as much substance as possible—which is not always easy.

Anyway, in the Speech from the Throne, His Excellency the Governor General informs us, and I quote:

> My ministers believe that Canadians want more effective government, not necessarily less government.

And then the Speech from the Throne goes on to announce the establishment of the following bodies: first, a Petroleum Price Auditing Agency; second, an alternative energy corporation; third, a Canadian Agricultural Export Corporation; fourth, a national trading agency; fifth, a Labour Information Bureau.

In addition, we are told that the Post Office Department will be turned into a Crown corporation.

Obviously, the expression "not necessarily less government" is much stronger than would appear from the wording alone.

Here is my question:

First, does the decision to create so many new Crown corporations in the first session of the 32nd Parliament result from a study of the various existing corporations or agencies?

Second, if so, has that study proved that none of the existing corporations or agencies does not already fill the role that would be entrusted with the new bodies?

Third, does that study justify the conclusion that the new bodies or corporations will not duplicate the work of existing agencies or corporations increasing, within the federal government itself, the problem of which the federal government and all governments within our federation have become aware with regard to their respective roles? Everyone is now aware that the problem of duplication exists with regard to federal-provincial relations. My question deals with the following point: Are we not now in the process of creating a problem of duplication within our very own sector of public administration?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I might perhaps mention that if good thinking lies in brevity, then this question is lacking in it. Still, the question is clear. I imagine it is possible some studies formed the basis of that part of the Speech from the Throne the Honourable Senator Tremblay quoted and, if so, that their purpose was to convince the government that setting up the Crown corporations or agencies, also mentioned by the honourable senator, would contribute to the efficiency of the government, precisely as the Speech from the Throne would have it.

Senator Tremblay: On a supplementary, if the honourable deputy leader will allow me.

Before or at the time of the introduction of the bills creating the new agencies, will there be a demonstration to enable us to judge for ourselves that there will really not be any duplication of functions between the new agencies and those that already exist?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I hope so, but most certainly the agencies will be designated in the bills that will be introduced either here or in the other place. A committee of the Senate will eventually study the bills. I would think that the work and task duplication will be examined at that time as will, I hope, all other aspects. I am therefore convinced that the question asked by the honourable senator will be scrutinized by the committees of the Senate to which the bills will be referred.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

JOINT REVIEW COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, I would like to direct my question to the Deputy Leader of the Government. During the last session the government proposed the establishment of a joint Senate-Commons committee to review Canada's foreign policy as well as its foreign aid policy. Does the government or the Secretary of State for External Affairs intend to present those proposals during this session?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I remember well the committee the honourable senator is alluding to. I do not know if it is the government's intention to reinstate it, but on behalf of the government leader I take the question as notice.

Senator Asselin: Is a reply forthcoming from the government leader?

[Senator Tremblay.]

Senator Frith: Yes, we will take care of it. I can accept on his behalf all questions put but I cannot reply except with his approval.

Senator Asselin: The reason I ask is that the Leader of the Opposition asked some questions and several other questions were asked but not answered, and I myself asked three or four important questions of the government leader. I am waiting for his answers to prepare my speech for the Throne Speech debate. Without his answers I cannot prepare my speech.

Senator Frith: If the honourable senator can specify on which questions he will base his speech for the Throne Speech debate I am sure that we will do all we can to help him.

Senator Asselin: Since I intend to speak soon can I hope to have the questions I put answered tomorrow?

Senator Frith: I do not think so. I am not saying that we do not have the answers but I do not think that you can count on having them tomorrow.

Senator Flynn: That is frank and honest.

INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE TO SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, my question is for the Minister of State for Economic Development. It relates to the question posed by Senator Smith (Colchester) within the past two weeks, which was then followed up by myself with regard to possible financial assistance for the Sydney Steel Corporation, particularly with reference to debt charges and moneys for modernization—something which has been promised by the government.

Senator Charbonneau asked a similar question regarding the Chrysler Corporation, and in reply to that the minister said he would provide an answer "very soon." I am wondering whether he intends to respond this evening to my question regarding financial assistance for the Sydney Steel Corporation that it would be "soon" that moneys would be forthcoming, and if it is "soon," how soon is "soon," and if it is "very soon," how soon is "very soon"?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the difference is in the shades of meaning between "soon" and "very soon." I am afraid I cannot even be that hopeful with respect to this matter. I shall take the question as notice and ask the responsible minister whether or not he can give the kind of definition my honourable friend is seeking.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

DESECRATION OF CANADIAN WAR GRAVES IN FRANCE

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government. Recently 22 Canadian war graves of Jewish veterans were desecrated in Chateau Brettevielle, France. Representations in connection with that shocking vandalism was made to the Minister of Veterans Affairs by the Canadian Jewish Congress.

I would ask the deputy leader to inquire as to what action the Department of Veterans Affairs is taking to repair those graves and what action the government is taking in terms of official representation to the Government of France concerning this very shocking incident.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I shall be glad to pass that question on to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Do I understand that there would be a dimension in the question for the Minister of External Affairs as well?

Senator Marshall: I think representation should be made to the Government of France through the Minister of External Affairs in terms of what investigation they are carrying out in connection with this shocking incident.

Senator Frith: We will start with the Minister of Veterans Affairs, then, and attempt to get the information you are seeking.

ENERGY

TANKER TRANSPORTATION OF CRUDE OIL ON WEST COAST

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, on Thursday, April 24, Senator Nurgitz asked whether the government was able to secure a commitment from U.S. Secretary of State Vance, during his visit to Ottawa, that the United States would not allow oil to be shipped via tanker down the west coast.

I am advised that both the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs raised this matter with Secretary Vance and that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has begun negotiations on this matter with his counterpart in the United States.

As the senator is aware, the Americans chose the Northern Tier project, despite the stated preference of the Canadian government for an all-land route and its clear and repeated objections to an overseas route which would result in increased traffic along Canada's west coast. The matter has been reopened and is being discussed by the minister responsible with officials in the United States.

Honourable senators, I also have a reply to a question asked by Senator Roblin, but I shall wait until he is in the chamber before giving it.

THE NETHERLANDS

STATUS OF GOVERNOR GENERAL AT ACCESSION TO THE THRONE OF H.R.H. PRINCESS BEATRIX

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, when the Leader of the Opposition asked about some questions on the order paper that had not been answered, I mentioned that I hoped to have some answers for him soon. I did not know then that it would be this soon. Senator Perrault's assistant has prepared some answers for me. In fact, I have answers to five questions and I am prepared to read them all into the record, but if the reply is lengthy I shall say what it deals with, and if the senator who posed the question wishes to have it taken as read perhaps he would say so.

The first is in reply to a question asked by Senator Austin on April 16, 1980. The honourable senator asked what the official status of the Governor General would be in relation to Her Majesty the Queen at the Accession to the Throne of H.R.H. Princess Beatrix of the Netherlands in Amsterdam on April 30. Senator Austin is not here so I take it that honourable senators would like me to read the full answer, which is as follows:

> Her Majesty the Queen will not be attending the accession, but will be represented by the Prince of Wales. The Governor General's status at the accession will be, to use the terminology the Dutch government is using to describe all national representatives at the accession, Head of the Special Mission of Canada. As has been done in the past, the Dutch are according the Governor General full head of state honour.
> As it is difficult for Her Majesty to represent Canada at events which take place abroad, she has supported the idea of the Governor General, as her representative in Canada, undertaking official travels to other countries. The practice was established when former Governor General Roland Michener, visited the Commonwealth Caribbean countries and, in 1971, the Benelux countries.

Senator Flynn: And also Iran.

Senator Frith: Mr. Léger visited Spain in 1978. Before these visits were undertaken Her Majesty was, of course, consulted.

HOUSING

INCREASE IN FUNDING UNDER THE RESIDENTIAL REHABILITATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my next reply is to the question put by Senator Marshall on April 17, 1980, on the increase in funding under the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. This reply is rather long, Senator Marshall. I shall be glad to read it, or perhaps we can take it as read and you can study it and then perhaps ask supplementary questions if you wish to do so.

The answer is as follows:

> Honourable senators, further to the question raised by Senator Marshall regarding an increase in funding under the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, I can now enlarge on my earlier response.
> The federal government has been placing increasing importance on providing assistance for the repair and maintenance of the existing housing stock through the RRAP program. Support is available for both homeowner and rental units.

Given the current trends in housing demand, it is anticipated that rehabilitation activity will increase in importance through the next decade. The RRAP program now accounts for nearly 40% of CMHC's total capital budget. In addition, the program has been opened up to private lending institutions, who can stack the RRAP forgivable loan provided by CMHC with a repayable private sector loan insured by CMHC.

The program will undoubtedly continue to need a large share of whatever funds are available for housing initiatives. CMHC will pursue its efforts to attract more private capital investment in the program.

CMHC is seeking approval for increased funds to enrich the RRAP program. Currently, loan forgiveness of up to $3,750 is available for homeowners and up to $2,500 per unit for rental units. The level of forgiveness available depends on the program participants' income. Currently, forgiveness is available to people who earn $10,000 or less. The amount of forgiveness increases as the income level decreases, and full forgiveness is available to people with incomes of less than $6,000.

The increased funding requested will cover proposed improvements to benefits for program participants through increases in the amount of forgiveness or grant available, and through significantly raising the income ceiling for eligibility. This is an important step in improving the program, as it will enable more people of fixed and low incomes to repair their homes.

People who wish to upgrade the energy efficiency of their homes can also obtain assistance available under the Canadian Home Insulation Program. CHIP provides grants of up to $500 for materials and labour to improve the level of insulation in homeowner or rental units.

NEWFOUNDLAND

ANNUAL SEAL HUNT—DYE SPRAYING OF SEALS BY PROTESTERS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the next answer is also in response to a question asked by Senator Marshall on April 23 last dealing with the annual seal hunt and the dye spraying of seals by protesters. The answer is:

> I am informed by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans that experiments have been conducted on the effects of dyeing young harp seals. Apparently, small quantities of dye are not harmful to either the pup or the mother-pup interaction. In large quantities, however, it is possible that harmful effects could result. Certain dyes, for example, might possess odours which could interfere with the mother's ability to identify her own pup.
> Although conclusive results are not yet available, individuals would be well advised to consider the possible dangers to the harp seal pups they claim they want to protect.

[Senator Frith.]

AIRLINES

APPLICATION OF EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS TO EXTEND SERVICE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, next is an answer to a question posed by Senator Smith (Colchester) concerning the application of Eastern Provincial Airways to extend their services. The answer is as follows:

> As of today, no official appeal from the decision of the Canadian Transportation Commission (CTC) has been received from Eastern Provincial Airways.

Senator Smith, I have some background information on this matter which perhaps you would like to examine. If you wish, I could read it, because you might wish to ask a supplementary question on it.

Senator Smith (Colchester): If it is not too long, it would be helpful to read it.

Senator Frith: The background information I have been given is as follows:

> On April 15, in a telex to the Prime Minister, the Atlantic Premiers asked that the federal government "immediately suspend and review" the decision of the CTC, on April 9, to give the Toronto-Halifax route to CP Air rather than EPA.
> Basis for the request: EPA is vitally important to economic activity of Atlantic region.
> EPA needs the route for practical and financial reasons. Atlantic provinces supported EPA's application and object to dismissal of their views by the CTC.
> Federal/Provincial Relations Office has drafted acknowledgement for Prime Minister's signature. PM asked Minister of Transport to review this matter on a priority basis.
> Matter could be handled by the Minister of Transport or at the level of Cabinet.
> Cabinet could make a decision quite quickly on its own motion or it could ask for interventions. In the latter case, it could take until late June and possibly longer to reach a decision.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I have a supplementary question to put now. The answer started with "as of today", and I wonder if that refers to today or to another day when the answer was prepared.

Senator Frith: The only date on the document, honourable senators, is April 25. So the reply is recent, but not of today, in the strict sense of the word.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

PRICE OF 1980 SILVER DOLLARS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the next answer is a fairly lengthy one in answer to a question by Senator Bosa relating to the price of 1980 silver dollars. Is it agreed that it be taken as read?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Bosa: May I have a copy of the three pages so that I do not have to wait until tomorrow to read the reply?

Senator Frith: I am sure I can arrange that, if it is important for the honourable senator to have it this evening.

The answer is:

As a matter of policy and in practice, the Royal Canadian Mint establishes the prices of its numismatic products with the view to fully recover its manufacturing, marketing and distribution costs and provide for a reasonable profit margin. A major cost factor is the price of the precious metals contained in the coins.

Prior to 1979, the precious metals markets had been fairly stable, particularly with respect to silver, with the results that the price of numismatic coins containing silver was only adjusted annually to absorb the inflationary increases. Also, because of the metals markets stability, the practice had been to establish the prices with respect to any year, in the fall of the preceeding year as an integral part of the annual budget approval process. Consequently, the price established for 1978 would reflect the average cost of metals in the latter part of the preceding year and so on.

For 1979, in the case of the silver dollars, the selling price of $5.50 was established on the basis of a silver price of $6.50 per ounce in the latter part of 1978. However, as the price of silver rose throughout 1979, the intrinsic metallic value of the silver dollar eventually exceeded the selling price of the coin, and the consumer (including several speculators) demand rose dramatically. Coins were being hoarded by speculators in large quantities because of their intrinsic value. By September 1979, silver had reached $20.60 per ounce, which meant that the value of silver in a coin had increased by $5.30. Rather than stop production and sales, the Royal Canadian Mint increased its selling price from $5.50 to $10.80, a difference of $5.30 thereby passing on the increase in metal costs to the consumer in order to complete the 1979 sales orders to new clients and coin dealers, and consequently the Mint had a smaller percentage of profit margin.

Because of the continuing mercurial nature of the silver market in the latter part of 1979 and early 1980, the launching of the 1980 Canadian numismatic coin program was delayed to February 1, 1980, at which time the sales prices were established to reflect the average price of silver at that time, which was $43 Canadian per ounce. The selling price of the 1980 silver dollar was then set at $22 in line with the silver market, and to absorb the replacement value of the silver consumed in coinage. (In January, silver had reached a high of $59 per ounce ($50 US).)

While the silver market has fallen dramatically since and for reasons which have been well publicized, the consumer demand this year for silver dollars at $22 compares reasonably well with the demand in the same period in previous years for a much lower priced coin. Also, it is absolutely necessary to set the selling price at the beginning of the program because these coins are sold through a mailing list of approximately 250,000 names and also through advertising in various newspapers and magazines.

BILL TO REPEAL—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, April 24, the debate on the motion of Senator Godfrey, for the second reading of Bill S-5, to repeal the Canada-France Trade Agreement Act, 1933 and the Supplementary Canada-France Trade Agreement Act, 1935.

[Translation]

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: Honourable senators, Bill S-5 asks for the repeal of the Canada-France Trade Agreement Act, 1933 and the Supplementary Canada-France Trade Agreement Act, 1935, consequential on the denunciation of the Canada-France Trade Agreement and the Protocol to that Agreement by Canada; under that denunciation, the Agreement and the Protocol expired on March 15, 1978 in accordance with clause 17 of that Agreement.

This bill has now been introduced for the fourth time and really deals only with the mutual protection of vintage wines produced in Canada and in France. Those agreements having expired on March 15, 1978, the bill will regularize a situation existing since then.

Senator Godfrey made a very interesting statement on the matter a year ago. In addition, last Thursday he suggested, and I agree, that everything which can be said about the bill has already been said. I therefore second his proposal that the bill be immediately passed without being referred to a committee.

[English]

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. P. Derek Lewis moved the second reading of Bill C-2, to amend the Immigration Act, 1976.

He said: Honourable senators, while Bill C-2 is short and simple in form, its object and consequence are quite important and urgent with respect to the refugee program in this country.

Quite simply, the object of this bill is to raise the ceiling of the total amount of loans that remain outstanding as the result of loans made to immigrants or refugees to help defray their transportation costs to Canada.

Under the present provisions of the Immigration Act, the ceiling on the amounts of such loans that can be outstanding at any one time is $20 million. The bill proposes to raise that limit to $60 million.

As honourable senators are undoubtedly aware, the transportation loan scheme has been a component of Canada's immigration program since 1951. Under the scheme loans are made to refugees and certain groups of immigrants from a revolving fund that is constantly replenished as individual loans are repaid.

Over the years many groups have taken advantage of the loans. In fact, one of the principal advantages of the loan fund is that Canada can react positively to refugee situations as they arise and bring people here quickly, for while ordinary immigrants can plan ahead for their move to a new country, refugees often face considerable pressure and require assistance in a hurry.

I should like to stress, however, that this amendment to the Immigration Act does not represent any cost to the federal government. Refugees and other immigrants do in fact pay back their transportation loans. I understand that since the program's inception, 95 per cent of the loans issued have been repaid. While that figure applies to all loans, the repayment rate by refugees is higher than average. Presently 90 per cent of all transportation loans are made to refugees. Whilst loans to refugees are interest free, interest is charged on loans to regular immigrants. Immigrants, including refugees, are required to pay back the loans after arrival, and for that purpose repayment schedules are established and payments begin 30 days after arrival. The repayment schedules are worked out with each immigrant in accordance with the circumstances of the particular case. That money goes back into the fund.

As repayment rates are about 95 per cent of the money lent with interest charges, normally the fund has been self supporting. However, as we all know, the Government of Canada has committed itself to bringing into Canada 60,000 Southeast Asian refugees between January 1979 and December 1980. The refugees are being brought to Canada by means of an airlift involving approximately 180 flights, which are paid for in part by the refugees themselves through transportation loans. As a consequence of these additional 60,000 refugees, the loan fund has been over-extended, and unless this bill is passed and the allowable ceiling is raised there is the probability of substantial cancellation of the airlift that is presently underway.

That, I am sure, is not a consequence which honourable senators would want to have happen to such a project, and it is therefore hoped that this bill can be treated with expedition and dispatch.

[Senator Lewis .]

I might say that during the past few months the program has been maintained during the dissolution by resorting to Governor General's warrants, but now that Parliament is sitting again the time within which government can ask for a warrant will expire some time in early May. Accordingly, there is urgency in passing the bill as soon as possible. In the circumstances I would hope that quick passage of the bill can be given by honourable senators.

On motion of Senator Macquarrie, debate adjourned.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Henry D. Hicks moved the second reading of Bill S-2, to implement conventions between Canada and Spain, Canada and the Republic of Liberia, Canada and the Republic of Austria, Canada and Italy, Canada and the Republic of Korea, Canada and the Socialist Republic of Romania and Canada and the Republic of Indonesia and agreements between Canada and Malaysia, Canada and Jamaica and Canada and Barbados and a convention between Canada and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to implement conventions and agreements between Canada and a number of other countries, specifically Spain, Liberia, Austria, Italy, Korea, Romania, Indonesia, Malaysia, Jamaica, Barbados and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, to achieve the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax. In addition, the bill provides that the Governor in Council may, subject to a resolution of Parliament, give effect by order in council to any supplementary convention or agreement.

At the time of tax reform Canada had 16 tax treaties in force. The number is now 24. It is expected that some 40 other countries will in due course be added to the list.

As in the case of similar legislation approved by Parliament over the last three years or thereabouts, this bill contains a part which deals with supplementary conventions or agreements.

The words "conventions" and "agreements" are apparently interchangeable. In treaties with some countries we use the term "convention"; with others we use the term "agreement", but there is no substantive difference that I can discern between the two. Anyway, the portion of the bill that deals with these matters is Part XIII. That part is designed to ensure that the tax treaties can be kept up to date as a result of changes in the tax systems of Canada and of the other countries. The mechanisms provided under this bill are similar to those agreed to previously by this house and by the other place.

The 11 tax treaties under review follow the general pattern of the treaties concluded with other countries after tax reform.

They also follow, to a large extent, the format and language of the Model Double Taxation Convention prepared by the Committee of Fiscal Affairs of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, OECD. The treaty with Jamaica and the United Kingdom, when in force, will replace the existing agreements signed in 1971 and 1966 respectively.

I should like to point out that although the bill is voluminous—indeed, it is a very large bill—it deals mostly with tax treaties this house has already approved in the past. As a matter of fact, only two schedules in the bill are new to this house: schedule X relating to Barbados and schedule XII relating to the protocol with the United Kingdom. Some honourable senators will remember that this house has already approved three times the treaties with Malaysia, Spain, Liberia, Austria and Italy; approved twice the treaties with South Korea and Jamaica; and approved once the treaties with the United Kingdom, Romania and Indonesia.

The treaties generally provide that dividends can be taxed in the country of source at a maximum rate of 15 per cent. In the case of Malaysia, the rate is nil for dividends received by Canadians, because Malaysia does not impose a tax of general application on dividends; and in the case of Jamaica, the rate is set, as in the existing agreement, at 22.5 per cent when the Canadian enterprise controls the Jamaican enterprise.

A general rate of 15 per cent—20 per cent in some cases with Liberia—is provided for in the case of interest originating in one country and paid to a resident of the other country. Certain types of interest—for example, interest paid to the Export Development Corporation—are exempted in the source country. The 1971 agreement with Jamaica did not put any ceiling on the Canadian rate.

With respect to royalties, the treaties provide for a general rate of 10 per cent, except that those with Korea, Malaysia, Indonesia and Romania provide for a rate of 15 per cent. The 1971 agreement with Jamaica provided for a 12.5 per cent rate in the case of Jamaica and no ceiling in the case of Canada. The treaties with Spain, Austria, Italy, the United Kingdom, Jamaica and Barbados also provide for an exemption in case of copyright royalties, while the one with Romania sets the rate at 10 per cent.

Some of the other matters dealt with in these tax treaties include reference to capital gains. The provisions here, in the whole of the 11 treaties relating to capital gains, are in line with the Canadian policy preserving the right of the source country to tax gains arising on the sale of real property, business assets and shares in real estate companies.

The provisions also deal with non-discrimination by declaring that discrimination, based on the concept of nationality, is prohibited under all of the treaties. This will ensure a fair and equal treatment in the countries concerned. On the other hand—and this seems to belie the statement I have just made—fiscal incentives based on the concept of residence, such as the small business deduction and the dividend tax credit in Canada, will not be affected. That is to say, they will not have to be extended to non-residents.

With respect to teachers, no special concession for teachers from abroad is included in these tax treaties. The unilateral exemption granted Canadian teachers in Jamaica and the reciprocal one with the United Kingdom have been removed in the new treaties.

May I interject here, because this is a matter of special interest to me in my capacity as an educator, that this arrangement whereby foreign teachers, especially university teachers, could come as visiting professors to a Canadian university for two years and avoid the payment of income tax in Canada, resulted in some strange and anomalous situations. I am sorry to say that treaties with some countries, including the United States, still exist which permit this, although our immigration regulations now make it much more difficult for Americans to take advantage of it.

Let us consider the situation before the tax treaties I am now referring to were changed, and let us suppose that a Canadian university administrator had $20,000 to pay a professor of English. An American professor could keep the full amount of $20,000 for two years, but a Canadian professor would have to pay income tax on it. If university administrators were smart they would offer an American professor a couple of thousand dollars less, and he would still have more take-home pay than a Canadian professor engaged to do the same job.

In my view that has been a bad arrangement and I am pleased that these treaties are correcting the situation. I hope that future treaties with other countries will omit this anomalous concession to foreign teachers coming into Canada. Indeed, I believe it is quite fair that Canadian teachers should not be accorded this same privilege in countries like Jamaica, to which I made reference just a few moments ago.

With regard to pensions, Canada has preserved its right to tax pensions paid to residents of the countries named in this bill. In the case of the United Kingdom and Italy, however, there is a special provision whereby that right will be exercised only if the pension paid in a year exceeds $10,000. The country in which the recipient of the pension resides retains its full taxing rights.

Concerning double taxation relief, the provision dealing with the methods for eliminating double taxation is a very important one in a tax treaty. Double taxation of foreign source income of Canadian residents is alleviated by way of a foreign tax credit. In addition, an exemption is granted for certain dividends received from a foreign affiliate of a Canadian company. In order to promote the flow of capital and investment, the tax treaties also ensure that proper relief will be granted in the other countries in respect of taxes paid in Canada.

The tax treaties with Malaysia, Spain, Liberia, Korea, Jamaica, Barbados, Romania and Indonesia contain an additional feature commonly referred to as a "tax-sparing provision." Under such a provision, the tax incentives granted by those countries under a pioneer industry legislation will directly benefit Canadian residents. This is achieved by Canada agreeing to take into account, for the purposes of computing the foreign tax credit, the amount of tax which would have been payable in the absence of the special incentive legislation.

On balance, the terms of the tax treaties provide an equitable solution to the various problems of double taxation existing between Canada and these countries. I therefore commend this bill to the favourable consideration of this house.

May I say that if any honourable senator is interested in having further details, I have been extremely well documented by the Department of Finance, and I believe that I shall be able to answer any question relating to the tax and withholding levels, royalties and income tax concessions in all of the countries concerned. I hope that honourable senators will approve this bill. I am rather surprised to note that some of these agreements were signed as far back as 1976 and only now are being submitted to us for ratification and implementation—which says something, I suppose, about the delays in the legislative process that we have observed in the Parliament of Canada during these past two or three years. In any event, I commend the bill to the favourable consideration of the house.

Senator Grosart: Would Senator Hicks care to indicate the committee to which he would be inclined to refer the bill?

Senator Hicks: I think that on previous occasions tax convention bills have been referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, and that would be my motion, unless honourable senators can convince me that I should do differently.

On motion of Senator Grosart, debate adjourned.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, April 24, consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's Speech at the opening of the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament, and the motion of Senator Rousseau, seconded by Senator Hays, for an Address in reply thereto.

Hon. Cyril B. Sherwood: Honourable senators, like previous speakers I am grateful for this, my first, opportunity here to consider the Speech from the Throne, and to express my views briefly on one or two subjects—subjects, I should perhaps point out, not directly included in the document so well presented by His Excellency the Governor General.

On Thursday, April 17 last, Senator Macquarrie mentioned the speeches that had already been made in this house on the subject before us. He then made a most worthy contribution, as he always does, and since that time Senator Connolly, Senator Murray and Senator Leblanc have added their fine contributions. I congratulate them all.

I acknowledge the mover, Senator Rousseau, and commend her for her well presented and well considered remarks, and the seconder, Senator Hays, for his timely and effective presentation.

[Senator Hicks]

Honourable senators, I want to take this opportunity to thank our former Speaker, the Honourable Senator Grosart, for the warm welcome he extended to me when I came here last October. I came here with respect for his profound judgment and great abilities, which, honourable senators, was reinforced by his conduct as our presiding officer.

All have gone out of their way to make me feel comfortable here. This I greatly appreciate. It has been my privilege to serve with most of the senators from my province in other places and jurisdictions.

I also hasten to add my congratulations to our new Speaker upon his appointment. His experience in the other place and in this chamber will help him make those necessary and wise judgments that will, without doubt, be required from time to time.

I noted earlier that there were matters—important matters—that might well have been included in the Speech from the Throne but were not; for example, matters affecting our ecology.

A much deeper concern with regard to our relationship with our natural environment has developed during the past decade. The entire area of hazardous materials and toxic chemicals needs to be thoroughly examined. It has been my observation in the short while that I have been here that matters which, in my view, fall into the broad category of the environment and resources end up being considered by committees of the Senate whose prime purpose obviously is not the study of such matters. For example, resource-type subjects such as forestry, wild life and inland waters, under present conditions, would be studied by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. Needless to say, that committee is so busy that the best it can do is restrict itself to looking at legislation in these areas. It simply does not have the time to initiative required study of these matters. The same applies to the question of pipelines. This is another of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee's responsibilities. We had to set up a special committee to look into the subject when the need arose.

Matters involving pollution would, under the present rules, be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, the reason being that pollution can ultimately involve danger to health. However true that may be, I think these matters would be more appropriately dealt with by a committee whose primary responsibility would be the environment and its protection.

I am suggesting, honourable senators, the setting up of a committee which will assume, as its responsibility, the study of a variety of matters falling under the heading of environment and natural resources, thus removing some of the burden from other standing Senate committees, and further rationalizing our committee activities. I therefore propose that we give serious consideration to replacing the Special Committee on the Northern Pipeline with a Standing Senate Committee on Natural Resources and the Environment.

The committee would be composed of 20 members, five of whom would constitute a quorum, and to which would be referred, if there were a motion to that effect, bills, messages, petitions, inquiries, papers and other matters referring to natural resources and the environment, including (1) renewable energy supplies as well as petroleum, mineral and water resources; (2) exploration for and development of energy, plus its pricing, export, conservation, supply, and the technology required to ensure supply; (3) transmission of energy by pipelines or otherwise; (4) wild life, forestry and fisheries; (5) air, water or soil pollution; (6) acid rain fallout and its effect upon life, and on our land, air and water—the implications of which are tremendous.

I noted in the Globe and Mail of Friday, April 18, 1980, that Ontario Hydro's proposal to sell huge amounts of coal-generated electricity to parts of the northeastern United States appears to be coming up against stiff opposition in the Ontario cabinet. Ontario's Minister of the Environment is quoted as saying, in an interview regarding this proposal, that the increased acid rainfall that would result from coal burned in producing power is unacceptable. He also goes on to mention a recent announcement by the United States government to the effect that it will greatly increase its coal-fired electrical production.

Honourable senators, knowing that the prevailing winds over much of North America are from the west, any indication of an increase in the use of coal to the west of us for electrical generation or for any other reason becomes a matter of extreme concern which, I submit, should have thorough consideration by a standing committee such as I have proposed.

We now know something of the effects of acid rain precipitation on our lakes and inland fresh waters. Detailed studies are required to ascertain what effect this fallout can have on fresh water spawning areas of many species of fish that are so vital to the future of Canada's fishery potential.

Honourable senators, every possible step must be taken to gather information, seek solutions and inform the public as to the seriousness and magnitude of environmental matters affecting our natural resources and agriculture. The very security of our food production is at stake.

I live on my farm. I am the fifth generation there. I can see changes that have taken place in my time more rapidly, I submit, than the changes that took place during the time of the four generations preceding me. My sons are on the farm now. If my grandsons, the seventh generation, are to farm those lands, it will be as a consequence of action taken now.

Again, honourable senators, I think of the application of the Pittson Company for approval to locate a 250,000-barrel-per-day refinery and marine terminal at Eastport, Maine. Consider the possible effects oil spills would have on a major fishery resort and the resulting threat posed to the livelihood and lifestyle of the people of the southwest part of New Brunswick, the Bay of Fundy coastline of the province of Nova Scotia, and the state of Maine. It is fair to say, honourable senators, that these are examples of matters that could appropriately come before a committee on natural resources and the environment.

Honourable senators, although this is my maiden speech in this chamber, I am not a stranger to our parliamentary institutions. I had the great privilege of representing the people of King's County, New Brunswick, in the legislature of my province for 22 years. I served for eight years as the Minister of Agriculture in the government of Premier Hugh John Flemming and for two years in the government of Premier Richard Hatfield.

I am delighted to find, in the Senate, so many of my former colleagues and friendly rivals in the Legislative Assembly of New Brunswick. I had the pleasure of serving with two Senator Fourniers. My sponsor, Senator Edgar Fournier, was a former colleague in the New Brunswick government. I also had the pleasure of serving with Senator Riley, Senator Thériault and, of course, with Senator Robichaud, a former premier, whom I faced for six years when I was Leader of the Opposition. I greet Senator McGrand who left the New Brunswick scene after long service as a physician, councillor, legislator and a member of the government before being summoned here. He left our legislature at about the time I entered it. I also greet Senator McElman who too was associated with New Brunswick politics and our legislature. Senator Anderson is New Brunswick's lady representative here. I served with her father, the late Stafford Anderson, a former member of the Legislative Assembly and of the Government of New Brunswick. I extend condolences to Senator Anderson on the recent passing of her mother and father and, through her, to the members of her family.

I hope that my experience in politics and in the Government of New Brunswick will enable me to make a contribution here as a representative of my province, and as one who is dedicated to the progress and advancement of our country. In particular, I hope my experience as an active farmer and as Minister of Agriculture will enable me to help the Senate and the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture appreciate some of the problems faced by farmers, and especially eastern agriculture, which I know best. Certainly, there are many problems to be resolved, problems which the federal government has a responsibility to address.

Finally, I want to say how honoured I am to be a member of the Senate, and to have been named to this chamber on the advice of our former Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Joe Clark. He led a government that brought honesty and responsibility to the conduct of our affairs; a government that had the courage to make difficult decisions in the national interest. As has been said before, those decisions will be vindicated as time goes on, and I am confident that the people of Canada will once again turn to a leader whose retirement from office is temporary.

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, I do not propose to speak for very long. In fact, there are only a couple of topics on which I want to make some comment. First of all, I should like to extend my congratulations to all officers of the Senate who have either resumed their former offices, or are taking on their duties for the first time. I should like also to congratulate all those who have spoken so far in this debate on the motion for an Address in reply.

The speeches have been of a very high order and I can only repeat what I have often said here before, that it is a pity that the speeches given here are not given wider publicity across Canada. I know very many people across Canada who would be interested in knowing, reading or hearing the thoughts and opinions expressed by this body collectively and individually. It is a body which is, by and large, composed of perhaps some of the most distinguished citizens in various fields and from various areas across Canada.

I was interested in hearing, during Question Period tonight, some reference being made by the Deputy Leader of the Government to the recent decision of the federal body which controls such matters to grant the right to a new service from Halifax to Toronto to Canadian Pacific Airways and to deny it to Eastern Provincial Airways. I want it to be clearly understood that nothing I say now is meant in any way to reflect on the ability and competence of Canadian Pacific Airways. It and its parent company form one of the great organizations in Canada, and I have every admiration for it. I do, however, in common with possibly all the caucuses from the Atlantic region, deplore that decision.

At a time when we are giving lip service to strengthening the regions of Canada, and trying to remove some of the inequities that exist in certain areas, for this decision to have been made is most regrettable, and I do hope it will be reversed.

I wish to give honourable senators some information which may not be known by them regarding EPA. I have it on good authority that the failure of the Canadian Transport Commission to recognize, in a positive way, EPA's application, will probably lead to—in fact, I have heard a word stronger than "probably" used by persons competent to make the statement—the eventual collapse of EPA. This would be a very serious matter.

I have here the verbatim decision of the Canadian Transport Commission on this matter. One of the arguments used is that EPA already has a right to a route from Halifax to Montreal. It entirely excludes the fact, for reasons which I am not going to go into at this time, that during the last several years there has been a serious decline in traffic between eastern Canada and Montreal. EPA has suffered from that decline. Although it has always been high, there has been a corresponding increase in traffic, in inverse proportion, between eastern Canada, where Halifax is perhaps the pivotal point, and Toronto. There has been a vast increase.

EPA has been kept going in recent years largely by profits it made on capital account; not on operating account. It was fortunate enough to invest in the acquisition of a number of planes and other capital equipment, and it was able to sell some of that, without prejudice to its services, at very substantial profits, which is largely what has kept EPA in the black, so to speak, during the past two or three years.

[Senator Rowe.]

Even so, the situation is very serious, even with the profits to which I have alluded. Last year EPA's turnover was $70 million; its profits were $500,000, and it cannot even look forward to that much in the coming year and in the coming years. How, then, can a company such as that get the credit, the financing—on that basis? What banks or financial institutions will look with any favour on advancing money to EPA under those circumstances? I have learned from company authorities that the projected loss for EPA over the next two or three years is $2 million.

It may come as a surprise to some people to learn that EPA directly employs 900 personnel in the Atlantic region, many of them in Halifax. Of course, a large number of them are at Gander, the home base. We also have to consider the large number of people who are identified with auxiliary services connected with EPA operations, which would not apply to the same extent at all with Canadian Pacific Airways operating a service from Halifax to Toronto.

I know the Authority has taken a negative attitude towards it, and there are, of course, some very good reasons for that, but the least that can be done is to give EPA a chance to compete. They ask for a chance to compete in that market. If they cannot be given the right to operate in place of Canadian Pacific Airways, then they ask for the right to compete.

The Authority recognizes in its report, in so many words, that EPA has a real need for a larger revenue base, and they advise EPA to go ahead and, in effect, to put it simply, try to make more money out of its existing runs. That is impossible; it is out of the question; it cannot be done.

That is the situation, and that is why I hope this decision will be repealed. For the sake of all eastern Canada, and perhaps in the long-run for the sake of all Canada, I hope that this decision will be repealed, and that EPA will be given a chance, in one way or another, to engage in an operation between Halifax and Toronto.

I was interested, as I am sure all honourable senators were, in specific allusions in the Speech from the Throne to the government's proposed programs. Inevitably a Speech from the Throne has to be fairly general; it cannot be too specific. Nevertheless, I thought it was significant that in the field of social welfare the Speech emphasized a number of policies and programs which it is the government's intention to try to implement in the near future, such as help for elderly people with low incomes, a national pension conference in 1980, training for women—where I think the emphasis will be on single women and widows who are able to work—for new occupations; more employment for the handicapped. There is also something I have been harping on, as Senator Godfrey knows, ad infinitum, ad nauseum perhaps, and that is increasing attention to reform of the Criminal Code in respect of, for example, crimes of violence, and reform of the Criminal Code in respect of the rights of women and the protection of women. This is very gratifying to me, as I am sure it is to all honourable senators.

At one time, not too many years ago and in our time, Canada led the world in pioneering social welfare programs. When Senator Croll was speaking on his report I was reviewing in my mind Canada's record in the field of social reform in the 1940s and 1950s and even in the 1960s, when Canada led the world in introducing new programs, revolutionary programs, such things as family allowances and old age pensions, and, not so many years ago, medicare, the introduction of which was, in my opinion, the greatest innovation in the history of social welfare in Canada.

I was interested to hear Senator Croll use the term "wasted or lost years" in respect of the last decade or so, which to some extent I think is true. Canada has lost its momentum in this field in recent years. Canada is no longer a world leader. I could name a dozen countries that are, right at this moment, ahead of Canada in the general field of social welfare. I say therefore that is a matter of gratification to me, as it must be to all honourable senators, to know that the government has placed this emphasis in the Speech from the Throne on new social welfare policies.

I realize, as we all do, that some of our programs have been abused in their implementation. There has been a good deal of waste connected with some of them. Nevertheless, I repeat that we must be careful, when we throw out the bath water, not to throw out the baby with it. The fact that a program is abused does not mean the program is not right; it does not mean the program is not required. We know that there have been abuses in, for example, medicare. It makes me shiver when I hear people talking about doing away with medicare. We can remove some of the abuses; we can see to it that some of the waste is eliminated, and we can do that without doing any real violence to the programs themselves. I, as a Canadian, should like to see Canada resume its former position of being a leader in the social welfare area. There are so many things that can be done.

It is only during the past few years that we have come to realize the problem of child abuse in this country, and it is not a unique problem. It is only now that we are appreciating the fantastic amount of discrimination the women of Canada have faced, as have women of other countries. We have not done much about it, as we have not done much in other areas that need attention, such as revision of the Criminal Code.

I do not wish to go into detail on that again, but I cannot help at times feeling that we are dissipating our resources in relatively unimportant areas and we are neglecting some of the most serious problems, notably child abuse of one form or another. We are neglecting this far more extensively than the average person realizes.

While I am on the matter of Canada's role in world affairs, I am reminded that we have in recent years lost out in another area. There was a time when Canada was one of the world leaders in basic scientific research. In fact, Canada was a leader in the practical implementation of that research. I regret to say that that is no longer true. To remind us of that, we need only think of the pioneering work of Canadians in the forties, the fifties and the sixties in the field of medical research, particularly in brain, heart and kidney research.

Canada, which is a small nation, was virtually leading the world in this area, but it is not doing that today, so I am informed, and I believe common sense would indicate that. Canada is not one of the world leaders in those areas today.

The same applies to the field of aerodynamics. It is not many years ago that Canada was one of the world leaders in that field. I do not think that the most chauvinistic among us would argue that Canada is a world leader in that field today, yet our resources, vis-à-vis the rest of the world, are still greater on a per capita basis than those of any of the 161 or so countries on the face of the earth. Certainly, I would argue that our human resources are no less, qualitatively, than those of any other country on the face of the earth. That is another way of saying that, with those human and physical resources, Canada should be able, in the years ahead, to resume its former position of leadership in social reform, scientific research and a dozen other areas.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, in a moment I shall move the adjournment of the debate, but perhaps you will bear with me for not more than two sentences while I say that I would like it to be well known that many of us in Nova Scotia feel exactly the same way about Eastern Provincial Airways. It is as important to the Atlantic region, as was said by Senator Rowe a few moments ago.

Having made clear my concurrence with that view, honourable senators, I now move that the debate be adjourned.

On motion of Senator Smith (Colchester), debate adjourned.

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, April 23, debate on the motion of Senator Nurgitz:

> That the Government of Canada formally support the boycott of the 1980 Olympic Games by the United States of America and that the Government take note of the resolution adopted by the Ontario Legislature, via a free vote, calling upon the Government of Canada to boycott the Games;
> That the Government of Canada affirm its solidarity with the dissidents, cultural and religious minorities in the Soviet Union, who, like the people of Afghanistan, are now under totalitarian Soviet dictatorship; and
> That the Government of Canada affirm Canada's strong continued support for international human rights and worldwide peace.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I welcome this opportunity to speak on Senator Nurgitz's motion of April 16, and I commend him for his initiative. The motion of Senator Nurgitz consists of three parts, in short, a calling for the Canadian government's boycott of the Summer Olympic Games in Moscow; affirmation of solidarity with dissidents and minorities in the U.S.S.R.; and, again, an affirmation of Canada's strong continued support for international human rights and peace.

Briefly, I would like to confirm that the Canadian government not only has met and continues to meet its international obligations in all three parts of Senator Nurgitz's motion, but has also taken important initiatives and given strong leadership in these matters. Because of the excellent record of the Canadian government in that area of international concern, I think it is worthwhile to comment on it.

It was on April 22, precisely seven days ago, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Honourable Mark MacGuigan, condemned the U.S.S.R. invasion of Afghanistan. He stated that, after the fullest consultation with allies and friends, the Canadian government adopted a broad spectrum of measures (initiated under the previous government), such as the cancellation of visits by ministers and officials, and also halted a wide variety of exports and exchanges. On that day the minister also announced that the Canadian government had taken the decision to boycott the 1980 Olympic Games in Moscow to demonstrate its opposition to the Soviet aggression in Afghanistan. Also, he urged the Canadian Olympic Association to inform the organizing committee that Canadian athletes will not be participating in those Games. Last Sunday, by a majority vote, the Canadian Olympic Association supported the stand of the Canadian government.

The policy of the federal government is clear and strong in impressing upon the Soviet Union that international terrorism, in all of its manifestations, whether by armed students or disciplined troops, is unacceptable to Canada. This strong stand of the government is one of which I am sure we are all proud, and to which we give our fullest support.

It is despicable that the U.S.S.R. has used—indeed, has abused—the Olympic Games spirit by trying to politicize it and also by using it as an instrument to propagate its foreign policy. I should like to take this opportunity to commend our athletes for the great sacrifice they are making by refusing to go to Moscow. However, their investment of years of hard training should not be wasted. That is why I support all efforts by the governments of free countries and sports organizations of the world to organize alternative international games, which could be called, as Senator Nurgitz suggested the other day, the 1980 Freedom Games.

I also commend the CBC for cancelling its coverage of the Games, because the Olympics are also a great media event. However, the Olympic boycott is a peaceful weapon of great impact, which should let the U.S.S.R. rulers and people know how much we cherish freedom and human rights.

With respect to the second part of the motion, the affirmation of solidarity with the dissidents and persecuted cultural and religious minorities in the U.S.S.R., evidence abounds that Canada has met its humanitarian obligations in this field with a fine record, and not mere rhetoric. The Canadian government has—in some cases privately and, in others, publicly—made representations to other governments on these important matters. Furthermore, the government has made great efforts—and achieved substantial results, I am proud to say—particularly in the matter of reunification of families, mostly from Eastern European countries and the U.S.S.R.

I took part in discussions held by the present Prime Minister in Moscow that eventually made it possible for several hundred Jews to leave the U.S.S.R. and settle in Canada. Our government has had success in dealing bilaterally, and in the context of the Helsinki Final Act, with Eastern European countries and the U.S.S.R. in a wide range of humanitarian matters.

In 1977 and 1978, at the Belgrade Review Meeting of the Helsinki Final Act, following the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, Canadian government representatives were most outspoken in exposing and condemning human rights violations in individual cases and in general. Moreover, the Canadian government has an enviable and impressive record of support for refugees and displaced persons from all areas of the world.

Since the Second World War, Canada has resettled more than 350,000 persecuted and displaced persons, and supported generously the United Nations Commissioner for Refugees. Recently, new initiatives have been taken by the government, approving a special order in council allowing 2,300 refugees from Eastern Europe and self-exiled people from that area of the world to apply for admission to Canada in the recent fiscal year.

At international meetings, we have prodded, and continue to prod, the world community and individual countries to live by their commitments and fulfil their responsibilities to humanity.

I should also like to take this opportunity to deplore the persecution of all human rights activists, not only in the U.S.S.R., but in other countries as well. In particular, I commend all those parliaments and governments which have condemned the U.S.S.R. government for the arrest, degradation and internal exile of the eminent physicist and human rights activist and Nobel Peace Laureate, Dr. Andrei Sakharov. Dr. Sakharov has an immense following in Canada and, indeed, throughout Europe and other parts of the world. His forced exile is of extraordinary significance in that he has been the champion of human rights within the U.S.S.R. and has commanded a good deal of public attention. In taking action against Dr. Sakharov, the Soviet authorities have made it clear that their tolerance of dissent has come to an end, and that Dr. Sakharov, who carries the hopes of countless thousands both within the Soviet Union and outside it, can dissent no longer.

It is my hope that more governments and parliaments will insist that the Soviet government restore Dr. Sakharov's honours, and release him from his sentence of exile.

The third part of the motion calls upon the Government of Canada to affirm its strong continued support for international human rights and worldwide peace. As in the past, so today and, I am sure, in the future, the Canadian government will continue to press for respect for human rights and the promotion of peace throughout the world.

I take this opportunity to commend highly Ambassador Taylor for his courage and skill in helping several American diplomats escape from Iran, thus sparing them from the abuse now suffered by their colleagues held hostage against all norms of decency and international law. Ambassador Taylor's admirable efforts have shown Canada's deep friendship for her American neighbours to the south.

The strong statement made last week by the Secretary of State for External Affairs condemning the U.S.S.R. invasion of Afghanistan, and supporting the boycott of the 1980 Summer Olympic Games, is the most recent evidence of Canada's support for international human rights. Earlier, in the Speech from the Throne opening this Parliament, the federal government made an official commitment to pursue peace. I can do no better to emphasize this point than to read the appropriate passage from that Speech wherein it is stated:

> My Government takes office against the most sombre international background of recent years. Events in Iran and Afghanistan have done great damage to international laws and institutions and undermined confidence and stability.
> In response, my Government intends to conduct an active foreign policy. Canada will rely upon its strong ties of friendship throughout the world. Part of our international response must be a determination to increase the ability of the NATO Alliance to provide security for its members and to advance the cause of peace, and my Government is committed to doing its full part.
> But while recognizing the need for Canada to strengthen alliance security, the dangers of nuclear holocaust cannot simply be forgotten. If anything, these dangers are heightened by current tensions and by the continuation of the arms race. Canada's imperative is clear. This Government must continue its strategy to suffocate the deadly growth in the nuclear arsenals of the world. We must, and we will, actively co-operate in international efforts to negotiate agreements on verifiable means of arms control and disarmament, and seek to rally others to a cause that is no less than human survival on this planet. To assist in this process, a new position of Ambassador for Disarmament will be created within the Department of External Affairs.

I think we should be proud of our country's record and resolve in promoting peace and defending human rights. Canada has signed and ratified all of the international declarations and covenants dealing with human rights. Domestically, the culmination of many efforts to assure human rights for our citizens was the Royal Assent given in this chamber, on July 14, 1977, to the Canadian Human Rights Act, which eliminates all forms of discrimination, ensures the protection of individual privacy, and establishes a Human Rights Commission to enforce its provisions.

Before I conclude my remarks this evening, I should like to draw to the attention of honourable senators the fact that 1980 in being commemorated as the Katyn Year by Canadians of Polish extraction. It was 40 years ago during the Second World War that 15,000 Polish officers and soldiers disappeared. Some time later, a mass grave of brutally murdered soldiers, all prisoners of war, was found in the Katyn forest in the U.S.S.R. I am sure all honourable senators join with me in condemning the perpetrators of this heinous act and violation of basic human rights, and I am sure all honourable senators join with me in paying tribute to the heroic Polish people, who paid such a great price for the defence of freedom against such tremendous odds.

Honourable senators, in extolling Canada's record and comparing its accomplishments with the performance of other countries and with what still remains to be done at home and abroad, the challenge seems insurmountable. How can we not begin with anguish the 32nd Parliament of Canada, which is opening against a backdrop of disunity at home and armed conflict abroad. Peace is threatened. Human rights are still being violated. It is important and timely to remind ourselves, our government and the world that peace and justice do not rest on armed force alone.

In conclusion, I would like to quote the most prestigious champion of human rights and of peace, His Holiness Pope John Paul II: ". . . in the final analysis, peace is but the respect of the inviolable rights of man."

On motion of Senator Macdonald, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

DESECRATION OF CANADIAN WAR GRAVES IN FRANCE—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday the Honourable Senator Jack Marshall raised a question about the desecration of Canadian war graves in France, those of Jewish veterans. I am the National Commander of the Jewish Veterans of Canada and have been since the beginning of the year. In my capacity I had occasion to ask the War Graves Commission to investigate a report that came to me about lack of attention to the war graves. They investigated it and came to the conclusion that all that could be done was being done. I was quite satisfied.

● (1400)

When the desecration took place recently, they called me, even before I had the opportunity to call them, to let me know what the situation was. They immediately put it into the hands of a man who would be in Great Britain the next day to attend a meeting and to investigate what actually happened.

When he came back he telephoned to tell me exactly what had taken place and I asked him to put it in writing and send it to me, which he did.

Yesterday when Senator Marshall asked his question I had the information here but I thought I would wait until today when I would have all of the documentation. I now have in my possession that information and I would ask your permission to place it on the record. It is an apology from France together with a memorandum prepared for the minister in the event that he needed to reply to a similar question in the House of Commons. No question was put to him, although it was asked here.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that the material be placed on the record as an appendix to today's proceedings?

(See appendix, p. 160.)

Senator Croll: Because they took such quick measures and showed their concern in giving me the information so quickly, I thought I should bring to the attention of this house that they were doing everything they could to keep us fully informed. I thought they were entitled to be given credit for what they did.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I should like to thank Senator Croll very much for the statement he has made. I hope I did not imply in my question that the Commonwealth War Graves Commission was in any way at fault, because I have the greatest admiration for that commission. As recently as last November, when I was over at a memorial service at Vimy, I visited many of the war graves, and in my opinion all Canadians should be proud of the Commonwealth War Graves Commission.

In thanking Senator Croll for his answer, may I say that I do not think he indicated whether he had had the assurance from the Minister of Veterans Affairs that the 22 war graves that were desecrated would be repaired and restored to their original state.

Senator Croll: The report is complete in that respect, senator. New headstones have already been ordered from Italy, and the graves will be fully restored to their original state by June 6.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—CORRECTION OF STATEMENT IN DEBATE

Hon. Florence B. Bird: Honourable senators, I wish to correct a statement that I made in this house. On page 125 of the Debates of the Senate for April 24, which records my speech on the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Retirement Age Policies, entitled Retirement Without Tears, I said that I was glad the government had agreed to raise the guaranteed income supplement by $35 a month for every married couple. That is, indeed, true. I then went on to say that it would also provide $17.50 for each of the unattached males and females who are receiving the GIS. This, of course, is not the case. The unattached males and females, who are the ones who are suffering the most at the present time, will receive the full $35.

I apologize to the Senate for this inexplicable reversal of the facts.

There is a second point of order that I must make. It has been drawn to my attention that I did not say that survivors' benefits are not mentioned in the committee's recommendation on pension sharing—that is, pension splitting between husband and wife. In my speech I only said that "presumably" if the present system of survivors' benefits were applied after the pensions were shared, each surviving member of the couple would receive 80 per cent of the total.

Of course, the survivors' benefit could be adjusted to give survivors the 60 per cent that they now receive. That would be for the government to decide. On the other hand, I believe the committee should have discussed survivors' benefits, and I still think so. It should not have recommended that a surviving spouse receive less than he or she is receiving now.

● (1405)

I am making the statement so that it will appear on the record.

HON. PAUL DESRUISSEAUX

TRIBUTES ON RETIREMENT FROM SENATE

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, today is the last day of attendance in the Senate of our distinguished colleague Senator Desruisseaux. He was called to this house in 1966, and tomorrow is his 75th birthday.

[English]

Senator Desruisseaux has enjoyed a magnificent career in both private and public life. We all know his credentials. He has applied his many talents in so many fields. Indeed, a two-hour speech could be made on the subject of his career. In business, finance, the arts, benevolent work, the law, military, broadcasting, education, and a number of other fields his contributions have been most impressive.

In this place he has been most active, bringing great credit to the Senate in all of his activities. He has worked on many Senate committees including Standing Rules and Orders, National Finance, and Banking, Trade and Commerce. He has also demonstrated an interest in international affairs.

We have benefited enormously from his participation in our activities here and from his constantly good advice. We shall greatly miss his presence and counsel.

On behalf of the government, I want to wish Senator Desruisseaux every happiness in his post-Senate years. Judging by his eventful life to this point, we all know how vigorous and active he is going to be. We look forward to having him visit with us as often as he can. A great Canadian of his capacity, with such an enormous love for his country, will always be welcome here and everywhere in this nation.

Such a great Canadian, so talented and so infused with a profound love for his country will always be welcome among us.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, tempus fugit. It seems as if Senator Desruisseaux had just been appointed yesterday to this chamber. I had been sitting in the Senate for four years, having been appointed back in 1962. I think that Senator Desruisseaux's choice falls into the category of the typical choices made by the former Prime Minister, the late Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson. These appointments by Mr. Pearson bear a distinctive mark. I certainly do not want to take anything away from the merits of those who were nominated afterwards. Certainly not in the case of Senator Goldenberg who is looking at me in a rather anxious manner. Yet I remember quite well the time when Senator Desruisseaux came to this place after an exceptionally diversified career in just about every field of activity, as the Leader of the Government emphasized: radio, television, teaching, military service, law, private industry, you name it. He has gained experience in all these areas of human endeavour and done so with success.

I remember some of his initial reactions after coming here. For several years he was somewhat at a loss, and with good reason. There is reason to be lost for someone who had been as active as he had been in various fields. It is not easy to understand how this house operates. Indeed, it is not any easier to understand how the other house operates. It may be even more mysterious. One wonders how they can sometimes arrive at decisions over there. Here at least there is progress, we pass legislation and do something. In any event, that is our democratic system, the worst, as Sir Winston Churchill said, barring all others.

Coming back to Senator Desruisseaux, he finally got used to it and understood how this house operates. Furthermore, on several occasions he made very important speeches here which had a decisive effect. I remember in particular some of his interventions on the textile industry which led to very favourable decisions from the government for that industry which is particularly important in the Eastern Townships area from where he comes.

So, on May 1, 1980, Senator Desruisseaux reaches the set age of 75. Had he been appointed before 1965, like some 27 or 28 of us, he could continue. He would not be facing the problem of the age of retirement which Senator Croll would like to solve. He could continue like Senator Croll who, and this will be highlighted this evening, will certainly continue for a good 20 years without having to start a new career. But Senator Desruisseaux will have to find a new career. We wish him well, of course, in that new endeavour. Indeed, as the Leader of the Government pointed out, he will always be welcome here. We will remember well what he has accomplished in this house. Canada is grateful to him for the work he did, just as Quebec and his Eastern Townships region must be grateful to him for his dedication to them before and since coming here.

Hon. Paul Desruisseaux: Honourable senators, I would like to thank the Leader of the Government as well as the Leader of the Opposition for their kind words. I must recognize what has been said about me and, as they said, I have been very active. However, I will not take up the time of the Senate by talking about it at length. But during the first four months I sat here in this house, I had a letter of resignation in my pocket. Senator Flynn put it well when he said I was lost when I came to the Senate.

I must admit I have made a lot of friends here and appreciated the very useful action of the Senate on both sides of the house. It was also constructive action that allowed Canada to move forward, and consolidated my views, for example, on separation and federalism.

● (1415)

A few months after I started here I felt lost. It was quite a change from my usual occupation. I had been used to fighting without letting it be shown and to achieving whatever goals I had without hurting anyone. However, I do not believe I have had many enemies during my public life. I am leaving here with the knowledge that I have made a great many friends in this place.

I am glad now to have the opportunity to pursue activities which I hope will be to the benefit of other Canadians. I will go no further than to express my very best wishes and to say that I regret leaving this place today. Thank you.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would ask you to consult your diaries while I make some suggestions about sittings for next week, based on consultations I have had with our colleagues opposite.

The intention is that the Senate should sit next Monday evening, May 5, at 8 o'clock, and again on Tuesday evening, May 6, at 8 o'clock rather than Tuesday afternoon. We will also sit on Wednesday at 2 o'clock and on Thursday at 2 o'clock. We expect to receive some bills, so we should have enough business to keep us occupied on Thursday afternoon. During the week I expect we will deal with the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne along with other matters. If that schedule works to the advantage of any committees that might want to meet, on Tuesday, for example, during the day at any time, then the appropriate chairmen will take that into account.

Within the framework of those Senate sittings, the committee meetings that I am aware of are as follows. This afternoon, when the Senate rises, the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science will have its organization meeting. Coincidentally with that, the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs will have its organization meeting. Both those meetings, then, will take place today when the Senate rises.

Tomorrow we will meet as usual at 2 p.m. Just to complete the picture, let me say again that we will meet on Monday at 8 p.m. and on Tuesday at 8 p.m.

If the order of reference for the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs is adopted, the committee will meet at 2.30 next Tuesday afternoon. On the same day, Tuesday, May 6, the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance will meet at 4.30 p.m. There may be other committee meetings, and if there are honourable senators will be notified of them.

There is one final matter for your calendars, honourable senators. We expect the supply bill will be passed by the other place on Thursday evening, May 15, and we will be asking honourable senators to sit on Friday, May 16, at 11.00 a.m. to deal with that bill.

That is the schedule that is planned for the Senate for the next two weeks. Have honourable senators any questions? The anomalies are, as I have said, next Monday night, next Tuesday night and Friday, May 16.

Senator Beaubien: What are the intentions for Monday, May 12? Will we sit on that Monday?

Senator Frith: There is no present plan to sit on Monday, May 12.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question on the supply bill. I think it depends on an agreement made in the house that it be passed on May 14 or 15.

Senator Frith: May 15.

Senator Flynn: Is there any reason why it should be passed by this chamber the following day? Is there any practical reason?

Senator Olson: It is supply.

Senator Flynn: I know it is supply, but why May 15? The end of the month I could understand.

Senator Olson: There are a lot of other things to get to.

Senator Flynn: I should like some explanation as to why this is necessary in the middle of the month.

Senator Frith: The reason we picked May 16 is that it would not be possible to meet on the following Monday, May 19, Victoria Day, and the day before the referendum, or later. The hope is that we can meet to deal with supply for the normal reasons of urgency that attach to the matter of supply. There are no special reasons other than those that normally apply to supply motions. There is also the fact that, as honourable senators will recall, these estimates have been referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, which will be meeting on that subject next week.

Senator Flynn: I understand that, and I am not criticizing. I was wondering why there was a deadline. You mentioned May 19, which is the day before the referendum, and I can understand that, or even May 20. But what difference would it make if the Senate were to adopt this bill on May 21 or May 22? Is there any practical difference for the government?

Senator Frith: As I understand it, there is, but I cannot give the Leader of the Opposition the details as to why.

Senator Flynn: Will you try to do so tomorrow?

Senator Frith: Yes, I shall.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government) tabled:

Report of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1979, pursuant to section 46 of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, Chapter C-3, R.S.C., 1970.

Report relating to warrants issued under the Official Secrets Act for the year ended December 31, 1979, pursuant to section 16(5) of the said Act, as amended by Chapter 50, Statutes of Canada, 1973-74.

Report relating to authorizations and interceptions under the Criminal Code for the year ended December 31, 1979, pursuant to section 178.22(4) of the Code, as amended by Chapter 50, Statutes of Canada, 1973-74.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

TERMINATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY—MOTION RESCINDED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 47(2), moved:

> That the order of the Senate of April 15, 1980, that the proceedings on the order of the day for resuming the debate on the motion for an Address in reply to His Excellency the Governor General's Speech from the Throne addressed to both Houses of Parliament be concluded on the eighth sitting day on which the order is debated, be rescinded.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, before the motion is put and by way of an explanation, I should like to add a few words. Honourable senators will remember that we had passed this motion, that is now before us for rescission, since the Throne Speech debate is usually limited to eight days. Now, however, under the present circumstances, we have chosen to consider the possibility of rescinding the motion; this in fact would allow us to pursue the debate for nine, 10 or any number of days, or until the whole list of honourable senators who want to take part in the debate has been gone through.

I do not mean that the senator or his audience will be exhausted, just the list. In addition, in this way the debate will be given some flexibility, sparing us the problem that has come up, that is that on occasion only one honourable senator deals with the question. Then, we use up one day out of our eight days. So, with the consent of Senator Flynn, we have decided that it is far better not to set a time limit. That is why I ask that this motion be adopted.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before proceeding to questions, I am wondering whether the Leader of the Government has for us today replies to the many questions that remain unanswered. If he were to give us the replies that he has ready now—including, I hope, a reply to the question respecting the areas of responsibilities of the ministers sitting in the Senate—that may shorten the Question Period this afternoon.

The Leader of the Government has said he wished to consult me in connection with the responsibilities of the ministers sitting here. I do not know why he would want to consult me. I have no objection to being consulted, but I do not have anything to do with the areas of responsibility of the ministers sitting here. That is more a problem for the Prime Minister than for me.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as the deputy leader stated yesterday—and I note with interest that the Leader of the Opposition was in his place—an endeavour will be made to clear up the backlog of questions as quickly as possible. Indeed, certain information was provided yesterday, so a start was made. The outstanding information will be forthcoming very shortly, and inquiries are going forward each and every day. I know the importance of some of the questions posed by the opposition, and I think the opposition should be congratulated for its vigorous approach to the Question Period.

Senator Flynn: My understanding then is that you have no replies available today to the 30 questions that remain unanswered.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the information could arrive by courier at any moment.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Or by carrier pigeon.

ENERGY

EXCISE TAX ON DOMESTIC CRUDE OIL

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, last evening I directed the following question to the Minister of State for Economic Development.

> Is the Minister of State for Economic Development, on behalf of the Government of Canada, prepared to make a commitment now that the total increase in the 1980 price of oil, including all extra taxes in whatever form they may be imposed, will not exceed the $4-per-barrel increase provided for in the Crosbie Budget?

The honourable senator's response was:

> Honourable senators, of course, we have never made that kind of a commitment. We have said that the total price to the consumer in the package that we are about to begin negotiating, will not exceed the total price of what was involved in the previous government's proposal, including excise tax.

I direct the honourable senator's attention to the House of Commons Debates of April 25 at page 414, where the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is reported as stating:

> Madam Speaker, the government is working on various scenarios in terms of pricing . . . but I can assure the honourable member that for this year the wellhead price increase that the government is working on is below $4.

Will the honourable minister explain, if he can, the apparent contradiction between his statement in this place and that of his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in the other place.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Well, honourable senators, I do not see any discrepancy to explain. The honourable senator may want to put that interpretation on it, but now that he has drawn to his own attention that he knew about that answer coming directly from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I really fail to see why he asked me the question.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Why not simply tell us that the other minister was right and you were wrong.

Senator Argue: They were both right.

EXCISE TAX CREDIT

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. This country recently went through an election campaign. In the course of that campaign my honourable friends opposite, and their honourable friends in the other place, went up and down the length and breadth of this country attacking the government for its proposal to raise revenues through an 18-cent tax on gasoline. At no time did they ever acknowledge or admit that concurrent with that proposal was an undertaking that the revenues so raised were to be expended on energy-related products. Would the minister now tell us in the light of the increasing likelihood that Liberal prices may turn out to be higher than Progressive Conservative prices, if it is also the intention of his government to offer a generous energy tax credit so as to permit low and middle-income Canadians to bear Liberal energy costs?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I regret the fact that there seems to be a tendency on the part of the honourable senator to refight a campaign now long passed. Surely our endeavours are better invested in the task of devising policies and programs to help the Canadian people from coast to coast.

Secondly, honourable senators, it would take Sherlock Holmes assisted by a bevy of other detectives to determine what the Conservative energy proposal would have amounted to in terms of ultimate energy costs to the Canadian consumer. But it can be said that the government proposal, which the honourable senator has spoken about in such deplorably critical terms, is designed to provide adequate energy supplies for the Canadian people and to maintain a competitive edge in relation to other countries. Certainly the proposal will, in the ultimate, we believe, be more advantageous to the Canadian people than would have been the proposal advanced by the previous government. In addition, there is a determination on the part of the government to attain energy self-sufficiency as soon as possible.

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—SUBSIDIZATION OF ELECTRICAL POWER GENERATION

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: I have a supplementary question. Insofar as I am able to follow the convolutions of the answer which has just been given, I take it that what it was intended to say was that this government has no intention of offering any generous tax credit, energy tax credit or any other tax credit, to assist low and middle-income Canadians to bear Liberal energy costs. That is the meaning I take from the answer that was given to me.

The honourable gentleman will recall that that same Crosbie budget, among other benefits, provided for a large subsidy to electrical power generation in the Atlantic provinces, and I am sure that I need not tell him that the Atlantic provinces, by reason of the failure over the years of successive Liberal governments to develop a true national policy, have been left dependent upon offshore imported oil, and that is where the costs are flying out of sight at the present time. It is in that area, therefore, where so much of our electrical energy is generated from oil, and of necessity from offshore oil, that the cost of electricity is likely to soar. It is all the more reason, then, that the energy tax credit, to subsidize electrical power generation proposed in the Crosbie budget, be given at this time.

My question is: With the likely higher Liberal prices, will it be your intention to give that subsidy or a larger one?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, may I say that the honourable senator has demonstrated a far greater faith in the potential of the unrealized Crosbie budget than the Canadian people had. The people of this nation were not convinced that there were any similarities between the Crosbie budget and the Conservative campaign promises prior to May of 1979.

Secondly, let it be said that there were substantial increases in Liberal support in the Atlantic provinces during that campaign which indicates that the people of the Atlantic provinces have great faith in the ability of this government to provide for their energy needs at equitable and fair prices. And it remains a concern of this government.

Senator Flynn: It is the concern of everybody in Canada.

Senator Perrault: You know, the speculative nature of this question, the suggestion that the government apparently intends to charge higher prices for energy than would have been the case had the Crosbie budget been implemented, is simply the dragging of—

Senator Smith (Colchester): It is justified speculation.

Senator Perrault: —is the dragging of highly odoriferous red herrings across the political trail.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Perhaps some day you will answer a question.

FINANCE

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS—INTEREST RATE AND REDEMPTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. I would not dare get involved in the energy field. It seems to be a rather sensitive subject and the honourable gentleman opposite seems to be getting quite exercised.

I should like to refer to a question I asked a little while ago with reference to Canada Savings Bonds. The minister took the question as notice at that time, and kindly supplied an answer for which I thank him. As I studied the answer, various points were raised in my mind with reference to the redemption rate and the interest rate of the Canada Savings Bonds.

I wonder if the minister could tell us what is the present status of the plans of the government in this particular instance. Does the government have any plan to staunch the outward flow of cash. Is there a substantial cash drain on the treasury? There appears to be from the amounts that have been cashed. Is it affecting the cash position of government? Is there a serious problem with the cash flow?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I will take that question as notice and ask the Minister of Finance for those details, although I am sure the honourable senator knows that there are statistics published on a regular basis in which all of that information is given, with perhaps the exception of any changes in the amount of Canada Savings Bonds redemptions. I can also get that figure for him, however.

Senator Doody: Thank you, senator. I have a supplementary question along the same lines. Perhaps the minister can obtain this information for the chamber at the same time. Before I put my question perhaps the minister honourable senator will allow me just to quote from his answer contained in Hansard of April 22, 1980. On that date the Honourable Senator Olson told me:

> While the present level of Canada Savings Bonds redemption is considerably higher than normal, any decision with respect to a change in the yield on these bonds would have to be taken in consideration of the best interests of the taxpayers as well as the holders of Canada Savings Bonds. In view of the very high level of interest rates presently prevailing, a yield adjustment on Canada Savings Bonds would be very costly to the government and might well exceed the cost of substituting other forms of government debt to offset the loss of funds now occurring as a result of Canada Savings Bonds encashments.

Does the government then intend these measures to encourage the Canadian people to invest in financial instruments other than Canada Savings Bonds? Perhaps in view of the inflation rate it intends to discourage the purchasing of bonds and such instruments generally, particularly Canada Savings Bonds.

Senator Olson: Well, honourable senators, the government has stated a number of times that it hopes the current rather high interest rates will be a short-lived aspect of the financial markets. Indeed, there is now some indication that they are starting to come down—not by much, but a little. Of course, the other influencing factor is what is happening in the United States. We have maintained a position substantially better than that in the United States, but even taking that into account our rates have moved down at about the same time as the decline that has taken place in the United States.

I hope that if the Minister of Finance has some positive statement to make on any major change in the debt management of Canada he will make it, but I will have to wait until he makes such a statement. I was going to say a moment ago that perhaps it would be useful if, before any major changes were made, this whole matter were to settle down a bit, and it seems to me that is what is happening.

Senator Doody: I have another supplementary question. I thank the minister for his statement but he did not really apply himself to the intent of my question. Perhaps I did not phrase my question properly.

I am afraid that the measures mentioned by the minister as government policy, or at least as part of the formulation of government policy, might tend to discourage Canadians from buying Canada Savings Bonds, or, indeed, might discourage them from saving at all, in view of the inflation rate and so on.

But leaving the Canadian inflation rate out of it, and simply referring to the lack of competitiveness of Canada Savings Bonds, is it the intent of the Government of Canada to try to discourage people from investing in Canada Savings Bonds?

Senator Olson: No, it is not. I hope I am saying what the Minister of Finance might say, but indeed the figures show that the savings rates in Canada are either at or near an all-time high.

ENERGY

ALASKA HIGHWAY GAS PIPELINE

Hon. Ernest C. Manning: Honourable senators, may I ask the Secretary of State for Economic Development if he can make a brief statement on the present status of the Alaska Gas Pipeline project. He is no doubt aware of recent press reports that further interventions could conceivably lead to still further delays in final approvals. I wonder if he could update us on just where the matter stands?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I will try to give a brief statement in response to that question now and perhaps in a day or two, or by the middle of next week, I can give a more complete answer.

The status at the moment is that we have an expression of renewed determination by Secretary Duncan of the United States Government that they wish to get on with this project. That happened a few days ago. There have been some modifications made to Schedule III of the act authorizing the pipeline by the National Energy Board, which would allow Foothills to proceed with the pre-build section, providing they satisfy the National Energy Board that they have a firm financing plan for the pre-build section as well as a plan, though not necessarily complete and firm, for all of the rest of it in Canada. Those hearings are under way now.

While the National Energy Board has recommended, indeed approved, the change in clause 12 of Schedule III, this has not been approved as yet by an order in council.

There is at least one other condition which needs to be met, and that is that, in compliance with the agreement between Canada and the United States, we need an affirmation or letter from the United States Government stating that they are satisfied that the United States section can be financed. And we need to give to the United States a letter or an affirmation that in the opinion of the Government of Canada the Canadian section can be financed.

I hope that all of these things will come into place so that we can deal with them shortly, and particularly so that the construction year 1980 can be used for building at least the western leg of the pre-build section. I hope that can be done in time so that Foothills can put in the looping, and it is a limited mileage of looping, to carry the volumes destined for that section.

I should also advise those honourable senators who are not already aware of the fact that Foothills announced yesterday that it is prepared to award contracts for 1,120,000 metric tons of pipe for the entire section. It still requires ministerial approval. Yesterday's press release indicated that 505,000 metric tons would be purchased from Ipsco—that is in Regina—and 615,000 metric tons from Stelco.

I hope to have later today, or tomorrow, a more detailed explanation of the economic benefits that will flow from that order all across the country. Indeed, it is understood, of course, that the firm order to begin fabrication and delivery is contingent upon their getting a construction permit. That is the up-to-date information that I have. However, if any further detail is required, I shall be happy to provide the information by about the middle of next week.

[Senator Manning.]

AIRLINES

APPLICATION OF EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS TO EXTEND SERVICE

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask either the Leader of the Government or the deputy leader a supplementary question arising out of the reply given last night by the deputy leader to a question concerning Eastern Provincial Airways, as to whether or not that organization had launched an appeal with the Government of Canada from the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission.

In his reply, the Deputy Leader of the Government mentioned April 25, which is now some days ago. I am not clear from his reply—it was no doubt based on the way I phrased my original question on April 23—whether the reply was supposed to deal with the government as a whole—that is, that no department, or the Minister of Transport had received such an appeal—or with the Prime Minister's Office. I notice that it acknowledged that a telex or a letter had been received from the four Atlantic premiers. Perhaps I could be enlightened on that subject.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, an inquiry went forward from my office this morning with respect to this matter. The information available at that time was that no formal appeal to cabinet had yet been received. So far as the other departments are concerned, I do not have that information. It is anticipated, however, that some formal appeal will be made to cabinet.

Senator Smith (Colchester): May I ask another question? The inquiries I have made about the usual channels lead me to believe that the Department of Transport or the Minister of Transport would normally have been the recipient of such an appeal. I am wondering whether the inquiry that has now gone forward included that department.

Senator Perrault: As I said earlier, I understand that no formal appeal has yet been directed to cabinet. There is a procedure for this, as the honourable senator is aware. The other avenues will be checked and the information sought. Perhaps a reply can be given tomorrow. I say that cognizant of the fact that some information on a number of subjects has not been available as soon as we would have wished. However, I think that information can be obtained fairly easily.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): In reply to part of the question that was raised again today by Senator Smith (Colchester), I thought that when we were talking about "formal" appeals, we were talking about appeals under the statute from a decision of the Commission, which I believe go to the Governor in Council.

ENERGY

COST OF OIL IMPORTED FROM MEXICO

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development, and I will understand if the honourable gentleman takes it as notice. Can the minister advise this chamber of the estimated foreign exchange cost to the people of Canada of the Mexican oil purchase contract over the next five years?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): If and when an agreement is concluded, price may be involved, certainly perhaps in the initial stages. However, I shall have to take that question as notice. I cannot anticipate an early definitive reply until such a deal or agreement is concluded.

Senator Balfour: Is the minister stating that no estimates have been made internally within the Government of Canada concerning at least the parameters of the cost to the people of Canada of this contract?

Senator Olson: I am sure that the people who are doing the negotiating, especially in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources will be aware of what our offshore requirements are, and what are anticipated in the future. They perhaps already know the price of the oil that Mexico has been selling to other international customers, but I expect that is about as far as we can go at the moment. If we are going to apply that to a Canadian agreement, there would have to be an assumption that we pay the same price. I am sure that Senator Balfour will recall that he indicated yesterday that the international oil market may have changed, and we might be able to negotiate a deal at substantially lower prices than some of the prices which it has been indicated Mexico is receiving now.

PETRO-CANADA—SUBSIDY ON IMPORTED OIL IMPORTED FROM MEXICO

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Is this Mexican oil purchased by Petro-Canada, and does Petro-Canada receive the subsidy when it resells it?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I believe the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has stated that he will be asking Petro-Canada to be involved in the negotiations. So far as the subsidy is concerned, I expect that any oil that is brought in from Mexico, or anywhere else, at a price over and above the uniform price across Canada, would come under the oil price equalization arrangements.

SASKATCHEWAN

SASKATOON—TRANSFER OF DISTRICT POST OFFICE

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I have two questions for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board and, as such, the cabinet representative of the province of Saskatchewan. I have to warn the minister that he will be getting questions that he might think are coming from the opposite side, but I am sure that all honourable senators will understand.

My first question concerns the proposed movement of the district post office in Saskatoon to Winnipeg, which will result in a relocation of 103 positions—a situation which is causing grave concern in Saskatoon. It will mean that Saskatchewan, a province which is on the verge of great growth and development, will be the only province in the country, other than Prince Edward Island, that does not have a district post office. Under the proposal, Saskatchewan's district post office is being moved to Manitoba.

Some Hon. Senators: Shame.

Senator Buckwold: I can assure the minister that many representations have been made by myself and others in an appeal to the minister to reconsider this proposal. The effect on 103 employees, who are presently working in the district post office, is a disastrous one. The dislocation is of real concern. I would hope that the minister might have good words for us in this regard.

Senator Flynn: Words, yes.

Senator Buckwold: Perhaps he might have an answer to the first part of my question.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I thank Senator Buckwold for raising this important question. It is of particular importance to Saskatoon. I might say that I have received representations from the Mayor of Saskatoon, from the unions involved and from others in Saskatoon. The information I have been given is that the move was started before the last election.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Argue: It was either started before the last election, or it was not. If I find that the move was not started before the last election, I shall be prepared to say when it was started.

• (1510)

It may be that the movement of this post office to some other place, and consolidation, might result in greater efficiency. I do not know that, but there was talk at one time that the movement of the weather station out of Regina would lead to greater efficiency. Soon after it was moved, a cyclone hit Regina, and there was no weather warning. Rightly or wrongly, everybody in Saskatchewan assumed that that weather station would have been serving a more useful purpose, and probably would have provided more accurate forecasting, if it had stayed in Regina.

Senator Buckwold asked me to reconsider. There is nothing that I need to reconsider, because obviously I am not the minister responsible for the location of post offices, even though they may be moved into or out of Saskatchewan. However, this is an important question. It is important to Saskatoon.

I might inform Senator Buckwold that I have already made representations to the minister, the Honourable André Ouellet. I was doing that this morning from my office. I am certainly happy to make such representations to him and to ask him to reconsider any plans that there may be for having this post office moved out of Saskatchewan.

As the minister from Saskatchewan, I certainly have, with Senator Buckwold, an interest in this particular question, and I am pleased to bring it to the attention of the appropriate minister. I think my hand will be strengthened by the obvious support of the senator from that area, and, I would think, other members of this house.

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, I thank the minister for his somewhat encouraging statement. I was interested in his comment that after the meteorological station was moved away from Regina a cyclone hit the area. I just want to warn the minister that if the district post office is moved out of Saskatoon that cyclone will look like a small windstorm compared to what will blow up in my city. I hope, therefore, that further consideration will be given to the question of moving this important service.

GRAIN

TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES AT PRINCE RUPERT, BRITISH COLUMBIA

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: My second question perhaps involves the minister more directly as the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. It concerns the ship and grain handling facilities that have been proposed for the port of Prince Rupert. Several representations have been made to me by farm organizations, wanting to know just where the government stands on this issue.

We receive different versions of what is happening—

Senator Perrault: From the Tories.

Senator Buckwold: —some from Tories, some from Liberals, Mr. Leader, and I think it is important that we know just what the intention of the government is regarding this important development, particularly as far as western farmers are concerned. I wonder if the minister is now able to give me a definite statement, such as: "Yes, the project as proposed is going forward," together with some kind of time schedule.

Senator Argue: The answer is that the project as proposed is going forward. The objective—and I think it is an accurate objective, and one that will happen—is that all of the contracts and all of the necessary procedures for the start will be in place by May 15. That is not very far away.

The information I have is that negotiations are down to, I would think, probably the last item, which has to do with the costs that will be paid by the consortium towards the cost of leasing the land itself. These are negotiations that are going on, and the information I have is that the parties concerned are coming closer and closer to an agreement. I was asked by the Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin to participate in discussions about this matter soon after I was appointed the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. I saw nothing in any of those discussions that would indicate to me that the present government was not fully determined—and is not fully determined—to have this project go forward, and go forward on schedule.

I want to say that Senator Perrault has taken an active interest in this project.

Senator Flynn: Oh, has he? So the project will fail.

[Senator Argue.]

Senator Argue: I might inform my political friends opposite that the western caucus of the Liberal Party—and it is a big one—is united in support of this project. We think it is something that will be of great service to western Canada, and will support the target set by the Canadian Wheat Board in every way possible—that is, the target of being able to export 30 million tons by 1985. That will be a tremendous gain.

With this kind of facility in place, and with the transportation system of this country updated, transportation difficulties, in the main, as far as export of grain is concerned, will be things of the past in a very short time. The challenge then will be for producers to produce all the grain for which there is a market and for which transportation facilities are available.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, on a point of order; I think the Honourable Senator Argue should be commended for broadening his horizons beyond the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of his answers, I am wondering if the leader could advise the chamber whether we can now direct questions to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board regarding the post office, the environment, and transport.

Senator Flynn: Anything concerning Saskatchewan.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I want to thank my honourable colleague for a most eloquent reply to that question with respect to the grain terminal in Prince Rupert. I say this seriously. Here is an example of western ministers including two of our colleagues, Senator Olson and Senator Argue, with the co-operation of other members, working to promote something which will benefit all Canadians wherever they live. I want to thank them for their superb efforts in helping to bring about this magnificent terminal facility, which, although on the west coast of Canada, will benefit not only the west but the whole of Canada.

I may say to all honourable opposition senators who may wish to attend the opening of this facility, whenever that opening may be, that we will attempt to arrange invitations both to the sod-turning and the opening, in spite of certain expressions of a lack of faith in the possibility of the event taking place.

Furthermore, I point out that Honourable Senator Argue and Honourable Senator Olson and other honourable senators on this side, of course, possess knowledge in many fields. They will endeavour to answer questions in certain other areas where logic and common sense dictate.

Senator Flynn: I hope so.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CUBAN REFUGEES—CANADIAN COMMITMENT

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

On April 17, in response to a question from Senator Bosa concerning the Cuban refugee situation, we had a reply to the effect that we would have an answer "next week". On April 23 a question posed by me was taken as notice. On April 24 there was an assurance that an answer would be given "tomorrow", which I assume meant the next sitting, or yesterday. Yesterday the Deputy Leader of the Government ably gave answers, to a series of questions, though, of course, not to that particular one.

My question now to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is: In view of the recent tragedies of those people that are attempting to escape from Cuba, and who are crossing to the Florida coast, is the government expecting to announce any expansion of its earlier commitment, and, if so, when?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the reply should have been received by now. I cannot understand why it is not available. There have been a number of important events recently, including preparations for the forthcoming visit of the Prime Minister of Japan, Mr. Ohira.

PRICE OF 1980 SILVER DOLLARS

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government. It relates to an answer given yesterday by the Deputy Leader of the Government concerning the high cost of the commemorative 1980 silver dollar. Since the Mint admits that the price of the 1980 silver dollar is high in comparison to the current value of silver, which is hovering around $17 an ounce, and since it is appreciated that the Mint would experience administrative difficulties in lowering the cost of the silver dollar at this time after it has marketed its commodity to approximately 250,000 subscribers throughout the world, would the Leader consult with the marketing division of the Mint to see if it would consider a two-price silver dollar—one price for consumption in the Canadian market and one for customers outside this country? There should be a lower price for Canadians, a price commensurate with the costs and profits of the Mint.

Senator Flynn: A Canadian price.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the proposal that we establish a made-in-Canada price in this area presents certain difficulties, including the difficulty of control and the difficulty of protecting such a system against abuse. However, the question will be taken as notice.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

INTERNATIONAL SPORTS INVOLVING CANADA AND U.S.S.R.—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I wish to reply to a question asked by Senator Donahoe during the Question Period yesterday, concerning the government's position with respect to the Canada Cup hockey series.

The government's position is that stated by the Prime Minister on Monday. In specific terms, our decision has been not to ban the Olympics or sporting events per se, but to ban them because they are being held in Moscow. In other words, we are condemning the Moscow Games. That is the purpose of this government's policy.

As a matter of fact, Russian athletes were in the United States at Lake Placid just a couple of months ago. Therefore, the creators of the policy of the boycott, the Americans themselves, are interpreting the policy the way we are.

However, I am sure honourable senators will be interested to know that an announcement concerning the Canada Cup tournament is expected from Hockey Canada today. I would just like to make it clear that this announcement will be based on the decision by Hockey Canada's directors, taken in light of the government's stated position in this matter, but it is not to be construed as a statement of government policy.

INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE TO AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have an answer to Senator Roblin's question concerning the aerospace industry, which is as follows:

> Honourable senators, I wish to reply to a question posed to me by Senator Roblin regarding possible new money to assist Canadian companies competing for contracts arising from the new fighter aircraft purchase.
> The government is looking at various initiatives that might be undertaken to provide assistance to the aerospace industry to assist it in executing work on the F-18A engine and avionics. However, we are not in a position at this time to announce any specific changes to existing programs.
> We are fully aware of the tremendous opportunities created for further development of high technology in the aerospace industry as a result of the NFA contract. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is presently developing a sectoral strategy for the aerospace industry which will result in recommendations to ministers regarding the total needs of the industry for their consideration in relation to the needs of other sectors.
> The government is also committed to implementing a new industrial policy. My colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, has instructed his officials to review current policies and programs and develop various options on ways and means to improve and expand them. This work is still in the preliminary stage. When complete, recommendations will come forth to ministers so that the level and type of expenditure can be determined, keeping in mind the commitment of this government to policies of expenditure restraint, as indicated in the Speech from the Throne, Mr. MacEachen's address of April 21 and the address by the President of the Treasury Board on April 22.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have the information I undertook to acquire for Senator Flynn as to what, if any, special circumstances apply to the need for our meeting of Friday, May 16. My instructions are that the warrants run out on May 15. The government feels it can manage for a few days, but as we approach May 21 or 22 we will start to run into the problem of having to hold up cheques. Because Monday, May 19, is not only the day before the referendum, but Victoria Day, the feeling is that we should meet on the Friday.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): In other words, in the other place they decided to get through this piece of legislation at the last minute, counting on the fact that the Senate, as usual, will co-operate.

Senator Asselin: As usual.

Senator Flynn: The opposition is in the same position as in the last session.

Senator Frith: I do not know whether it is, in fact, the last minute over there because I am not that familiar with their business. However, Senator Flynn is certainly right when he says we will find ourselves in the position, for good or bad reasons, of having to meet in order to solve the problem I have just described.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): I know Senator Flynn will wish to contact his people in the other place and urge them, in the strongest, most persuasive terms, to expedite this matter so that we may deal with it earlier here.

Senator Flynn: I can certainly do better than your leader in the other place.

Senator Muir: Urge them, but do not blackmail them.

CANADA-FRANCE TRADE AGREEMENT ACT, 1933 SUPPLEMENTARY CANADA-FRANCE TRADE AGREEMENT ACT, 1935

BILL TO REPEAL—THIRD READING

Hon. John Morrow Godfrey moved the third reading of Bill S-5, to repeal the Canada-France Trade Agreement Act, 1933 and the Supplementary Canada-France Trade Agreement Act, 1935.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, April 29, the debate on the motion of Senator Lewis for the second reading of Bill C-2, to amend the Immigration Act, 1976.

[Senator Olson.]

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I must commend Senator Lewis for his concise and lucid presentation of this bill. He urged speedy passage and cited the reason therefor, which was, simply, that the time within which the government could ask for a Governor General's warrant was soon to expire and other means would have to be found. The fact that we deal with this highly important matter under forced draft is a somewhat unfortunate legacy of too-frequent elections. Both parliamentary programs and administrative procedures do suffer under such circumstances.

However, honourable senators, even if we are not responsible for the state of affairs, we must do our best to ameliorate the situation, and I would predict that the senator's call for speedy action will be heeded by this chamber. I note that in the other place, as we traditionally and rather foolishly call the House of Commons, the bill received second reading, discussion in Committee of the Whole, the report stage and third reading all in the space of one sitting. There are reasons, I believe, for like dispatch here, and I hope that this chamber will not find itself in second place in the matter of dispatch of public business. Indeed, the only situation whereunder the upper house should come second to the lower house is in reference to money bills!

We, honourable senators, are proud of our country's record in aid to refugees. That is one of the reasons why I think we can move quickly on this.

I was proud of the magnificent program mounted by the Clark government in reference to the suffering thousands of refugees from Indochina. The fact that both government and citizens were jointly responsible was heartwarming—and as sensible as it was sensitive. It might be said about the Clark government that, while it was brief in tenure, it was not inglorious in its achievements.

While proud of our role, honourable senators, we must realize the enormity of the problem. I only wish it were possible, as I hope it will be on some other occasion, for this chamber to look at this tremendous question that faces the whole world, so that we can give thought to how overwhelming is the challenge and how grievous the suffering.

Earlier this month I had the honour to attend the IPU meeting in Oslo, on which no doubt our colleague, Senator Molgat, who is a very popular and important person in the IPU, will be reporting. At a meeting devoted to the question of refugees I heard the Finnish delegate talk about ten million refugees in the world. Five minutes later the Japanese delegate, an equally intelligent man, and equally concerned, spoke about there being twelve million. At the time I wondered in what kind of world we live when thoughtful, careful people cannot even estimate within two million the displaced, stateless, homeless, suffering people who are found literally all over the world in increasing numbers.

The Canadian role has been commendable, and we have reason to be proud of it, but the burden is lighter for us than it is for some other countries. With anguish, I heard the report of the delegate from Thailand, which is a little country, with such a fragile, vulnerable border. He spoke about the hundreds of thousands of bona fide refugees, and many, many more who were coming in occasionally, and regrettably, to raid food supplies, and other thousands who were coming in as a kind of infiltrating fifth column. I think of Sudan receiving thousands of people. I think of little Somalia, which today has three-quarters of a million refugees. Where are the people from Chad going, with all the bloodshed there?

The Honourable Senator Nurgitz was talking about refugees from Cuba. At the same time that the Soviet Union is criticized for discouraging people from leaving its country, Castro is criticized for encouraging people to leave his country. When there is an appeal to accept Cubans, there is an equally strong and deep concern about the many Haitians who are fleeing from an intolerable situation there. Canada cannot take them all. Canada cannot solve the problem alone, but Canada must do its part.

With all our economic travails in this country—and we have them; we have problems, and our people face inequities and iniquities in the economic field—all we are being asked to do is to vote some money. Indeed, in a sense it is just an advance, as the honourable senator set forth the record. Considering the gravity of the situation, I think the least we can do is to expedite the passage of this measure and bring up to date our increasing and continuing contribution to solving a problem which is so vast and is surely the problem of all decent mankind.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

QUEBEC AND MONTREAL PORT WARDENS ACTS

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Léopold Langlois moved the second reading of Bill S-3, to amend an Act to provide for the appointment of a Port Warden for the Harbour of Quebec and to amend an Act to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to the office of Port Warden for the Harbour of Montreal.

[Translation]

He said: Honourable senators, I assume I shall be allowed a few minutes to take this first opportunity to address the house in the course of this Parliament, to extend my warmest congratulations to our new Speaker, with my best wishes for a successful career in the eminent responsibilities he is assuming with such talent and dignity. I am convinced his past experience is a guarantee of success in his new functions.

[English]

Honourable senators, I will begin my speech by giving the house some preliminary information on the background of Bill S-3, which came to this house during the last session, and was then called Bill S-6.

This bill is indeed short and simple enough, as it purports to amend two very old statutes respecting the authority of the Port Wardens of Quebec City and the City of Montreal. The first of these old statutes is an act to provide for the appointment of a Port Warden for the Harbour of Quebec, assented to on April 14, 1871, the preamble to which reads:

> Whereas the increasing trade of the City and the business of the Harbor of Quebec render the office of Port Warden necessary; Therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows.

Then the act provides for the appointment of a Port Warden by the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Board of Trade of Quebec, and thereafter provides for the appointment of a Board of Examiners to choose suitable candidates for the position of Deputy Port Warden, and the prerequisites to the exercise of the function, such as the oath of office and so on.

The second act to be amended by this bill is an act to amend and consolidate the acts relating to the office of Port Warden for the Harbour of Montreal, assented to on May 17, 1882. Under that act, several acts of the legislature of the late Province of Canada and an act of the Parliament of Canada were amended, "save and except that the Port Warden of the Harbour of Montreal, the Deputy Port Warden of the said harbour, and the Board of Examiners appointed under the said last-mentioned Act, shall continue to hold their respective offices until their successors have been appointed under this Act." It then provided for the prerequisites to the exercise of these functions.

One final comment before dealing with the contents of the bill before us. I should like to refer honourable senators to Part XIII of the Canada Shipping Act, under the title "Port Wardens" where it is provided, in respect of other ports and public harbours of Canada, that port wardens are appointed, not on the recommendation of local boards of trade, such as is the case for Quebec and Montreal, but directly by the Governor in Council. The act itself then provides for the appointment of these port wardens, their duties, and so forth.

> This Part does not apply to the harbour of Quebec or Montreal.

So, we are dealing with special legislation having to do with two major ports of this country.

By way of background, this measure, in the original Bill S-6, received first reading in the other place on November 9, 1979, first reading in the Senate having been given on October 18 of the same year. Second reading by the Senate was on November 6, following which the bill was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications. The first meeting of the committee on this measure took place on November 15, 1979, followed by a second meeting on November 29. During those two meetings of the committee, three modifications were adopted to the text of the amendments to the Quebec Port Warden Act so as to harmonize the text of that act with the text of the amendment dealing with port wardens for the Harbour of Montreal. Those modifications now form part of the bill before the Senate.

Third reading of Bill S-6 by the Senate was scheduled for December 18, 1979. However, on that date, as we all know, Parliament was dissolved. Consequently, Bill S-6 died on the order paper.

Bill S-3 would permit increases over and above those now allowed in respect of charges for the services provided by the port wardens for the ports of Montreal and Quebec. The duties of port wardens are varied, but basically deal with the examination of the condition and stowage of goods carried as ship's cargo. Port wardens are required, among other things, to survey ships on arrival in Canada to ascertain the causes of damage to cargoes, to superintend the loading of grain, concentrates, timber and dangerous goods to established international safety standards, and to arbitrate disputes that may arise among the various parties involved in the loading and/or discharging process.

The amendment of these acts would eliminate the provisions calling for a ceiling on the maximum fees and disbursements chargeable for the services of the port wardens in these two respective ports. The new proposals would allow the councils of the boards of trade in Quebec and Montreal to establish fees and charges, subject to approval by the Governor in Council, in excess of the maxima now legally permitted under the present legislation.

Those maximum rates, with the approval of the Governor in Council, have been exceeded several times during the past 20 years. However, in 1977, when the last application for a similar increase was received from Montreal, the Department of Justice declined to sanction further increases until such time as the act was amended. We now have a situation in which the tariffs in both ports would appear to be ultra vires.

The Montreal Board of Trade advises that the port warden's office is now operating at a loss, and will continue to do so until such time as tariffs can be increased. It should be understood that neither port wishes to operate this service on a profit-making basis. Services are provided for the benefit of Canadian exporters and are an additional incentive to purchasers of Canadian products in that prospective purchasers are assured that all cargoes will be loaded safely under supervision and, as a consequence, should normally arrive at the port of destination in good order.

Similar services are provided at other Canadian ports through port wardens employed by Transport Canada on a cost-recovery basis. The ports of Montreal and Quebec wish only to be permitted to charge similar rates to those of their federal counterparts. The shipping fraternity, together with Canadian exporters, have indicated their willingness to pay reasonable rates for a service that is today internationally accepted as an integral part of the customer service provided by Canada to her trading partners.

Should the ports in question be denied this request, then both cities would be obliged to subsidize a service that is provided in all other Canadian ports, on a cost-recovery basis, by the federal government. This would obviously place both ports at an unfair disadvantage, especially when one considers that the costs in question are largely recovered from foreign shipowners.

Although Quebec and Montreal both operate their port warden services independently, it is an integral part of both acts that all tariff increases have to receive the approval of the Governor in Council. What is envisaged is that the tariffs for both ports largely parallel the rate structure charged by Transport Canada port wardens, as established under the Canada Shipping Act in the fashion that I have previously described.

Of a less important nature, the proposals to change the titles of both corporations are necessitated due to the fact that, first, the 1882 Montreal act inadvertently used the term "Chambre de Commerce" rather than "Bureau de Commerce" the latter being the term used when the Montreal Board of Trade was incorporated in 1842; secondly, the Quebec organization changed its title, through letters patent, in 1971, as a result of which it is now named "la Chambre de commerce et de l'industrie du Québec métropolitain."

In conclusion, I would remind honourable senators of the decades of excellent service that have been provided to Canadian exporters and to the marine industry in general by port wardens throughout Canada. In order that this level of service may be maintained in Quebec and Montreal, and to allow the costing for the services provided to be standardized nation-wide, I call upon all honourable senators to support the proposed amendments outlined in Bill S-3 now before us.

As this bill, in the form of Bill S-6, was thoroughly studied by the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications in the last Parliament, I suggest that it is not necessary that Bill S-3 be referred to that committee. In making this suggestion, I assume that I shall have the support of the chairman of the committee. It seems to me that Bill S-3 could be proceeded with without the necessity of a second referral to committee.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, in the event that I am not here when this question arises again, may I take this opportunity to say that, as Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, I concur entirely in Senator Langlois' view that the bill not be again referred to committee.

On motion of Senator Charbonneau, debate adjourned.

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's Speech at the Opening of the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament, and the motion of Senator Rousseau, seconded by Senator Hays, for an Address in reply thereto.

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, as I rise to take part in this debate, my first words are ones of very warm congratulation to His Honour the Speaker on his having been chosen to preside over the activities of this chamber. I know that he will perform his duties with grace, with dignity, with wisdom and with firmness, and that at those functions outside this chamber at which he will be called upon to represent this house he will always do so in a manner consistent with its ancient and proud traditions.

I should like to offer my very warmest congratulations to His Honour's predecessor, Senator Allister Grosart. He was not granted a long time in which to use, for our benefit, his wit, his wisdom and his ability, but it was long enough to demonstrate to all his great capability, his firm prudence, his breadth of learning and his knowledge of parliamentary rules and procedures.

I should like next to offer my congratulations and good wishes to the two honourable and distinguished senators who have become ministers of the Crown following the events of February 18. I regret that they have not been able to stay to avail themselves of the benefit of the gems of knowledge and wisdom which I meant to impart to them, but perhaps the Deputy Leader of the Government will explain to them their great misfortune in missing it.

It is impossible not to notice that these two honourable ministers did not come to their high estate in the usual way—that is, by the electoral victory of the party to which they belong in that part of the country from which they come. Indeed, they arrived at their present state by just the opposite route. But by whatever means they arrived, they have my very good wishes as they discharge the heavy responsibilities which have come to them.

I am sure that with all other honourable senators I share a sense of satisfaction in knowing that we have among us a total of three ministers of the Crown and two others of our colleagues who occupied similar posts in the last Parliament. It may be that as time goes on these three honourable ministers will come to feel that we do not over-emphasize approval of the way in which they and their colleagues discharge the duties of government. However, be that as it may, I wish them well, although I do not suppose that they will find it easy to equal the high standards set by their predecessors as ministers in this chamber during the last Parliament.

I offer my congratulations and good wishes to the Honourable the Leader of the Government in the Senate. He too will have a hard time to equal the wit, wisdom and ability with which his immediate predecessor discharged the duties of Leader of the Government. I congratulate also the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate and look forward, in due course, to exchanging words of mutual wisdom with him from time to time.

To the Honourable Leader of Her Majesty's Opposition in the Senate I must say that I wish that the circumstances of life had continued to allow him to carry out those functions which he performed so ably in the last Parliament as Leader of the Government in the Senate and as Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada. However, that was not to be, and so now I welcome him once again as a Leader of the Opposition whom I am proud and pleased to follow. The Deputy Leader of the Opposition, is, of course, one of the ablest and best-known public figures in our country. Though I would much rather have seen him continue in the role of Deputy Leader of the Government, I feel a sense of satisfaction as one of his colleagues as he carries out the duties of his new office.

Honourable senators, I join with those who have preceded me in this debate in offering congratulations to the mover and seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. The gracious speech so eloquently delivered by His Excellency, but not written by authors of equal talent, is not much of a speech; but the mover and seconder wisely did not allow it to hinder them by paying much attention to it. Consequently, they were able to make excellent speeches which we were all glad to hear.

As might be expected in these times, the gracious speech made a number of references to the question of energy and the various aspects thereof. One such reference was to the much discussed gas pipeline to Quebec and the Maritime provinces, often called the Q & M Pipeline. In Nova Scotia we hope to see that pipeline bringing in gas from Alberta for use in Nova Scotia and the other maritime provinces before many years have passed. We hope that it will also be capable of carrying gas from Nova Scotia westward, as that becomes feasible, as we are all confident it will.

As is consistent with the role of a member of this chamber, although first I am a Canadian, one of my duties here is to speak for the ancient province which I represent and the beautiful region in which it is set. I had hoped that this government might show a more sensitive regard for the Atlantic region than did its predecessor which was relieved of duty last May. Alas, honourable senators, the gracious speech does not show much evidence of such improvement. Indeed, it does not wait long to dampen any such hopes. Its first reference to the Atlantic region occurs in the third page of the seventeen pages for which it rambles on. Far from raising hopes for better things, this reference is couched in words of insulting disdain which I never thought even this government would sink so low and grow so small as to ask His Excellency to read about any part of Canada. Instead of rejoicing that this historic region seems likely, at long last, to share in some of the good fortune and excellent resources so long enjoyed by other Canadians, listen to the way the authors of this document give the backs of their hands to the Atlantic region and our new-found potential opportunities.

> In the Atlantic, disadvantaged for so long, the promise of new resource riches has already led to squabbles about their future distribution.

I put the use of these disdainful words to the Minister of State for Economic Development the other day, and I was sorry to see that he did not seem to think that there was anything wrong with the use of them. Let us look at them for a moment, distasteful as they are.

• (1600)

The word "squabble" is not a gracious or a complimentary word. It conjures up visions of petty people engaged in petty quarrels about petty things in a loud and petty way. Let me give you the definition of the word "squabble" in Funk & Wagnalls Standard Dictionary of the English Language. Here it is: "squabble—to carry on a petty or unseemly wrangle".

The word "wrangle" is defined in the same dictionary as "an angry or noisy dispute or quarrel."

For those who prefer the Oxford Dictionary, I quote from the Concise Oxford Dictionary, Fifth Edition, 1964: "squabble—engage in petty or noisy quarrel."

Honourable senators, although I am not able to give this government credit for any overabundance of wisdom, I think even its most vigorous critics would have to agree that it does know the dictionary meanings of ordinary, everyday words. Accordingly, I cannot help but believe that their use of the word "squabble" was intentional; that they knew what it means and they meant what it means! Accordingly, the sentence we have just read in fact means: "In the Atlantic, disadvantaged for so long, the promise of new resource riches has already led to petty or unseemly wrangles, or angry or noisy disputes or quarrels, or a petty or noisy quarrel."

Honourable senators, is that a reasonable way in which to approach one of the great, historic regions of this country? Is that a reasonable way in which to promote Canadian unity? How can it be a petty, noisy wrangle to insist on claiming one's actual rights? Would it be a petty, noisy wrangle, for instance, for Alberta to say, "We in the province of Alberta own the oil and gas found within our geographic boundaries"; or for Saskatchewan to say, "We claim our oil and our potash"; or for British Columbia to claim, "We own our forests."? Would that be a petty wrangle?

Well, honourable senators, I agree it might turn out to be noisy, if it was noisily disputed by the federal government, but it would certainly not be a petty wrangle on the part of any of those provinces that I have mentioned.

How, then, honourable senators, can it be said to be a petty, noisy wrangle by the Atlantic provinces to claim that they own the rich resources which are potentially creating an opportunity for them to enjoy something that some parts of Canada have enjoyed for many years?

Is the ownership of the oil found in the Hibernia well off the shores of Newfoundland a petty matter? Is Newfoundland engaging in a petty, noisy, wrangle when it claims the ownership of these riches? What about the ownership of any gas or oil which may be found off the shores of Nova Scotia—particularly as now seems to be a proven fact in Sable Island and in the waters adjacent to it? Is it a petty wrangle for Nova Scotia to say, "Those are our resources. We want to control them." No, honourable senators. No, indeed! I answer as loudly and as vigorously as I can, and I am most grievously disappointed—and I am not alone—that the federal government should look upon these vitally important things in such a disdainful light. Again I ask: Is this the way to preserve national unity? Is such a way to be found in the disdainful attitude of the Government of Canada?

Honourable senators, this brings me to a question which I discussed last October in this chamber for a while and which I wish to mention rather briefly today, and that is jurisdiction over offshore oil and gas. This is a complicated subject which would take considerable time to consider properly, and so it is my intention soon to give notice of an inquiry about various aspects of this important matter which will provide an opportunity for full debate about it. It is of particular significance to the Atlantic region, but it is of great concern to all Canadians. It is well known that Nova Scotia and Newfoundland claim jurisdiction over all minerals in the continental shelf. Nova Scotia also claims Sable Island. Perhaps it is not so well known that a bill is now before the Nova Scotia legislature which, among other things, claims jurisdiction over the continental shelf.

There are many people who claim, or think, that the Supreme Court of Canada decision in the British Columbia Reference case in 1967 decided against such provincial claims. But that is not so. The court itself said it was not deciding anything but the British Columbia claim and that different historical facts in other cases might lead to different decisions in other cases. There are such different historical facts in the Atlantic provinces.

It is my intention, with your consent, honourable senators, in discussing the inquiry of which I have said I intend to give notice, to draw attention to these significantly different facts—facts which I think strongly support the Atlantic claims, with particular reference to Nova Scotia.

Honourable senators, I have briefly submitted now that the Atlantic provinces, and particularly Nova Scotia, have the right to exploit the mineral resources of all kinds contained in the continental shelf, and that Nova Scotia claims and owns Sable Island. It seems to me that this legal claim is well founded and ought to be accepted by the Government of Canada without further dispute on purely legal grounds. There is, however, I submit, honourable senators, just as strong a claim to such ownership by those provinces in a political sense and as a case of doing simple justice.

Such claim arises from the fact that the areas contained within the boundaries of the provinces of Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba were greatly enlarged in 1912. That enlargement was accomplished by extending the boundaries of those provinces to include very large portions of the northern lands which belonged to Canada as a whole, but without any arrangement to compensate the maritime provinces for the loss of their share in the ownership of those lands.

The area of Quebec was increased from 351,873 square miles to 594,860 square miles. About 240,000 square miles were added to that province—an area, incidentally, about ten times that of Nova Scotia. The area of Ontario was increased from 260,862 square miles to 412,582 square miles, an increase of about 150,000 square miles, while the area of Manitoba was increased from 73,732 square miles to 251,000 square miles.

It does not require a very careful search to ascertain that a high proportion of the total wealth of those provinces in natural resources arises from the lands thus conveyed to them to enlarge their boundaries. No such opportunity existed then, or exists now, to enlarge the dry land boundaries of the maritime provinces. Consequently, up to this time, so far as dry land boundaries are concerned, they have been compelled to exist within the boundaries established before Confederation, which I assert on legal grounds reach to the continental shelf. For those who do not agree, I would say, here is the opportunity to extend the boundaries of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island in a way to equal the extension granted those provinces I have mentioned.

They have had no such opportunity to enrich their reservoir of natural resources by extensions of the kind granted to Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba—although as original members of Confederation, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were at least part owners of the lands used to enlarge the other three provinces; and their consent was never asked or given.

No constitutional amendment was required to effect this enlargement of the boundaries of the three provinces I have mentioned. It was done pursuant to section 3 of the British North America Act of 1871, which reads:

> The Parliament of Canada may from time to time with the consent of the Legislature of any Province of the said Dominion, increase, diminish, or otherwise alter the limits of such Province, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said Legislature, and may, with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase or diminution or alteration of territory in relation to any Province affected thereby.

As I have said several times, we in Nova Scotia believe we already own the continental shelf off our shores and all that therein is. We claim it because, as stated in the Truman proclamation of 1945 dealing with the matter of the continental shelf, the continental shelf may be regarded as an extension of the land under the territorial sea and thus naturally appurtenant to that land under the territorial sea.

But for those who claim that the shelf belongs to Canada and not to the province, what a golden opportunity to render justice to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island! Let Canada renounce by statute any claim to the shelf in favour of those provinces, just as Canada, by simple statute, gave nearly 600,000 square miles to the provinces of Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba—600,000 square miles of rich territory in which at least Nova Scotia and New Brunswick owned a share, a share of which they were deprived without their consent or consultation.

Let the Parliament of Canada, consistent with the authority of the B.N.A. Act of 1871, a portion of which I have just read, increase the limits of each of the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, with the consent of the legislatures of those provinces, to make it clear that their boundaries do include such of the continental shelf as lies off their shores.

Honourable senators, let me assure you that the people of the Atlantic region are good and loyal Canadians, devoted to a united Canada, with a central government strong enough to govern our great country in the interests of all its people, wherever they may live. We do not seek control of territorial resources that we claim as ours in order to deprive other Canadians of the benefits which flow from ownership of those resources, but rather to ensure that those resources are used and developed with reasonable regard for our best interests as well as the best interests of Canada.

Honourable senators, Nova Scotia did not join as an original partner in creating Canada for economic reasons. Nova Scotia joined in that great enterprise because of the belief that here, in the northern half of North America, we could help build a great nation, independent of the United States and independent of any European or other power; a great nation where people could live in freedom, cherishing and nourishing the growth of liberty consistent with the rights of individuals and the public good. Canadians have accomplished much of this grand goal. Let us not let those accomplishments slip away.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Lang, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

DESECRATION OF CANADIAN WAR GRAVES IN FRANCE—COMMUNICATION FROM CANADIAN EMBASSY IN PARIS

From: Paris, France
April 11, 1980
To: DVA, Ottawa
Re: Desecration of Canadian Cemetery

Following is the text of a letter received yesterday from the Secretary of State to Veterans, Maurice Plantier.

> I have learned with deep indignation and a sincere affliction of the desecration of 22 Canadian graves at Cintheaux Cemetery, under the odious pretence that they cover the remains of soldiers of the Israelite faith.
> The Government of France and France itself do not forget the sacrifices made by the soldiers from the other side of the Atlantic, in order to bring back to Europe a liberty chased away by Nazism.
> In the name of all French veterans, please accept, Your Excellency, the deep regrets of our fellow citizens.

The particularly warm tone of this letter together with the rapid reaction of the Secretary of State indicate the wish of the French authorities to underline the disgust shown in France towards desecration of Canadian graves.

STATEMENT PREPARED FOR THE MINISTER OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

As you may know, the Minister of Veterans Affairs is the Canadian agent of the Commonwealth War Graves Commission. In this capacity I wish to provide you with an interim report received through the Commission's Canadian agency.

On the weekend of April 5-6, 1980, of 2,872 headstones marking the burial places of Canadian war dead at Bretteville-sur-Laize Canadian War Cemetery near Caen, France, 23 were damaged. The act is seen as deliberate and motivated by anti-Jewish sentiment. All damaged headstones were engraved with the Star of David religious symbol.

Works teams of the Commonwealth War Graves Commission on April 7-8, 1980, commenced clean-up and installation of temporary markers. Since damage was found to be severe, new headstones will require to be ordered from Italy, engraved in the France area workshop and emplaced as soon as possible. This is in progress. Commission records and site plans preclude the possibility of error in the process.

The senior official of the Commune of Cintheaux, Province of Calvados, France, in whose area the cemetery lies has apologized to the Commission. This constitutes an apology to the people of Canada. I should add that the Commission holds title to the land where the cemetery is located on behalf of the participating Commonwealth governments. This land is a gift in perpetuity from the people of France.

This despicable act, together with other non-described but less severe and equally mindless activity, perpetrated at the same time, is under investigation by French authorities.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 1, 1980

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled:

Report of the Canadian Turkey Marketing Agency, together with financial statements and the auditors' report thereon, for the year ended December 31, 1979, pursuant to section 31 of the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, Chapter 65, Statutes of Canada, 1970-71-72.

Report respecting operations of the Medical Care Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1978, pursuant to section 9 of the said Act, Chapter M-8, R.S.C., 1970.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE EXPENSES TABLED

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, tabled, pursuant to rule 84, a report of expenses incurred by the committee in the First Session of the Thirty-first Parliament.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MAKE STUDY

Hon. George C. van Roggen, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs be authorized to continue its examination of and report upon Canadian relations with the United States;

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject in the Twenty-ninth, Thirtieth and Thirty-first Parliaments be referred to the committee;

That the committee be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be required for the purpose of the said examination and for the purpose of its examination and consideration of such legislation and other matters as may be referred to it, at such rates of remuneration and reimbursement as the committee may determine, and to compensate witnesses by reimbursement of travelling and living expenses, if required, in such amount as the committee may determine; and

That the committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Lamontagne be added to the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL FINANCE

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. William J. Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Lewis be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Davey on the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance have power to sit while the Senate is sitting on Wednesday next, May 7, 1980, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Honourable senators, before the motion is put and by way of explanation, I must say that I moved this motion because the committee will consider the supplementary estimates and we hope it will be possible to submit a report to the Senate before the bill based on these estimates is received from the House of Commons.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

DOMESTIC OIL PRICE—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. The Prime Minister is reported to have said yesterday that the domestic price for gasoline will increase this year by 12.5 cents a gallon, such amount to be derived from the per-barrel increase to be negotiated with the producing provinces. Would the Minister of State for Economic Development explain how the federal government can achieve revenues comparable to those which the previous government had anticipated by allowing the price to increase by only 12.5 cents per gallon?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I do not believe the federal government intends or has ever said that it intends to achieve a revenue as high as, for example, the excise tax would have involved.

Senator Balfour: I have a supplementary question for the honourable gentleman. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is reported to have said on April 16 that the government expects to receive as much from the anticipated agreement with the producing provinces as the previous government would have received. Since the previous government foresaw a 16-cent per gallon increase exclusive of the excise tax, would the minister try again to tell us how his government expects to receive as much revenue from a smaller price increase?

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Olson: The honourable senator is asking, of course, for the details and the results of a whole series of negotiations that have not yet begun. We will go to those negotiations hoping that all parties involved will be reasonable. Certainly he would not expect me to tell him the results of those negotiations before they have concluded.

Senator Flynn: Before they have started.

Senator Balfour: I have a further supplementary for the honourable gentleman. The Minister of Finance has said that he expects the net outlay for the oil import compensation program to decrease by $1 billion upon conclusion of a pricing agreement. How does the Minister of State for Economic Development reconcile that expectation with Mr. Lalonde's expectations and with the promise of the Prime Minister that the oil import compensation formula would not be tampered with, and with the Prime Minister's statement yesterday that prices will increase by only 12.5 cents per gallon?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, to put it more accurately, I think the Minister of Finance said that he hoped the cost involved at some point in the future, after the negotiations are completed, would reduce that expenditure by as much as $1 billion or about $1 billion. He has a right to express that hope. Here again it will certainly depend on the details of the agreement when it comes to be. It is perfectly obvious to everyone who has looked into this matter that narrowing the gap between the domestic price and the import price lowers the federal expenditure in that respect.

Senator Balfour: Honourable senators, what has become obvious is that two and two do not make five.

Senator Olson: I do not think the problem was with my arithmetic though.

Senator Flynn: It was with your campaign.

OIL IMPORTED FROM MEXICO—COST OF CONVERSION

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: I should like to ask a question of the Minister of State for Economic Development. I wish to refer again to the government's or PetroCan's negotiations, if they have begun, with Mexico for the purchase of oil. Since this oil is among the world's most expensive and cannot be used in most Canadian refineries without expensive conversion, would the minister tell us who will bear the cost of these conversions?

● (1420)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I could not comment at this stage without some notice in order to examine the technical implications of what the honourable senator has referred to as differences in quality. I suppose that depends on which field you get the oil from in Mexico. There is a variation in that. Some of it is compatible with the installed refining capacity that we have; there are probably some other grades of oil where the hydrocarbon ratio is different, where there would be some additional costs. That would probably come out in the negotiations. I would also expect it is fair to assume that if there is a difference in quality it would be priced differently.

Senator Charbonneau: Is the minister telling me that these additional costs have not been taken into consideration as possible subsidies for imported oil? In other words, if I may rephrase it: are we going into negotiations without having looked to the possible additional costs of conversion, which of course could have a big impact on our subsidies?

Senator Olson: I don't mind honourable senators opposite trying to get from me, if they can, a conclusion to negotiations between Petro-Canada and Mexico and between the federal government and the provinces. I would hope honourable senators would not expect me to give the results, or even all of the details of the terms and conditions that are being negotiated, including price, while the negotiations are going on.

Senator Asselin: Why not?

Senator Olson: I could try to get some of that information, but I would expect that these and a whole lot of other details are on the table to be negotiated, and we cannot give the results until the negotiations are finished.

Senator Charbonneau: The only point I am getting at is that surely our negotiators have an idea of the costs of conversion because of the different type of oil from Mexico, and before going into any negotiations I presume that these costs have been looked into.

Senator Olson: I presume they are being looked into too.

Senator Flynn: You only presume? You should know.

Senator Olson: To satisfy the honourable senator, I will give an undertaking to convey his concern so that the negotiators know for sure that there might be a difference in the conversion costs, that they should take that into account so that there will be no question of their slipping on negotiating that as well.

Senator Charbonneau: If I understand the minister aright, he is telling me that absolutely no cost differentials have been studied—

Senator Olson: No, I am not.

Senator Charbonneau: —and we are going out to negotiate without having any idea of what our conversion costs are going to be.

Senator Olson: No, not at all. The honourable senator's question was phrased in such a way that he assumes the negotiators are unaware of that. I do not accept that. I believe they are aware of it. I have given him an undertaking that I will send a message to them that the honourable senator has raised it here, and that they must take it into account because he thinks it is important.

EXPORTATION OF NATURAL GAS

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. Now that the National Energy Board has approved the pre-build portion of the Alaska Highway gas pipeline and recommended that extra gas exporting rights be granted to Pan-Alberta Gas Limited, I trust the government is soon to be faced with approving those exports.

● (1425)

Given that the Minister of Energy today was vocal in his opposition to gas exports announced last December by the former government, and accusing the former government, I believe, of selling our birthright, is it the government's intention to refuse those exports?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I think it is wrong for the honourable senator to say that the National Energy Board has approved the pre-build portion. I hope that he is not dragging me into making any comments on hearings that are now going on before the National Energy Board.

Senator Flynn: And we would have to drag you, in fact.

Senator Olson: The fact is that it has approved certain volumes if the pre-build portion goes ahead. That is known. There are some amendments to clause 12 of Schedule III of the act that have to be made. They have approved them, too. At this moment there are hearings taking place respecting the financing. There will not be any approval until it considers that and approves the financing. So I do not think the preamble to the question was accurate. However, to deal with the question respecting the government's position relating to exports of gas, the National Energy Board now has found, as a result of conducting other hearings, that there is some additional gas supply surplus to Canada's requirements. That is what is involved in the export through the pre-build.

COST TO CANADIAN GOVERNMENT OF FUEL PURCHASED IN CANADA BY FOREIGN AIRLINES AND MOTORISTS

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I should like to pose a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development. Is the minister aware of figures which indicate that foreign airlines will save $300 million this year by purchasing jet fuel in Canada?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have heard some figures mentioned and I have been given an unconfirmed indication that commercial jetliners are taking on larger fuel supplies in Canada than they have traditionally done. This is of concern to the government and we are looking into it.

Senator Muir: I am glad to hear that you are concerned about it and that you are looking into it. My supplementary question is whether it is the government's intention to continue the policy of hiding the true price of fuel from Canadians, thereby making it possible for foreign airlines to benefit to the tune of $300 million this year?

Senator Olson: There is no truth at all to the statement that the government is attempting to hide the true price of fuel from Canadians.

Senator Flynn: Only during election campaigns.

Senator Muir: I am trying to elicit information. With the high-priced staff surrounding the minister, he should have all the facts at hand. It is not my job to do the research for him.

Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. The Minister of State for Economic Development mentioned reports in his last answer, so I will refer to reports. Reports last week indicated that American motorists may receive what amounts to a subsidy of $100 million this year on gasoline purchases in Canada. In light of the apparent resolve by this government not to have Canadian fuel prices reflect the true costs of that fuel, is action anticipated which would set a different price for foreign consumers of jet fuel and gasoline so that Canadian taxpayers will not have to subsidize these consumers to the extent of approximately $400 million a year? Why should Canadian taxpayers have to subsidize foreign consumers of jet fuel and gasoline?

Senator Olson: There is a great deal involved in that question. For example, if you put in a control mechanism that is not going to allow tourists to buy gasoline when in Canada, there would be some objection to that kind of regime from a large number of people in Canada who rely heavily on the tourist industry. That is one thing. We have heard reports that some Americans are coming across the border, filling up their gasoline tanks, and then going home. That, perhaps, is a significant amount in total, but there are some administrative problems involved in controlling or stopping the practice. I think the honourable senator should give us at least a little time to look into these matters and try to establish some kind of reasonable administration. We do not wish to close our border with the United States in this respect. Also, I think we need a little more time—

• (1430)

Senator Flynn: How long?

Senator Olson: —with respect to the problem of foreign commercial airliners taking on larger than normal supplies of fuel in Canada. We are concerned about the fact that in some cases these airlines are buying this fuel at a subsidized price. We are as concerned about that as my honourable friend.

Senator Flynn: Yes, now that you have won the election.

Senator Muir: I thank the honourable minister for his reply. However, I am sure he is misconstruing—whether intentionally or not, I do not know—my question. I served with him in the other place, and he knows of my interest in tourism in this country, an industry that brings in many dollars.

Senator Olson: And you would not want to interfere with that.

Senator Muir: Far be it from me to ever suggest that anything should interfere with genuine tourism. However, I would like to know, as my leader wants to know, how long it is going to take the government to decide on a course of action to prevent these giant multinational companies, billionaire companies, from flying into Montreal and loading up with thousands and thousands of gallons of jet fuel at a price subsidized by the Canadian taxpayer, and then flitting off somewhere else. The Canadian people are paying for this subsidy to the extent of $400 million. That is one estimate. I am sure the minister has the figures at hand.

Senator Steuart: You had nine months in which to do something. What did you do about it?

Senator Flynn: We presented a budget which you defeated. Come on, wake up, Senator Steuart!

Senator Frith: The Canadian people defeated the budget.

Senator Charbonneau: We tried to do something about it, but you would not let us.

Senator Muir: Go ahead, Mr. Minister. Don't let those at the back interfere.

Senator Olson: I think the background comments were appropriate.

Senator Flynn: Of course, you would.

Senator Olson: As far as the cost of the subsidy being $400 million, that is a figure that must come from the "Muir Bureau of Statistics." It is not our figure. As a matter of fact, one of the difficulties is to ascertain the extent of the amount. I am sure Senator Muir, if he really thinks this thing through, would agree that we should not move into severe controls in this respect without carefully looking at all of the ramifications of such controls. As far as we are concerned, we believe in there being as much free trade as possible.

Senator Muir: But you want to hit the Canadian taxpayer as hard as you can.

ASSISTANCE FOR FARMERS

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. In view of the fact that Canadian farmers have to borrow approximately $7 billion this year for seed, fertilizer, pesticides, and so forth, the Minister of Agriculture stated last week that the government would be announcing, early this week, a program to assist farmers in these purchases.

Is Thursday "early" enough in the week for the minister to give the chamber some information on that program?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I shall seek to obtain any statement which the Minister of Agriculture makes in respect of that program and convey it to this chamber as rapidly as possible. I am unaware of any such statement having been made to this minute.

Senator Phillips: A supplementary, honourable senators. Approximately 25,000 Canadian farmers will have difficulty in obtaining loans this spring. Could the minister assure us that they will receive the same urgent consideration as Chrysler Canada is receiving?

Senator Olson: That will probably be part of the statement of the Minister of Agriculture that the honourable senator has said is coming, and I will look at it with great interest.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I have a factual question which, if our rules permitted, I would address to Senator Lamontagne, who could give me a factual answer. However, because of our rules, I address it to Minister "Who?"

• (1435)

The question relates, of course, to a statement published in the Toronto Globe and Mail this morning attributed to the Minister of Science and Technology. I do not have it on my desk in this case, and must rely on a newspaper report—although I am surprised that that is so—which states:

> Science Minister John Roberts says he plans to raise federal science spending by $190 million for 1980-81 in an effort to train more researchers and increase technological innovation in industry.

My question to whomever may be capable of answering it is: How can this be related to the following statement in the Speech from the Throne:

> My government reaffirms its commitment to increase Canada's overall expenditures on research and development to 1.5% of the value of the Gross National Product.

How does this very small amount of $190 million relate to that reaffirmation of a commitment?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall be pleased to pass that question on to the relevant minister.

Senator Grosart: I have a supplementary question which I would ask the deputy leader to also pass on. Does this represent a change of policy or a decision by the government not to implement that reaffirmation of its former commitment? I ask that because we are speaking in terms of 1.5 per cent of what we call gross expenditures on research and development as related to gross national product. I suspect that that statement in the Speech from the Throne may well have been inspired by the recognized Canadian expert on the subject, Senator Lamontagne.

I am interested to know, since Senator Lamontagne or others were able to get that statement placed in the Speech from the Throne, if there has been a change in policy.

Now I recognize that it is difficult for the deputy leader to answer, so perhaps he will permit me to add a few supplementaries, because this is the kind of factual question to which I think the Senate is entitled to a factual answer.

Because of the Senate's interest in this subject, I refer to the four reports by the Senate committee, commonly known as the Lamontagne committee. In its first report the committee recommended that this amount be 2.5 per cent of the gross national product. It has been whittled down now to a promise by the present government, carried on by the last government, that it would be about 1.5 per cent.

Perhaps the deputy leader would obtain an answer for me to this question with respect to this new policy: When will the gross expenditures on R&D reach 1.5 per cent of the gross national product? I ask that question because it seems to me of the utmost importance that we have an explanation of the following statement attributed to the Minister of Science and Technology:

> I don't think that it is practical for us—

I presume "us" means the Government of Canada.

> —to reach 1.5 per cent before the mid-decade, 1985.

I am sure that if Senator Lamontagne has not read that it will come as a shock to him.

Senator Asselin: He might not have been consulted.

• (1440)

Senator Grosart: A statement is alleged to have been made yesterday, or today, contradicting the statement that I quoted, to the effect that the government reaffirms its commitment to increase Canada's overall expenditures on research and development to 1.5 per cent of the value of the gross national product.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Put the question!

Senator Grosart: The senator has just asked me to put the question. Well, I put that question and some other questions.

Senator Guay: Don't make a speech; just put your question.

Senator Grosart: I have asked for an answer, but certainly not from Senator Guay.

Senator Guay: Honourable senators, I would just remind the honourable senator that he, more than any one of us, should know how to put a question, and that he should take only a reasonable amount of time to do so.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I am sure all honourable senators will understand why I am rather diffident about even suggesting that someone with the distinguished career that Senator Grosart has had in this chamber, as a member of the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, as a former deputy leader, and indeed, as a former distinguished Speaker, might be out of order. However, I do think there is some doubt as to whether his question is in order. If I understood him correctly, he had some concerns about it himself.

For the sake of the record, his question might not be in order because it inquires whether statements made in a newspaper are true, which comes under a rule of the House of Commons that I believe would apply here as well owing to our rule 1.

I would prefer, with the permission of the Senate, not to so treat the honourable senator's question. If I understood the first part of the supplementary question, it was whether I would pass on his observations to the minister when I am passing on his first question, and the answer to that is: "Yes, I will".

Senator Grosart: On a point of order, honourable senators, it is rather interesting that this matter should have been raised in this manner. I understood the Deputy Leader of the Government to say that it might not be in order for me to ask if a statement attributed to a minister is true. Of course, I did not ask that question at all. I quoted the statement by the minister and asked if that was a reflection of government policy. If that is not in order, then few of the questions asked in this house are in order. Surely it is quite in order to quote a statement attributed to a minister, and ask if that reflects government policy.

Senator Frith: I am sure all honourable senators will support me in the interpretation that I put on the question raised, which is the same charitable interpretation that the asker of the question has just put on it. I am quite content to leave it at that.

Senator Grosart: Again on a point of order, I might ask the deputy leader if he will inform the Senate whether a statement was made by the minister to the effect that is indicated by the report I quoted from.

Senator Olson: That is just asking if it is true or not.

Senator Grosart: No, I am asking if he made that statement. I am not asking if it is true. I am asking: Did he make that statement?

Senator Frith: I think it is already on the record, honourable senators, that I have said that I will gladly—I did not say "gladly" and, in fact, I am not sure that I am glad to. However, I will pass on the question and the observations made by the honourable senator.

Senator Grosart: That is all I ask. Thank you.

FINANCE

SOURCES OF PROJECTED FINANCIAL REQUIREMENTS

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. In view of the large financial requirements of government for the year, as indicated in the mini-budget, will the minister give the chamber some detail on how the Government of Canada intends to obtain the projected $11.7 billion of financial requirements? What sources does the government intend that money to come from, or think that money is to come from?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, again the senator insists on using words in the preamble that really wreck the question, because he refers to something called a mini-budget.

Senator Flynn: What is it then?

Senator Olson: You can call it what you like. The minister was asked to give—

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Flynn: That is just what we are doing, so don't criticize us.

Senator Olson: He was asked to give a statement on the economy, and he did. The opposition chose to call it a mini-budget. They can do that, but we don't call it a mini-budget.

Senator Flynn: Well, you can agree or you can disagree.

Senator Asselin: What was it? A joke?

Senator Olson: The other part of the question, as I understood it, was as to where the government intends to obtain the financial requirements for the balance of this, and indeed the next, fiscal year. A simple answer, I guess, is that we intend to obtain that money from the traditional sources.

Senator Flynn: Very simple indeed!

Senator Olson: You don't understand it?

Senator Doody: I would have called the mini-budget something else, had I realized I was going to get such a warm and all-embracing, informative answer. However, I will refer to it this time as a financial statement and perhaps that will elicit some information for the house.

Would the minister tell me if these traditional sources will be primarily Bank of Canada printings? Obviously, if we put an extra bunch of money in from the Bank of Canada in return for bonds, that will simply add to the money supply, while obviously the inflationary effect will be even more devastating than it is now. Or will it be borrowed from the bond markets? Will we go to New York and put the country into hock, and to what degree? How much will be raised in Canada as an internal debt? Or will we go to Europe to get some of the more exotic currencies, some of the higher-priced, fluctuating currencies? What about the interest rates involved, and that sort of thing?

The third traditional source is the sale of Canada Savings Bonds here in the country itself. Well, answers to questions asked previously on Canada Savings Bonds seem to indicate that the government is not really trying to sell its own paper to the people of Canada, since it has decided that to make the interest rates competitive with the private marketplace would not be in the best interests of Canada.

In view of these matters, perhaps the honourable minister can give us some more information.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the Department of Finance has a number of people who are competent in assessing the financial markets on a day-to-day basis and certainly on a week-to-week basis. They anticipate the financial requirements of the government and, based on their judgment, they suggest which markets to go to, the timing and so on. All factors to the greatest advantage of Canada are taken into account when they offer bonds or other instruments for sale. I expect that that will continue.

All of the questions the honourable senator mentioned are not mine to decide, either before or after the fact, however.

Senator Flynn: Thank God.

Senator Olson: That is the responsibility of the Minister of Finance and his advisers, and I am sure the honourable senator knows that. Therefore I take the question as notice and I will ask the Minister of Finance, but I can almost assure the honourable senator what the minister's reply will be.

Senator Flynn: Oh, yes; he simply doesn't know.

Senator Olson: It is not the practice of the Department of Finance to give answers to all of those questions in advance or in anticipation of placing bond offerings.

Senator Doody: I have a further supplementary question. I realize that there are skilled and knowledgeable officials in the Department of Finance whose duty it is to look after the technical end of the government's cash requirement program. I would have suspected that those people in the ministry responsible for the economic development and direction of the country, however, would have some knowledge as to what direction the borrowing program or cash requirement program will take. Obviously, that will have a major effect on the economy during the coming year. If the Minister of Finance will make that information available to the honourable senator, perhaps he can bring it to the chamber.

There is another reason for my concern, and perhaps the honourable minister can obtain an answer to this question: Has the government or, as I understand it now, have the officials of the Department of Finance consulted with their counterparts in the provinces to try to co-ordinate the borrowing programs for the entire cash requirements of the country for the coming year? Obviously amounts as huge as we see here are going to have a big effect on the marketplace, if indeed we go to the marketplace. The public utilities, the municipalities and the provinces could very well clash with the Government of Canada in the marketplace if there is not some co-ordination. Can the minister tell us if this approach has been looked at?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I would expect that the pattern of exchange for cash requirements that has gone on between the provinces and the federal government will continue. I do not know if there is any change in the practice that has been followed in the past.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

PLIGHT OF IRANIAN STUDENTS ENROLLED AT AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES

Hon. Edward M. Lawson: Honourable senators, my question is for the Minister of State for Economic Development, and it concerns the very delicate subject of the Iranian students, with specific reference to those who are presently in Vancouver, British Columbia. While I agree with the reason for President Carter's adopting the very firm policy of not allowing any more students into the country, and while I agree with the Canadian government's lending its support to that policy, my concern is with those students presently in Vancouver who appear to be the innocent victims of that policy.

I refer to two groups of students, some of whom came from Washington State University and some from the University of Idaho. They are architectural students who came to Canada on a field trip authorized and sponsored by their university, and they happened to be in Vancouver at the time the announcement was made and were denied re-entry into the United States. Some have since been allowed to go back to their respective universities to resume their studies.

I am advised that in all cases the students concerned, who are either fourth-year or fifth-year students, commenced their studies in the United States some time prior to this despicable hostage-taking incident.

I should like to know whether any responsible minister, on behalf of the Canadian government, has made any attempt to find out why the two groups of students are being treated differently, some being allowed to re-enter the United States and some not? Secondly, in the case of the five who have not been allowed to return to the University of Idaho, I am advised that an application was made for special status to enable them to continue their studies at the University of British Columbia, and that the application was denied yesterday. So they have no option but to terminate their studies.

I should like to know if the government or any responsible minister will be making an appeal to the United States for those students to be allowed re-entry into that country to enable them to complete their studies. They appear to be innocent victims of this policy, and I am concerned about the matter.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the best I can do with that question is to refer it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What we are really talking about here is United States policy. I am not aware of the full details, but I do not think the students are the only innocent victims. There are a number of other people involved in that clash. There are also innocent victims for whom some countries do not have much regard.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER—PROPOSED JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I have several questions arising from the annual report of the Commissioner of Official Languages which I should like to direct to the Deputy Leader of the Government. My first question falls within his own area of responsibility. The commissioner has noted that both the Clark government and the previous Trudeau administration had moved to establish a joint committee on language matters, and that because of the intervention of two general elections the committee has not been set up. What is the position of the present government on this matter?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I cannot speak for the position of the government in any formal way, but I do know of my own knowledge that active steps are being taken to arrange to have that committee established.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER—AGREEMENT BETWEEN GOVERNMENT OF CANADA AND FÉDÉRATION DES FRANCOPHONES HORS QUÉBEC

Hon. Lowell Murray: My second question concerns an observation by the Commissioner of Official Languages to the effect that the Secretary of State in the Clark government, Mr. David MacDonald, had signed an agreement with the Fédération des francophones hors Québec. I should like to know whether the present government is, indeed, bound by that agreement and will honour it. My concern in the matter arises from the fact that recently in the other place the government denied unanimous consent to a member who sought to move a motion calling on the new Secretary of State, Mr. Fox, to affirm the present government's commitment to that agreement.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on the question of whether or not the present government is bound de jure or constitutionally, I take it that that is not nearly as important as whether it intends to continue that undertaking. I shall pass on the question to the minister and will try to obtain an answer.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER—COLLECTIVE BARGAINING IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE

Hon. Lowell Murray: Finally, honourable senators, I should like to know the position of the government on the recommendation by the Commissioner of Official Languages that provision of services in both official languages should be a matter for bargaining with the Public Service unions and should be included in the collective agreements. I should like to know what the position of the present government is with regard to that recommendation.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Of course, the honourable senator will know that section 9 of the statute requires such services to be given. With regard to the provision requiring language services to be granted where there is a need, I shall have to find out whether there is some suggestion that the legislation should be amended. The honourable senator will note that there is a section of the Official Languages Act which asks the commissioner in his annual report to make recommendations for any legislative changes that he thinks would better fulfil the spirit and intent of the act. I know of the existence of the recommendation to which he refers, but I do not recall whether it falls within that section or another section. However, I shall look into the matter, and if it does come to a question of a response by the present government to that recommendation, I will find out what it is.

May I add that it seems to me that there is a useful connection between Senator Murray's first question and his second question, since it is hoped that one of the principal functions of the joint committee on bilingualism, if it is established, will be to study the recommendations of the Commissioner of Official Languages in his annual report.

Senator Murray: For the record, and by way of clarification, the commissioner's point, as I understand it, is that the provisions of the Official Languages Act, to which the deputy leader refers, are sometimes frustrated by other provisions of collective agreements. He therefore makes the point that the provision of language services ought to be negotiated and put into collective agreements, as are some other linguistic matters.

RENEWAL OF NORAD AGREEMENT

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I have a question concerning the extension of the current NORAD agreement which is due to expire on May 12, and which, on April 22, the government leader said was under discussion by the government. Has a decision on this matter yet been reached and, if so, what is the decision, and what is the procedure or instrumentality whereby this important agreement was dealt with?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we should be able to provide an answer to that question shortly, since it does not appear to be one that requires a great deal of research. I shall try to provide a reply early next week.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER—PROPOSED JOINT COMMITTEE

[Translation]

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, as a follow-up to the question by Senator Murray about the report of the Commissioner of Official Languages and the committee that was mentioned, did I understand correctly that there will be representation from both houses on that committee, not only from the House of Commons, as often happens?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, unless I am mistaken, the committee proposed by Mr. Joyal would be a joint committee. He put his idea to the former Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Joseph Clark, who accepted it not only in principle but, if I am correct, he started to set up such a committee. The idea was surely to have a joint committee. There is no suggestion that this be only a committee of the other place.

But whether that is also the intention of the present government, I do not know. I am sure, based on the personal information I mentioned earlier, the idea is to have a joint committee of both houses.

Hon. Martial Asselin: It is the intention of the government that counts.

Senator Frith: I beg your pardon?

Senator Asselin: It is the intention of the government that counts. You were being asked whether or not it is the intention of the government to have a joint committee.

Senator Frith: Yes, I agree entirely that that is what counts.

Senator Asselin: No, but the government has made its decision, as far as you know.

Senator Frith: No, no. I said I am sure, based on my own experience, that the discussions were to set up such a committee now. But whether the government has made such a decision, I do not know. I agreed to get the information, and I will pass it on to the Senate.

HOUSING

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION— LOW-RENTAL ACCOMMODATION

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: Honourable senators, I direct my question to the Minister of State for Economic Development.

The Minister of Public Works, who is responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, stated a few days ago that one of his priorities—the second, I believe—would be to stimulate the rental housing building industry.

Since the corporation is already stuck with thousands of unleased units across Canada, could the minister explain the rationale behind such a policy?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I will take the question as notice and ask the Minister of Public Works to explain his own statements.

Senator Charbonneau: Honourable senators, as a supplementary, would the minister also ask the Minister of Public Works to tell us how many rental units are "non-louées", as I said in French.

Senator Olson: I will ask that question also.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I wonder if I could ask the same minister a supplementary question having to do with housing.

I asked a question recently about the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, to which I was given a very general answer. In view of the fact that there is such a vast need for the repairing and upgrading of deteriorated homes right across the country, I wonder if I could get a definitive reply as to any increase in funding which may be forthcoming in order to alleviate that problem so that through the conservation of oil many, many millions of dollars can be saved for Canada and for the indigent people concerned.

Senator Olson: I take the question as notice, honourable senators.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PURCHASE OF F-18A AIRCRAFT

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I notice, honourable senators, that Senators Roblin and Smith (Colchester) are not here, but I have a fairly complete answer with respect to the questions they asked concerning the new fighter aircraft, the CF-18A. The anwer is of medium length, but since I will not be here next Monday and Tuesday I think perhaps I should read it now.

Senator Flynn: Senator Roblin will be away for two weeks.

Senator Olson: I wish to reply to a question asked by Senator Smith (Colchester) and Senator Roblin during Question Period on April 17 regarding the anticipated industrial benefits to the Atlantic provinces and Manitoba as a result of the new fighter aircraft contract. I wish first to clarify that the CF-18A is being bought "off the shelf". The offsetting business provided by McDonnell Douglas and its associated companies in the F-18A program to Canadian companies provides a limited number of opportunities to make components for these aircraft.

However, a great deal of other work will be made available to Canadian companies as a result of the provisions in the contract negotiated by this government. A guaranteed proportion of this work will be in the aerospace and electronics industries. At the same time, there will also be a considerable volume of business in other industrial sectors involving purchases, investments, technology transfer, export marketing assistance and tourism.

Honourable senators will understand that the federal government is not in a position to tell the prime contractor which individual firms it must do business with; however, we will ensure that an appropriate regional balance is maintained over the life of the contract. I am sure that you will all agree that Canadian firms should seek the business to which I have been referring in a competitive manner, and this makes it impossible to be precise about the exact figures for contracted work for each province or region of the country. However, I would like to give some specific examples to illustrate the type of industrial benefit I have in mind.

Firms outside of Toronto and Montreal will receive an estimated $200 million worth of work on DC-9 and DC-10 components.

Bristol Aerospace of Winnipeg has already received a contract of $35 million for engine components.

An estimated $75 million in subcontracts will be available to western Canadian and Atlantic firms for work on the DC-10, DC-9, Super 80 and KC10-A projects.

McDonnell Douglas this week announced that it is inviting a number of Canadian companies to enter proposals for the manufacture of airframe assemblies for the Canadian Forces CF-18A as well as for the U.S. Navy and Marine Corps

F-18A Hornet fighters, and for Hornets to be manufactured for allied nations. Included among the Canadian companies are both Enheat of Amherst, Nova Scotia, and Bristol of Winnipeg.

I would like to add some further perspective to the benefits already accruing to the various regions of the country through military expenditures. I would be remiss if I did not bring to honourable senators' attention the substantial operating and capital expenditures of the Department of National Defence.

A table provided to me by the Department of National Defence indicates that, for example, in the fiscal year 1979-80 DND had operating expenditures of $688,840,000 in Atlantic Canada, and $732,900,000 in western Canada. For the information of honourable senators I will place the table on the record. [The table follows:]

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Expenditure by Province

Province	Operating Expenditure 1979-80	Capital Construction & Related Costs 1980-81	Equipment Values
British Columbia	308,119,000	30,213,000	4,109,700,000
Alberta	239,326,000	19,301,000	1,767,900,000
Saskatchewan	62,772,000	3,390,000	459,800,000
Manitoba	122,685,000	12,229,700	171,300,000
Total Western Provinces:	732,902,000	65,133,700	6,508,700,000
New Brunswick	138,156,000	70,059,600	467,300,000
Nova Scotia	484,697,000	47,123,100	6,466,600,000
P.E.I.	40,626,000	3,000,300	277,600,000
Newfoundland	25,361,000	3,384,200	46,800,000
Total Atlantic Provinces:	688,840,000	123,567,200	7,258,300,000

Finally, I would like to emphasize the importance to all Canadian firms, but particularly those in the western and Atlantic provinces, of the contract provision for technology transfer and export market assistance. Used together, these provisions will do much to expand existing businesses and, indeed, to create new ventures based on new projects. I am also optimistic that the tourism development program will be of particular benefit to the western and Atlantic regions.

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I should like to thank the Minister of State for Economic Development for the answer he gave to Senator Smith's question. I should like to commend him for what I feel is a very full and comprehensive report, and here I speak only for myself. He made particular mention of Amherst in Nova Scotia where they have had layoffs, and I am sure that anything which may be forthcoming from this project would be of great benefit and be good news to those people involved.

ENERGY

PRICE OF DOMESTIC OIL—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question posed by Senator Flynn on April 24.

Senator Flynn asked about the effect of changes in the federal sales tax on motor gasoline and diesel fuels from a specifically set cent-per-litre level to 9 per cent of the manufacturers' price, which was introduced in the Minister of Finance's statement on April 21.

The answer is that up to this time it is not quite clear how the ad valorem tax will be administered by the Department of National Revenue. We expect that the tax will be 9 per cent of the invoice value f.o.b. at the regional level. However, because of the variation in the way in which the industry establishes retail prices, the effect of the tax change is expected to range from 0.3 to 0.7 cents per litre, with the majority of product price increases being at 0.4 cents per litre.

It says "0.4 cents" in the document. Frankly, I am not quite clear as to whether that means 4 cents or four-tenths of a cent. I will try to get an explanation of that. Someone who knows the subject better than I might know what the figure is.

• (1510)

Senator Flynn: I hope they knew what they were doing.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CONTRIBUTIONS TO BANDS AND COUNCILS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a response to a question asked in the Senate by Senator G. I. Smith on April 29. I see he is not present, but I propose to put the answer on the record and he can study it when he returns. The answer is as follows:

> At the present time, only one of the 28 bands in the Atlantic Region has signed a contribution arrangement for the fiscal year 1980-81. Indian leaders in the region have been consulted throughout the year by district and regional staff of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As a result of these consultations, revisions were subsequently made to the terms and conditions, but these have not been accepted by some bands. On April 16, 1980, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development announced a three-month extension to July 15, 1980, in order that mutually satisfactory financial arrangements can be worked out between himself and Indian leaders.

AIRLINES

APPLICATION OF EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS TO EXTEND SERVICE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question raised by Senator G. I. Smith concerning Eastern Provincial Airways. Senator Smith asked if Eastern Provincial Airways has made any formal appeal, on the recent decision of the Canadian Transport Commission, to the Minister of Transport.

The answer is that as of today, that is May 1, no appeal has been received by the Minister of Transport.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CUBAN REFUGEES—CANADIAN INVOLVEMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to questions posed by Senator Bosa on April 17 and by Senator Nurgitz on April 30. I notice that Senator Bosa is not present. The answer is as follows:

> Honourable senators will remember that Senators Bosa and Nurgitz have expressed concern over the well-being of the Cuban asylum seekers. As honourable senators know, Canada has agreed to accept 300 of the asylum seekers once they reach a third country. As well, Canada has agreed to contribute funds to any international effort undertaken to provide the asylum seekers with food, medicine and other assistance.
> As to the question posed by Senator Nurgitz, as to whether Canada is prepared to expand its commitment, I can only say that this government is deeply concerned at this situation and is following the events in Havana very closely.

STATUS OF WOMEN

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEES AND TASK FORCES

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question raised by Senators Bielish and Roblin on April 23, 1980. The question raised concerned the six parliamentary task forces and whether or not the intention was to make them joint committees of the House of Commons and the Senate. As well, Senator Roblin asked whether these proposed committees report to Parliament, what the plan is with respect to their responsibilities, and whether they would be reporting back to Parliament.

The answer is as follows:

> Consideration is being given to making these task forces joint committees. If so, the Leader of the Opposition would be asked to participate. Exact terms of reference for these task forces will be detailed by chairman, members and ministers involved, but these task forces are intended to be action-oriented and to report before the opening of the House in the fall so that their recommendations can be taken into account in legislative planning.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development) tabled:

> Copies of News Release, dated May 1, 1980, respecting details of a meeting of several members of the Cabinet Committee on Economic Development and members of the British Columbia Cabinet, to be held in Victoria, British Columbia, on May 5, 1980, issued by the Minister of State for Economic Development.
> Preliminary figures on man-years of employment generated as a result of pipe procurement for the Alaska Highway Gas Pipeline.

He said: Honourable senators, the second document is a preliminary assessment of the man-years of employment which will be created across Canada if and when Foothills purchase the $2 billion worth of pipe and other fittings which they announced the day before yesterday. We are presently working out in more detail where these jobs and man-years will be created.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I noticed that the first document the minister mentioned was not tabled but was given to the Hansard reporter. Perhaps he intended to have it inserted in Hansard, I do not know, but if it is to be tabled it should be given to the Clerk. I think the page made a mistake. We have to be very clear about what we do with these documents. If a document is to be tabled, it should go to the Table; if it is to be inserted in Hansard, then the Hansard reporter should get it.

Senator Olson: I am glad that clarification has been made. I intended it to be tabled so that it would be available for the information of any senator, but not that it be printed in Hansard. As to the preliminary survey of man-years, I would not ask that it be printed in Hansard either.

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, April 30, the debate on the motion of Senator Langlois for second reading of Bill S-3, to amend an Act to provide for the appointment of a Port Warden for the Harbour of Quebec and to amend an Act to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to the office of Port Warden for the Harbour of Montreal

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: Honourable senators, Bill S-3 aims at amending the acts which now set a ceiling for the maximum rates applicable to the services of port wardens for the harbours of Quebec and Montreal. This bill has been discussed several times by the committee since the last debate in this chamber and those of you who sit on the committee will therefore be more familiar with this matter. I shall summarize briefly the important elements of this bill.

An amendment in Bill S-3 would allow the board of directors of the Board of Trade and Industry of Metropolitan Quebec, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, to establish rates exceeding those now allowed by law for the services of port wardens.

You will also be aware that years ago the Board of Trade of Quebec changed its name to the Board of Trade and Industry of Metropolitan Quebec. The bill would therefore replace the outmoded designation used in the act in accordance with the changes made by Letters Patent issued in 1971.

The same change would be made in the case of the Board of Trade for the City of Montreal and would provide for its council the same authority, also subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. Another change would be to amend the designation of the board in the French version of the act so as to make it consistent with the name given to it when the Board of Trade of Montreal was incorporated in 1842.

The maximum rates set by the present legislation have been increased repeatedly in the last 20 years. It was only in 1977 that the Department of Justice responded by refusing the latest request for an increase made by Montreal. Because of inflation, these rates have long been too low and there is no doubt that the office of the port warden of Montreal is operated at a loss and that this will continue as long as a rate increase is not granted.

The fees charged nowadays for equivalent services either by the departments of the federal government or by private sector experts are not comparable to the maximum rates now applied under the acts for Quebec and Montreal and are obviously anachronistic. The abolition of maximum rates would allow the authorities to establish a parallel with the system now being used by the government and would provide the same fees for the services rendered throughout the country.

The United States charge substantially higher rates than Canada and would therefore have no objection to rate increases for Quebec. As for the private sector, it already applies the proposed increases because of inflation and willingly recognizes the need to maintain the services of port wardens.

The rate increases would not be excessive since they would be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. The main concern of the Boards of Trade of Montreal and Quebec is to provide proper service to the shippers and carriers on a no gain, no loss basis.

Finally, there is little if any risk in amending this act, which is obviously outmoded. By doing so, we shall only be standardizing and legalizing a situation which had prevailed for several years before the Department of Justice reacted to it in 1977, and until now this situation does not seem to have caused any trouble. I therefore propose that Bill S-3 be agreed to immediately without referral to any committee.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Hicks, seconded by the Honourable Senator Deschatelets, P.C., for the second reading of the Bill S-2, intituled: "An Act to implement conventions between Canada and Spain, Canada and the Republic of Liberia, Canada and the Republic of Austria, Canada and Italy, Canada and the Republic of Korea, Canada and the Socialist Republic of Romania and Canada and the Republic of Indonesia and agreements between Canada and Malaysia, Canada and Jamaica and Canada and Barbados and a convention between Canada and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax".—(Honourable Senator Grosart).

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, with your permission I ask that this Order stand until Tuesday evening, May 6.

Senator Flynn: For Senator Grosart?

Senator Hicks: I cannot be here on Monday evening. I have discussed this with Senator Grosart, who says he has some questions he wants to put to me.

Order stands.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, April 24, consideration of the Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Retirement Age Policies, entitled Retirement Without Tears, tabled in the Senate on April 15, 1980.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, I think you are lucky. I have good news for you. I had prepared a rather elaborate speech but I forgot it when I left Montreal. So I will only comment for a few minutes this afternoon on two aspects of what is commonly referred to as the Croll report.

Honourable senators, we recommended in that report, first of all, the phasing out of the mandatory age of retirement at 65. Senator Croll elaborated on that recommendation.

However, the only point I would like to make is that when we started our proceedings the U.S. government, by legislation dated January 1, 1978, had already decided that the mandatory age of retirement would be abolished in the U.S. civil service and would be pushed back from 65 to 70 in the private sector.

So one of the main recommendations in the Croll report is not an innovation. There is nothing revolutionary in that recommendation, as we just simply followed a successful U.S. experiment that caused no social upset. I believe this is a very important point because our system is more or less comparable with that of the United States so that what meets with success over there we submit can also be done here.

What is, honourable senators, the concept that led us to go along with that recommendation? Well, it is the fact that at a time when we are moving forward on the issue of human rights, we believe that freedom of choice is an exceptionally important concept so that when we are asked "At what age should an individual, man or woman, retire?" we can answer, "At the age which that individual, man or woman, considers appropriate, at which he planned and wanted to retire, so that it results from his freedom of choice".

This is very important, as Senator Croll put it so well, at an age around 60 when anyone can hope to live another third of his adult life, it is very important, I repeat, that we do away—and this is one of the purposes of our recommendation—in our Canadian society with that tradition we have tolerated until now that a person 45, 50, 55 or 60 is no longer able to work because our society is made that way. Before leaving this subject, I would remind you that we questioned the Department of Manpower and the Department of Education, and employment officers in this country admitted that the effort to find Canadians a job was aimed at younger people and it was nearly out of the question to give any assistance to an older person, man or woman.

So we hope that recommendation, which is based on the U.S. legislation, will be welcomed by our society in Canada, and we hope that in the years to come, or as soon as possible, the man or the woman who wants to work will not be deprived of that opportunity just because of his or her age.

I will now briefly touch upon the second point, the proposed amendments to the Canada and the Quebec Pension Plans.

This raises the old problem of state pensions versus private sector pensions. I must remind honourable senators that we have had the most important employers in the country appear as witnesses. We have had actuaries, witnesses working for the pension plan here, witnesses from the federal Department of Health and Welfare. It seemed very clear to us, in light of that evidence, in the public interest and the interest of all Canadians that the state pension plans are more suited to the needs of Canadians than private ones. There was a great deal of information to support this. Here are some examples: no more than 40 per cent of Canadian workers are covered under private pension plans; they do not provide for immediate payment of the employer contribution; they are not portable and, more important, they are not indexed to the cost of living. The Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan have these features.

But I would like to be quite clear: though our report may have been rather tough on private pension plans, we had no intention of recommending that they be done away with; we are convinced that the government pension plan and the Quebec Pension Plan must be the bases for pensions in Canada but we do not object in any way to their being supplemented by private pension plans. As honourable senators know, the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan have been in force since 1966, if I remember correctly. These pensions have not been substantially increased; consequently we feel that they do not satisfy current needs with regards to their contribution and to their contribution limits which have remained at $11,000 and therefore do not correspond to today's average salaries. We are therefore convinced that the government must take measures to review the state pension plan with a view to improving it. We would like to see the contributions doubled from 1.8 to 4 per cent of remuneration. Furthermore the amount paid for the state pension is actually the lowest of practically all countries comparable to Canada, such as the United States, France, England and others. So, there is still a wide margin.

I for one am happy with the general principle of the Throne Speech debate which is, and I quote:

> Beyond providing immediate relief for elderly people—

The reference in my view is to the $35 income supplement.

> —my government intends to convene a National Pension Conference—

Honourable senators, it is my hope that such a national conference will consider the total pension issue, because, as must be realized, our recommendations only include the sector under federal jurisdiction, and clearly we cannot affect the provinces' roles, so that if we want to review pensions, this must be done in co-operation with the provinces. I feel satisfied at this point with the reference to the calling of a national pension conference in the fall.

I would now like to deal with a final matter. Honourable senators took an active part yesterday in the so-called "Senator Croll event", which in my view was a great success. It also celebrated the tabling of the Croll report.

I simply want to raise the question of the Senate at a time when we hear from every quarter, so to speak, that this institution must be reformed. My point this afternoon is that we have been perceived along the years as parliamentarians mainly interested in external affairs, financial, fiscal matters and so on. We have not yet been perceived by the public as parliamentarians concerned over the years with the have-not sectors of the Canadian people.

Last night, I think the Speaker of the Senate and also the government leader and the official opposition leader referred to the fact that over these last 15 to 20 years, a number of improvements in our social security policies evolved from the numerous reports and studies submitted to the upper chamber. We did not always receive the credit for these studies. This may in some way be our own fault. There have been very elaborate studies to help the Canadians who most urgently need it, without always getting the credit.

I must suggest that last evening the aim was more or less to make the public more aware that there are here parliamentarians who, in a non-partisan atmosphere that is not always easy to achieve in the other place, can study problems for a year or two before putting forward recommendations we are ready to support. I must say that since January many committee members have been called upon, on radio or TV programs or in their own communities, to defend a report that meets people's needs in our view.

This is my last point. I feel this is important. I would like to thank the Speaker, the Honourable Jean Marchand, the government leader and the opposition leader who took an active part in organizing yesterday's event. It is my hope that the public, in increasing numbers, will realize that when it comes to the needs of the least privileged, the door to the Senate is always open to the demands of Canadians who feel they have grievances and look to Parliament to deal with them.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I consider it a privilege to follow Senator Deschatelets in the debate on the Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Retirement Age Policies. Indeed, it was a privilege to have served on that committee, and especially to have served under our distinguished colleague, Senator David Croll, an individual who has made a significant contribution, as chairman of this and other important committees, to the resolution of the problems of disadvantaged Canadians.

It was a gratifying and pleasant experience, indeed, to have assisted at yesterday's testimonial dinner in honour of Senator Croll. It was also a very interesting and informative experience for me to have served with those of my distinguished fellow members of this chamber appointed to that special committee. Their dedication and expertise were both helpful and admirable.

Pension reform in Canada has been the object of parliamentary interest and debate, one could say, since shortly after the commencement of the First Parliament of Canada in 1867. The first pension program during the first 50 years of Parliament related to federal pensions for permanent public servants precisely in 1870. That was followed in 1908 by a national annuities program to help old people save for their retirement years, and of course in 1927 the federal government came up with a means-test old age pension scheme for senior citizens.

Since that time, there have been increases and reforms in old age pensions and social programs for elderly citizens. However, it is only since 1976 that intensive efforts have been made to do something more, the reason for that being the demographic implications of the so-called "greying of Canada." One of the efforts of the federal government in that respect was the establishment, in 1976, of an interdepartmental task force, and that task force finally submitted its report entitled The Retirement System in Canada and subtitled Problems and Alternative Policies for Reform, tabled last week.

To my mind, a fundamental and profound effort, with up-to-date proposals, was made by the special committee of the Senate which was established following the adoption of a motion by Senator Croll. I was pleased that such a committee was appointed.

[Senator Deschatelets.]

In the course of the past 50 years, a social revolution has occurred, due mostly to the scientific progress we have experienced. One of the results of that scientific progress has been an increase in the life expectancy of both men and women. Demographic studies in Canada forecast a steady increase in the number of people aged 65 years and over. For statistical purposes, those 65 years of age and over are classified as old, though many of them do not feel old and can lead a productive life.

There were about 2.1 million of these so-called old people in our country in 1978, and it is estimated that the number will rise to 3.4 million by the year 2001, and to approximately 8 million 50 years from now. Demographic transformations of this magnitude have profound effects on society, and it is our task in this Parliament to foresee the implications and then help solve the problems.

Partly as a result of social security legislation, it came to be accepted that people should retire at age 65. Retirement is a complex subject, and has its bright as well as dark side. This whole subject was examined thoroughly by our committee during 1978 and 1979. The committee received voluminous information from the many competent witnesses who appeared before it respecting the problems of the compulsory retirement age of 65, in particular the inadequate retirement old age pension and other income of senior citizens, the process of aging and the necessity of adequate preparation for retirement.

Honourable senators, in my remarks today I would like to focus on certain human and health features of the aging process and give you some information that was given to us by expert witnesses such as representatives of the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Association on Gerontology, senior citizens' organizations, Dr. Colin Smith, a geriatric specialist who was very interesting and, of course, the then and now again Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Honourable Monique Bégin. This is just to mention a few of the witnesses.

During the course of the committee's hearings, it was emphasized that successful and productive retirement requires not only an adequate retirement income but also improved health and living conditions. We heard witness after witness tell us that proper counselling, planning and special medical treatment of the aging is a pressing problem, and that the future outlook is gloomy unless decisive action is taken without delay. The urgency and fundamental difficulty is that the social and medical problems of the aged will continue to multiply as people grow older and their numbers increase.

Some interesting biostatistics were given by several witnesses. For example, about 50 per cent of Canadians die suddenly with their first major illness. About 71.4 per cent die suddenly before a doctor can get to the scene. Ten per cent of these sudden deaths are accidental, and 90 per cent of them occur in people under the age of 50. Almost all the remaining sudden deaths are due to a single pathological process in the human body called atherosclerosis, commonly known as hardening of the arteries, mostly in the heart (49 per cent) and in the brain (20 per cent).

Furthermore, less than 30 per cent of Canadians see a doctor in the last month before their death. About 10 per cent of survivors of such illnesses and accidents drop out of the labour market, too frail or chronically ill to perform their work. We are fortunate in Canada to have hospital and medical insurance to look after their illness. In many cases drug, and some dental, expenses are covered, plus sickness weekly benefits and workmen's compensation plans. It is laudable that our socially responsible provincial and federal administrations have provided such comprehensive health and hospital care.

But as I mentioned earlier, the social and medical problems of the aged multiply as the population grows older. The over-65 group now is 8.4 per cent of the total population. In the next 30 years that percentage will reach about 18.6, depending on the fertility projection used and the results of advances in health sciences.

As responsible legislators we should begin now to recognize these problems because they are coming. Dr. Colin Smith, in alarming testimony before the commitee, stated that if we do not improve the lot of our retirees, and if we fail to find alternatives to hospitalization and institutionalization, we may really need the equivalent of 166 more hospitals with 300 beds each for the over-65 population by the year 2001.

Indeed, the aging phenomenon has various implications for the health and social sciences. According to the testimony of the Canadian Medical Association, the shift in age structure projected for the year 2001, predicated on today's patterns, will lead to a level of 43 per cent utilization of total patient-days in general and allied hospitals for those 65 years of age and over.

The corresponding level of utilization in 1971 was 35 per cent. The prime causes making institutional care necessary were heart disease 16.6 per cent, cerebrovascular disease 13.7 per cent, accidents 7.4 per cent, respiratory disease 6.7 per cent, and the nervous system diseases 4.9 per cent.

Perhaps the saddest scene in these institutions for the elderly is the number of patients who have been found incompetent because of age-related mental deterioration. Some people who have organic mental deterioration before the presently accepted retirement age, which we consider to be 65, can be helped if their condition is caught in time. These include nutritional diseases, and certain other diseases—for example, pernicious anemia, and also beri-beri and pellagra, most frequently seen in Canada as a result of malnutrition. Specific brain damage can also be caused by alcohol abuse.

Furthermore, during the course of our hearings we were told that 20 per cent of organic brain damage is caused by vascular disease. Even sufferers of transient ischaemic attacks, or small strokes, are left with a residue of permanent damage, although the patient's personality may remain intact for years. But the saddest and most troublesome variety of organic brain and mental deterioration is Alzheimer's disease. Recent research implicating excess aluminum absorption and slow-acting virus particles in nerve cells may some day help to prevent this most cruel form of dementia.

Other witnesses made revealing comments on the state of geriatric care in Canada, in particular on problems with institutional care of the elderly and the status of geriatric medicine.

Under our Constitution, the provincial ministries of community and social services have eventually been given the responsibility of the continuing care of the elderly. This has led to fragmentation and lack of co-ordination, which often produces inappropriate use of the available facilities for continuing care of the disadvantaged, the disabled and the frail.

With the cutting of provincial money for hospitals and allied institutions, hardship has been a sad experience for many. With sick-care dollars stretched to the limit, it is evident good sense to invest in a viable home instead of spending more money on an expensive institutional bed.

Apparently, the capital cost of a chronic hospital bed is more than $40,000, that of an extended health care bed about $25,000 and that of a nursing home bed about $21,500. Not only is the capital cost of an institutional bed high, but the per diem rate for such beds is extremely high, owing to labour and equipment costs.

A chronic hospital bed costs a patient about $75 per day, an extended care bed about $30 a day, a nursing home bed $26 a day. In general, an institutional bed costs more than $1,000 per month per patient, whereas continuing care in the home is averaging only $80 per month per person.

A more efficient service, which was formerly denied the old, the poor and ethnic minority groups, is now emerging at no increase in cost to the taxpayer. In order to make this service a success, we must have dedicated professionals willing and able to make home visits while not being deterred by inadequate financing of any part of the system. Specially organized residences for the aged according to the expert witnesses, are simply the most sensible method of housing the frail, old or handicapped people.

During the course of our hearings, witnesses stated that, although overall care in our provincial institutions is generally good, staffing for the mentally frail is found wanting in most jurisdictions and especially in nursing homes. It was revealed by witnesses that in some of these nursing homes the standards of treatment and care remain inadequate where financing is insufficient. Unfortunately, the restrictions in spending in the past few years have gone beyond the cost-effectiveness level.

Another factor in caring for our elderly, which was emphasized by witnesses, is the lack of sufficient knowledge about the biology of aging. It requires a new type of medical science which we often call "geriatrics"—a major modification in the doctors' traditional techniques. Although more geriatrics is now taught in universities, and one or two full-time professors of departments of geriatrics do exist in Canadian universities, the committee was told that there seems to be some resistance to accepting geriatrics as a viable sub-specialty of medicine for teaching purposes. However, the nursing, occupational therapy, physiotherapy, and social work schools are graduating more people with gerontological expertise. We also discovered that although there is a lot of poor geriatric medicine, nursing and social work being done, nevertheless the updating of knowledge in geriatrics is on the increase.

In general, honourable senators, your committee has found that retirement policies and treatment of the aged are still inadequate, often discriminatory and sometimes cruel. It is intolerable today that so many old people, feeling useless and rejected by society, are unnecessarily bored, ill, lonely, poor and sometimes living in conditions of severe privation. Our witnesses offered many solutions.

Your committee concluded that better pensions are better than welfare. The recommendations of your committee are formulated in its very interesting report, which is in your hands, entitled Retirement Without Tears. This report contains, as you will find, 36 recommendations that could greatly improve the lot of our retirees, if adopted by government, employers, employees, as well as the married and the single.

The highlights of the report call for the gradual elimination of the mandatory retirement age, a review of human rights legislation to eradicate discrimination based on age, the provision of flexible retirement policies, improved pension benefits for spouses and survivors, assistance to provide more homemaking services, and, of course, more federal "New Horizons" programs, effective pre-retirement programs, more retirement organizations demanding conditions to achieve dignity, higher incomes and better medical, social and recreational services.

Many of us in this chamber either knew or have heard of a former distinguished colleague, the late Senator Arthur Roebuck, who inspired and encouraged me and, I am sure, many others, in the pursuit of politics. He lived a full and long life into the nineties. One day in the parliamentary dining room, as he was putting a saccharin tablet into his cup of tea, I asked him to what secret he attributed his long, productive and vigorous life. He replied jokingly, "I never resisted temptation." Of course, we all had a hearty laugh. George Bernard Shaw once wrote: "Man does not cease to play because he grows old; man grows old because he ceases to play." I think Senator Roebuck agreed with that kind of philosophy of life.

Play is not just for children. Adults also need to become involved in activities which satisfy personal needs and make life more enjoyable. Boredom, loneliness and isolation do not need to become increasingly larger parts of one's life as one grows older. This point was also emphasized by some of our witnesses—bright, elderly people who made their life enjoyable and worthwhile by joining organizations and getting involved in community affairs.

Is there anything special that the federal government is doing today about all this? We heard from the Honourable Monique Bégin in the committee, prior to the 1979 election, that there was established in the Department of National Health and Welfare a bureau on aging. Sadly it consisted of only two people, and even that bureau on aging faded away with the financial restraints of the previous government.

There are rumours that the minister will be making some kind of announcement either today or tomorrow on what is to be done about this problem, but I would urge, and seek the support of the Senate for, the establishment of a national institute on aging to provide leadership, research and education in gerontology. I am convinced that this proposal, and the 36 recommendations of your special committee, if implemented vigorously, would, to paraphrase Cicero, make old age a dignified period, more valued than the pleasures of youth—or, as Browning once wrote:

Grow old along with me!

The best is yet to be,

Honourable senators, that time has not yet come for the majority of our elderly. Its fulfilment will demand all our best efforts.

On motion of Senator Godfrey, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, May 5, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

HIS EXCELLENCY MASAYOSHI OHIRA PRIME MINISTER OF JAPAN

ADDRESS TO MEMBERS OF BOTH HOUSES

[Translation]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have the honour to move that the address of His Excellency the Prime Minister of Japan to members of both Houses of Parliament, together with the introductory speech by the Prime Minister of Canada and the speeches delivered on that occasion by the Speaker of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Commons be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day, and form part of the permanent records of this house.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled:

Annual Report to the Governments of the United States and Canada by the Columbia River Treaty Permanent Engineering Board for the period October 1, 1978 to September 30, 1979.

Final Report, dated March 15, 1980, of the Task Force on Review of Unification of the Canadian Forces (Mr. G. M. Fyffe, Chairman).

RETIREMENT AGE POLICIES

REPORT OF COMMITTEE EXPENSES TABLED

Hon. David A. Croll, Chairman of the Special Senate Committee on Retirement Age Policies, tabled, pursuant to rule 84, a report of expenses incurred by the committee in the First Session of the Thirty-first Parliament.

(For text of report, see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 6, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Hon. Allister Grosart: I wonder if the acting leader would indicate to the Senate the program for the rest of the week.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the plan is to continue with the program that was discussed and suggested last week—that is, we will sit, as mentioned in this motion, tomorrow night at 8 o'clock, and then on Wednesday and Thursday afternoons at 2 o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURE

COMMITTEE EMPOWERED TO ENGAGE SERVICES

Hon. Harry Hays, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45 (1)(i), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisers as may be necessary for the purpose of its examination and consideration of such legislation and other matters as may be referred to it.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MAKE STUDY

Hon. Harry Hays, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture be empowered, without special reference by the Senate, to hear submissions from representatives of agricultural and related industries; and

That the committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

CHILDHOOD EXPERIENCES AS CAUSES OF CRIMINAL BEHAVIOUR

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MAKE STUDY

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science be authorized to inquire into and report upon such experiences in prenatal life and early childhood as may cause personality disorders or criminal behaviour in later life and to consider and recommend such remedial and preventative measures relating thereto as may be reasonably expected to lead to a reduction in the incidence of crime and violence in society;

That the committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, technical and clerical personnel as may be required for the purpose of the inquiry;

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject in the Thirtieth and Thirty-first Parliaments be referred to the committee; and

That the committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, in view of the comprehensive nature of this resolution, I wonder if this might be a case in which it would be wise to have notice given so that the Senate is in a position to assess the request made. I may be wrong, but perhaps the honourable senator who introduced the motion would care to indicate why he feels it necessary to have leave to move it at this time.

• (2010)

Senator Bonnell: I think leave should be given because this resolution was before the Senate in the last two Parliaments, and the committee's report is about ready to be printed. The committee would like to hold a meeting this week with a view to presenting its report to the Senate as soon as possible.

Senator Grosart: Does the honourable senator suggest, then, that leave be given this evening?

Senator Bonnell: I do so suggest.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

GOVERNMENT NUCLEAR POLICY

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, I direct a question to the Deputy Leader of the Government. Who speaks for the government in this chamber this evening?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): That depends, honourable senators, on what we mean by "who speaks for the government." If the question is asked in the Question Period, then, according to the rules, questions can be directed to the Chairmen of committees and to the Deputy or Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate, and I am here to fulfil that role. To the extent that someone is here to take questions to the government in the Question Period, that, as I understand it, is my function, but in many cases I shall have to take them as notice.

Senator Balfour: I direct a question to the house leader. Does the government intend to initiate an inquiry into domestic and international nuclear policy in Canada as was proposed by the previous government?

Senator Frith: I will take that question as notice.

Senator Balfour: I will ask a supplementary question, if I may. Does the honourable gentleman agree or disagree with the resolution passed at the Liberal Party meeting at Harrison Hot Springs, which called for a national public inquiry into nuclear energy, and approved a motion calling for research into alternative energy sources including nuclear power?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, that resolution was passed this weekend in Vancouver. I was not there and whether I agree or do not agree personally, I suppose, is somewhat academic, but in any event I cannot say whether I agree or disagree until I have had a chance to study the resolution.

Senator Balfour: I wonder if the house leader would inform us as to whether it is still a policy of the government to attempt to represent western Canadian ridings by twinning them with the Liberal members of Parliament in eastern Canada, and, if not, when was this change in policy decided upon and when will it be announced?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I will see that that question is passed on to the government.

INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE TO CHRYSLER CORPORATION

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate, but I understand it will be directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. Is it still the policy of the government to tie the question of job guarantees to financial aid to the ailing Chrysler Corporation? I assume the question will be taken as notice, and that being the case I should like to ask a second question concerning this matter. Will the statement made over the weekend by the International President of the United Auto Workers that such a guarantee is unacceptable have any effect; will that change the government's policy at all on the question of job guarantees?

• (2015)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall take that question as notice in the name of the Minister of State for Economic Development.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

PROGRAMS—REQUEST FOR FUNDS

Hon. Robert Muir: I should like to ask a question of the Acting Leader of the Government. I do hope he will not take it as notice, because I know that with his background and brilliance he has all the answers at hand. I say that with sincerity.

On Friday of last week the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion took the unusual step of appealing publicly to the government in the other place for more funds so that he could fulfil even those commitments made by the previous Liberal government. Does the acting leader concur with the minister that DREE is under-funded, and will he end this practice of exercising restraint on the backs of those who live in Canada's economically depressed regions, such as many parts of Quebec and the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I am grateful for the flattering comments made by the honourable senator. I am sorry to disappoint him if my answer is less brilliant than he anticipated it would be. However, I do not believe the question should be whether I personally agree or disagree. I am sure the question is: What is the government's position on that matter? I will see that that question is passed on to the appropriate authority.

Senator Muir: I should like to ask a supplementary question. I think it is unfortunate that we have three cabinet ministers, or are supposed to have three cabinet ministers, in this chamber and they are not here. If we are going to sit here all night and ask questions, and some Charlie McCarthy—not the acting leader of the house—just stands up and plays a record saying, "I'll take it as notice; I'll take it as notice," it would be just as well if we adjourned.

To continue with my supplementary question, I wonder if the acting government leader would advise me if he is aware that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion said last Friday:

> Third, perhaps I could appeal to members in all corners of the House, including the Prime Minister and all other ministers and the official opposition, to help me arrive at means—

By which he meant money, as is obvious from the previous part of his statement.

> —to help Canadians, wherever they live, achieve equal opportunity.

That is at page 653 of Hansard of the other place. At page 654 the minister is reported as saying:

> So, I am really very strapped with the financial constraints I have. Even if we do not answer or do not take one more commitment, the financial resources of the department now are stretched to the limit. I have barely enough just to honour the commitments that were made by our administration before and the hon. member's administration.

He finished up by saying:

> Give me the means—

Which means cash.

> —and my job is to answer positively to all those requests.

I am asking the acting minister, or acting house leader, if he is aware of this very important statement made by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, who says he is very strapped with financial constraints, and if it includes the moneys promised for the modernization of Sydney Steel.

Senator Riley: It is a long preamble.

Senator Muir: I was going to say that there are so many brilliant senators on the other side that they should be filling the positions of those ministers who are not here tonight. I mean that sincerely. There are many senators on the other side who, I am sure, could answer these questions.

Does this mean that the millions that were promised for the Sydney Steel Corporation by the present administration are not going to be forthcoming because of the financial constraints, and that we're down to the bottom of the barrel; that, as the minister has said, there is no more money available?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, to answer both questions, yes I am now aware, and as to the meaning of the statement, I will see that it is passed on to the person who made it. It seems to me he would be the most appropriate person to discuss its meaning.

Senator Muir: A supplementary question: Would the Acting Leader of the Government take it upon himself—forgetting for the moment the ministers who are not here; perhaps they are not coming back, I don't know—to inquire of the government and the ministry concerned, DREE, whether or not the Sydney Steel Corporation is going to receive the moneys necessary for it to continue its operation, and would he bring a report back to this chamber? I ask him kindly to do that.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I shall see that the honourable senator's comments and questions are passed on to the appropriate minister.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

MOTION TO ADJOURN NEGATIVED

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, in view of the obvious disdain which has been demonstrated by the government side for the opposition in this chamber, as exemplified by the absence of all three ministers of the Crown who are here to be answerable to the opposition, I move that this chamber do now adjourn.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the reason for the absence of the three members of the cabinet is, I suppose, known. There is a meeting of a large number of cabinet ministers taking place in British Columbia and that, in turn, is associated with the visit of his Excellency the Prime Minister of Japan to Vancouver and other areas on the west coast. That is the reason for their absence.

If I understand the Rules of the Senate correctly, a motion to adjourn is not debatable, so I do not want what I said taken as debate. This is the third time somebody has referred to the absence of the three ministers, so I thought it only reasonable to advise honourable senators of the reason for that. That is simply by way of explanation. However, as I understand the Rules, a motion to adjourn is not debatable, and it is a matter of putting the question.

The Hon. the Speaker: There is a motion preferred by Senator Balfour that the house do now adjourn. Is there a seconder to the motion?

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Yes.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it the wish of honourable senators to vote on the motion? It is not debatable.

Senator Frith: Put the question.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

And more than two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker: Please call in the senators.

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Norrie	Rousseau
Petten	Thériault
Riley	Wood—33.

The Hon. the Speaker: I declare the motion defeated.

• (2030)

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. Since we cannot get answers to questions from ministers who are not present, and we are unable to get answers from the acting government leader—and I do not fault him for that—and since the government knew we were sitting tonight, I cannot understand why at least one minister is not present. So, tongue in cheek, would it be in order to put questions to those who do not represent the Liberal Party in this house and who voted against the motion to adjourn, such as Senator Manning, or others, and would they answer the questions?

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I do not think there is any point of order involved in this.

HOUSING

ASSISTED HOME OWNERSHIP PROGRAM

Hon. Cyril B. Sherwood: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Deputy Leader of the Government, in the absence of the Minister of State for Economic Development, if he could confirm, or have confirmed, recent reports that in the past three months the number of people who have quit their homes, purchased under the Assisted Home Ownership Program, equals approximately one-quarter of the total number of quits since the program was initiated five years ago?

• (2035)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will take that question as notice. In view of some of the comments that have been made, I think it appropriate to also say that that would clearly have been a question that would have been taken as notice even if we had had all three cabinet ministers here. I think that applies to many of the other questions as well, but certainly not to all of them.

Senator Sherwood: I wonder if the Deputy Leader of the Government would also tell us if the government is intending action in the near future to alleviate this obviously worsening problem.

Senator Frith: I will pass that question on to the government.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

QUESTION PERIOD—ABSENCE OF MINISTERS FROM CHAMBER

Hon. C. William Doody: Obviously, honourable senators, my question has to be directed to the Acting Leader of the Government, the deputy leader. Is it the intention of the government to have some of the ministry represented in the house during Question Period or are we to expect that there will be no representative of the government.

I know that there are 35 or 40 questions now on for which notice was taken while the ministers were present for which no answers have been forthcoming, even though we were told one day last week that a courier was on the way and that we should hold ourselves in expectation that the chap would rush through the door with a forked stick and the message would be passed out to us. That has not happened, obviously.

I wonder if the deputy leader would let us know if indeed it is to be the practice of government not to answer questions. If so, it would save many of us a lot of trouble and some embarrassment and perhaps would help to preserve the dignity of the Senate, because I really do not think this sort of performance is helping any.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, to take the parts of the question in their order as I recall them I can safely say that it is not the intention of this government, nor the intention of the three cabinet ministers who sit in the chamber, that they be absent. It is their intention to be present and to answer questions as they have. I think I can assure honourable senators that the situation that exists this week is unusual and will prove an exception.

Certainly, if I may say so perhaps gratuitously, I have no intention, regardless of what rumours might exist to the contrary, of asking the Senate to adjourn owning to the absence of the Leader of the Opposition and the Deputy Leader of the Opposition. I am sure from my experience in this chamber, which is not that long, that it is also an exception for both the Leader of the Opposition and the deputy to be absent. I think I can assure honourable senators, therefore, that the situation tonight is an exception, apparently on both sides.

[Translation]

Hon. Azellus Denis: On a supplementary, honourable senators. Is it customary to have senators-ministers?

If so, who started the practice of appointing senators ministers?

Senator Choquette: The Conservatives.

[English]

Senator Frith: Certainly, in history it has been an exception overall to have cabinet ministers in the Senate, other than the Leader of the Government in the Senate. So that in that sense, I suppose, tonight is an exception to an exception, but I do think we can safely say that the absence of the three ministers and the Leader of the Opposition and his deputy is an exception and, I am sure, will continue to be an exception.

Senator Denis: You have not really answered my question. The question is who started the business of having ministers among senators.

Senator Frith: Well, that is a matter of history and it depends on how long we go back. In our memories, I suppose, for most of us it started in 1979; but it started before that with other ministries.

Hon. Robert Muir: I have a supplementary for the Deputy Leader of the Government. He is talking about history. I am sure he will agree that it has transpired in years gone by, as it transpired in the last Parliament, and met with the full approval of the present Prime Minister—with the exception of one senator, who was a cabinet minister—and I would think he has taken his lead from what happened in the last Parliament by giving certain senators the responsibility to answer questions. All we want, sir, is to have our questions answered. I have full sympathy for the Deputy Leader of the Government. It must be embarrassing to constantly have to stand up and say "I shall take the question as notice."

● (2040)

Senator Frith: I have already explained that this is an exceptional situation. In reply to the last comment, I do not find the situation embarrassing.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I have a question related to one that I asked a short while ago. Can the Deputy Leader of the Government indicate when we can expect answers to questions that have been taken as notice during the past several weeks? Is there an ongoing process with regard to those questions, or is there no point in our asking questions?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, there is an ongoing process. As a matter of fact, I was not clear whether the honourable senator was making a favourable comment on the fact that last week we had some answers to questions even before the sitting ended that day. I am sure the honourable senator will be pleased to know that the same process continues with regard to providing answers to questions as it did under previous administrations and back into the mist of time. We shall obtain the answers as quickly as possible.

The honourable senator no doubt realizes, as a parliamentarian, that replies are sometimes obtained surprisingly quickly while on other occasions it is more difficult to obtain them. The situation depends on a number of circumstances. I can assure the honourable senator that my colleague Senator Perrault and his staff are working continuously in an effort to try to clean up any backlog that exists.

I do not believe that the backlog which presently exists is untoward, compared with that which existed under previous administrations. I have, for example, answers to four questions. These will reduce the backlog to some extent.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CUBAN REFUGEES—CANADIAN INVOLVEMENT

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government arising from the response given last Thursday to a question asked by me earlier in the month. My question was whether Canada would expand its commitment regarding acceptance of Cuban refugees. The reply, recorded on page 171 of Hansard, indicated that the government is deeply concerned about the matter and would look at the situation in Havana.

My question is: Does that answer, which does not have a "yes," mean "no"?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, no, it does not. As I recall the answer that was given, it was not that the government will look at the situation in Havana, but that it is constantly studying the situation in Havana. That is the present state of the government's activity and concern.

If a policy is developed that would be a direct "yes" or "no" answer to the question, I will see to it that the answer is forwarded to the honourable senator.

Senator Nurgitz: I have a supplementary question: I assume, since the Deputy Leader of the Government is not indicating that there is an expansion of the number, that there is no expansion of the number at this time.

Senator Frith: That is the information I was given, that the situation is still under study, and that no policy for expanding the number exists. That is correct, senator.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO ARGENTINA

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, although this seems to be developing into a blank Monday, I should like to ask this question: May I inquire as to the reported favourable prospect for the sale of the Candu reactor to Argentina. If such is the case, could the Deputy Leader of the Government advise if he has any information on whether the changed situation results from a lowering of the price, or of the safeguards that have been demanded and heretofore insisted upon by Canada?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall take that question as notice. Again I believe that any minister who may have been here tonight would have done the same.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

QUESTION PERIOD—ABSENCE OF MINISTERS FROM CHAMBER

Hon. Allister Grosart: Your Honour, is it your intention now to call for delayed answers? If so, I will hold my question until the conclusion of the delayed answers.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the normal procedure has been that the delayed answers close the Question Period. I do not think there is any strict rule to that effect, but it seems to have become our custom. Perhaps we should hear Senator Grosart's question before I read those replies.

Senator Grosart: My question is really a comment, but under our rules it must be a question. I will therefore put it in this form: Would the Deputy Leader of the Government not agree that the situation in the Senate this evening, this Monday night, is embarrassing to all of us? As a rhetorical question, I do not expect an immediate answer.

It gives me the opportunity, however, to ask some subsequent questions. I have the greatest sympathy for the Deputy Leader of the Government in this difficult situation tonight. My feeling is that it is utterly unfair that he should be put in this position tonight, when the Senate was called to sit this Monday evening, which is not a normal sitting of the Senate. I would ask the deputy leader whether he does not agree, or whether his leader would not agree, that this is an outstanding example of bad management of the affairs of the Senate, the sort of thing that causes the type of comment that has been made tonight. Does he not believe that the management of the Senate could be undertaken in a much better way, so that we are not made to look as absurd, ridiculous and silly as we have been on this occasion.

The Question Period was called, with the expectation that the Senate could expect answers to questions. Because of the limitation of our rules, those questions can only be directed to certain persons such as ministers and the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Does the Deputy Leader of the Government not agree that the situation is ridiculous and that the Senate of Canada, in view of the criticism that has been levelled in many quarters, should not again be made to look as ridiculous as it is tonight.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Grosart: I am not commenting; I am asking questions, under our rules. I would prefer not to ask any further questions in this atmosphere. I have put my question and I hope it will be conveyed to those who have the responsibility for the management of the Senate. It is a ridiculous situation for the Senate to be placed in this evening.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not find the situation embarrassing, and I do not agree that the Senate is being made to look ridiculous. I was a trifle embarrassed by the motion for adjournment, but not seriously so.

Let us look at what has taken place tonight that apparently is such an embarrassing and ridiculous situation. We have covered our order paper. We have placed on the order paper business that would have been placed under more normal circumstances. A very large percentage of the questions that were asked during this Question Period would have been taken as notice anyway. As for the fact that we are sitting here on a Monday night, that is not, in my view, an indication of bad management. The suggestion that we should sit tonight came from the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, Senator Flynn. I thought it was a good suggestion, and I still think so. I am not at all embarrassed that we are sitting tonight, and it seems to me that honourable senators on the other side have asked good questions, many of which, as I say, would have been taken as notice in any event.

We have already accepted the fact that to sit when none of the three cabinet members are in the Senate is an exception.

My experience is that honourable senators are all exceptional people, and I think it is understandable that they may be required to do exceptional things from time to time, as they have been tonight. When one is asked to do something exceptional one should do it with style, restraint and responsibility—qualities which have mostly characterized our sittings so far.

I think we should now get on with our business, and not adjourn, or in any other way suspend our activities simply because of the absence of the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition, his deputy, and the three cabinet ministers, since we all accept that that is an exceptional situation.

I will now carry on doing exactly what I would be doing if those cabinet ministers and leaders on the other side were here, namely, giving some delayed answers.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING FOR ADULTS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Senator Tremblay's question of April 17, 1980, was in two parts, as follows:

> —first, does the phrase "critical trade skills" imply a value judgment on the non-critical nature of the skills on which OTA has been mainly centred up to now, and if so, on which studies or criteria is that value judgment based?
> Secondly, in the choice of the critical trade skills which OTA could now emphasize, will the provinces be involved, and will their involvement be instrumental or secondary?

The answer is as follows.

> 1. Under the Canada Manpower Training Program (implemented under the Adult Occupational Training Act), adults may receive training in a wide variety of skills and occupations. Within a given budget, regional officials of the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission and their provincial counterparts jointly determine the types of courses and the number of training places to be made available. It is done on the basis of labour market needs.
> The Commission's Critical Trade Skills Training initiative is directed towards an expansion in industrial training in higher level blue-collar skills where Canadian training capacity at present is substantially underdeveloped in relation to the occupational needs of the economy. The occupations are termed "critical" because of the high skill levels involved and because of the need to take specific measures to secure adequate supplies of such workers within Canada to maintain and develop Canadian industry—particularly the manufacturing sector.
> 2. The process of designating trades and occupations for the purpose of the Critical Trade Skills Training initiative not only involves the commission and the provinces, but the private sector—labour and management—as well. Judgments are made jointly, in a regional context, and on the basis of labour market information, jointly prepared by commission and provincial officials.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

DESECRATION OF CANADIAN WAR GRAVES IN FRANCE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): The Honourable Senator Marshall asked the following question on April 29 relating to the desecration of Canadian War Graves in France:

> Honourable senators, I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government. Recently 22 Canadian war graves of Jewish veterans were desecrated in Chateau Brettevielle, France. Representations in connection with that shocking vandalism were made to the Minister of Veterans Affairs by the Canadian Jewish Congress.
> I would ask the deputy leader to inquire as to what action the Department of Veterans Affairs is taking to repair those graves and what action the government is taking in terms of official representations to the Government of France concerning this very shocking incident.

The answer, from the minister, is as follows:

> Work teams from the Commonwealth War Graves Commission, of which Canada is a contributing member, undertook an immediate clean-up operation of the damaged area. Temporary grave markers have been installed pending the erection of the new permanent headstones. These have been ordered and will be put in place as soon as possible.
>
> Official apologies to the people of Canada were immediately extended by the head of Veterans Affairs Secretariat in France, as well as from the mayor of the town of Brettevielle.
> I am satisfied that this was an isolated incident and that the good citizens of Brettevielle, and indeed other areas of Normandy, continue to honour and respect Canadian war graves as was demonstrated to the Canadian delegation which visited the area to mark the thirty-fifth anniversary of D-Day last June.

U.S.S.R.—ARREST OF DR. ANDREI SAKHAROV—OFFICIAL PROTEST BY CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): The following question was asked by the Honourable Senator Haidasz on April 23:

> —I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether the Canadian government has forwarded an official protest following the arrest, degradation and internal exile by the U.S.S.R. of the eminent scientist, leading human rights activist and Nobel Peace Laureate, Dr. Andrei Sakharov, who dared to condemn the U.S.S.R. intervention in Afghanistan?

The answer is as follows:

> On January 23, 1980, the former government issued a statement protesting the measures taken against Dr. Sakharov. In the weeks that followed, the question of his internal exile was raised by Canadian officials on various occasions with their Soviet counterparts. However, no formal protest has been forwarded to the Soviet authorities.

NATIONAL UNITY

THE CONSTITUTION—MEETING OF PREMIERS OF WESTERN PROVINCES

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I now come to a question by the Honourable Senator Asselin on national unity. The question is as follows:

> Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government. At the conclusion yesterday of a meeting of the four western premiers held in Lethbridge, a call went out for a permanent conference of first ministers to deal with the Constitution, with the first meeting to be convened soon after the Quebec referendum. I should like to know whether the government is receptive to the request of the four western premiers for such a conference?

The answer is as follows:

> The federal government has not heard of a request to have a permanent conference of first ministers to deal with the Constitution. Nor has there been any formal communication with the government in regard to constitutional reform arising out of the recent conference of the premiers of the provinces of Manitoba, British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Alberta.
> We have, however, received texts of communiqués and have noted the wish expressed in one of them that a meeting of the continuing committee of ministers on the Constitution (CCMC) be convened by the federal government soon after the Quebec referendum, and in that way to resume the constitutional review process.
> As honourable senators are no doubt aware, on April 24 the Prime Minister was asked a similar question during a press conference. His reply was that in the event of a "no" vote in the forthcoming referendum there would be a need to continue the constitutional conferences as soon as possible. As well, he expressed the hope that, with a "no" vote, Mr. Lévesque would feel that he must participate in earnest in these conferences.
> In the hypothetical case of a "yes" vote in the referendum, the Prime Minister stated that it would have to be determined whether the Premier of the Province of Quebec would be willing to participate in a federal-provincial conference on the renewal of federalism. If Mr. Lévesque refused, it would have to be decided whether a conference could be held without him. However, such a decision could only be made at the time.

Those are the answers I have been furnished with today, honourable senators.

[Senator Frith.]

THE SENATE

NEWSPAPER REPORTS—QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I had other questions, but I am not going to pose them. I rise, really, on a question of privilege, if I may.

I am not here to try to lecture the brilliant men and women whom I see sitting around this chamber, and who have served their country in peace and war in provincial legislatures, in the federal cabinet and the House of Commons. They are brilliant people, and they are to be found all over this chamber.

This being so, one wonders why some journalist can come out of university and after two weeks on the Hill write terrible things about the Senate of Canada and the other place as well. It seems that such people become immediate experts.

I look at the report presented recently by Senator Croll, and other reports of committees of this house over the years, from which some of the best legislation in the world has been initiated. Then we have this unfortunate incident tonight, when there is no one present to answer questions. However, I must applaud the Deputy Leader of the Government for his brave front, and the manner in which he approached this situation.

I look around and I see so many academics, farmers, and others who have served their country for so many years in provincial legislatures, and some as provincial premiers. I do not forget our Speaker, a man who has worked in the field of labour over the years and been responsible for tremendous labour legislation; a man who has organized unions and generally done so much for the labour forces of this country. Yet, we come here tonight to elicit information, only to discover there is no one here to answer our questions.

While we are contributing to our country by our presence in this chamber, others will damn this institution. By the non-appearance of the ministers in this chamber tonight, we are pulling down the reputations of this institution.

Some Hon. Senators: Order!

Senator Muir: So many write about this institution, and condemn all of us. Those writers would not even run for dogcatcher because they could not get elected. It is a crying shame that all of us should be castigated in the manner in which we are.

Some Hon. Senators: Order!

Senator Muir: I should like to know, in response to the question of privilege, if the Deputy Leader of the Government can assure us that this will not occur again.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I have nothing to add, honourable senators, to what I said on the subject earlier.

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: I rise on a point of real privilege. This is a privilege that affects us all in this chamber.

This matter was brought to my attention tonight by Senator Bird when she handed me a letter to the editor written by a man named Mason from Larrimac, Quebec, and printed in today's issue of the Ottawa Journal. In this letter he refers to a Canadian Press story which appeared in the Ottawa Journal of April 30 under the heading "Indians propose self gov't," and which reads:

> The only Indian senator is Willie Adams, a Liberal from Fort Chimo, appointed to represent the Northwest Territories in 1977.

That is absolutely ridiculous. If this is the kind of journalism we are going to be subjected to in this country, God help us in the days ahead when we go through a referendum issue, and a constitutional revision.

Of course, I do not have to tell you that Senator Willie Adams is not an Indian, he is Inuit; that Fort Chimo is not in the Northwest Territories—even the geography in the article is cockeyed—and that we have an Indian representative here in the person of Senator Guy Williams.

In a further quote it says that Senator Adams is a "token Indian" in the Senate. I cannot imagine anything more insulting to the dignity of this chamber than to mix up Senator Adams, an Inuit and Senator Williams, an Indian and referring to them as "tokens". We in this chamber know that Senator Williams and Senator Adams are not tokens; they represent their people as nobody else can, and we are proud of them and proud they are here.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

QUEBEC AND MONTREAL PORT WARDENS ACTS

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill S-3, to amend an act to provide for the appointment of a Port Warden for the Harbour of Quebec and to amend an Act to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to the office of Port Warden for the Harbour of Montreal.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

[Translation]

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault moved the second reading of Bill S-4, to amend the Department of Labour Act.

He said: Honourable senators, you realize what you would have missed if we had adjourned earlier.

As this is my first opportunity to speak since the opening of this Parliament, I would like to congratulate the Speaker of the Senate. I agree with all the comments made about those who took part in the debate as well as the remarks concerning the officers of the Senate during this session.

Honourable senators, most of you are already aware of the purpose of the amendment which is to allow the Department of Labour to put an end to the publication of Gazette du Travail and the Labour Gazette. Honourable senators also know that this enabling legislation was first introduced in the House of Commons in December 1978 and again in October 1979. Those steps were based on the conviction that all things considered, the production costs of both publications could not be justified when all departments had been ordered to reduce considerably their expenditures.

The Labour Gazette is therefore yielding, as it were, to the vicissitudes of fashion and technology experienced during its 78 years of existence. For a long time, the Labour Gazette was almost the only specialized publication in labour matters. The development of communication means and the media has, however, removed several of its functions; the labour reports have increased in newspapers; professional publications have appeared and the electronic media are increasingly involved in labour issues since they are a leading part of current events.

In the course of time, the Labour Gazette had become a forum where spokesmen from the labour world were heard, more especially the representatives of unions, employers and universities. It was intended, quite naturally, for a highly specialized and relatively restricted public. It was never intended nor was it expected to become a widely circulated publication. Honourable senators, please allow me a few minutes more so that I can explain briefly the factors which influenced the decision of putting an end to the two publications.

It was estimated that the cost of producing The Labour Gazette and La Gazette du Travail would amount to about $225,000 for the 1979-80 financial year.

By ending the publication at the end of 1978, which made things easier for librarians and archivists, the department saved $83,000 in 1978-79.

The Labour Gazette and La Gazette du Travail had respectively 2,800 and 750 subscribers at that time.

With regard to the The Labour Gazette, that figure represented an increase of 590 subscribers or 21 per cent in the seven months preceding publication of the last issue, the period during which the publicity campaign was held. The subscriber had paid $7.50 to receive 10 issues during the course of the year, while production costs amounted to roughly $60. Justifying a grant of over $50 a subscription was no easy matter.

● (2110)

[English]

Furthermore, the Department of Labour Act does not, in fact, require issuance of a publication such as that into which the Labour Gazette evolved. The original legislation called only for the publishing of statistical records. Although the evolved version of The Labour Gazette carried statistical data, its prime role had become that of a forum. It goes without saying as well, that over the years a vast range of statistics has become available from numerous other sources.

In the Department of Labour a careful study was undertaken to determine if any alternative reductions, in either programs or services, could be made to preserve the vehicle of The Labour Gazette. With regret, however, no alternative was available. Indeed a number of other publications also had to be terminated to meet the expenditure reductions that were demanded.

The decision was made, therefore, after much deliberation, to cease publishing these periodicals. This had the effect of reducing 1978-79 and 1979-80 expenditures by at least the amounts that I have mentioned.

The provision of a forum for independent labour-related opinion as distinct from a vehicle for partisan thought still has, I believe, considerable merit. But whether or not it is a reasonable—or even possible—function of government at such considerable cost to all taxpayers is questionable, especially in a "belt-tightening" period such as we may expect to experience for some time to come into the future.

In the intervening months since this decision was made, there has, of necessity, been no lessening of the real need to continue curbing financial expenditures. Nevertheless, it should be duly noted that the effect of this legislation, while reacting to the restraint demands, eliminates the requirement to publish The Labour Gazette and La Gazette du Travail but does not prevent introduction of periodicals under the same or similar title if circumstances justify such action.

Honourable senators, in the present circumstances, however, I feel there are no other options but to confirm the earlier decision to discontinue these publications.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, debate adjourned.

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Retirement Age Policies, entitled: "Retirement Without Tears", tabled in the Senate on 15th April, 1980.—(Honourable Senator Godfrey).

Hon. Margaret Norrie: Honourable senators, I ask permission to resume the debate on the consideration of this committee report instead of Senator Godfrey.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Norrie: Honourable senators, let me first take this opportunity to express my congratulations to our new Speaker, the Honourable Jean Marchand. I know that a man of his experience and intelligence will most certainly do well, and grace our chamber with good judgment.

[Senator Thériault.]

At the same time, I wish to commend Senator Grosart on the excellent service he gave us during his all-too-short tenure as Speaker.

As mover of the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, Senator Rousseau demonstrated her fine talent as a new member of this chamber. The worthy seconder, Senator Harry Hays, former federal Minister of Agriculture, thrilled us with his rousing account of the rich resources in western Canada, and what they mean to the economy of our country if wisely handled.

I am confident that the choice of the "three wise men" of the Senate from western Canada to serve their respective provinces in the cabinet was a splendid one. They will fill a serious gap in our Liberal representation for the benefit of all Canadians.

Honourable senators, at this time I would like to pay tribute to two senators who have recently passed away.

Senator Hammy McDonald made a distinguished contribution to our debates in the chamber and committees on two great topics particularly, agriculture and NATO. The leadership he showed throughout his career must not be forgotten because both of these fields are top priority today.

I am saddened too that Senator Josie Quart is no longer with us. She was a commanding figure in intelligence and personality. Her co-operation on many issues was an outstanding element in her character.

To the loved ones of these two senators, I extend my sincere condolences. It was an honour to have known them.

Honourable senators, in participating on the debate on the consideration of the committee report, Retirement Without Tears I feel great praise must go to Senator Croll for his initiative, brilliant foresight and ability to spearhead and mastermind this extensive study on retirement age policies. The research and administrative staff have been tireless in their devotion to its success.

Throughout many years we in Canada have had good retirement policies, but due to carelessness and a changing society, which is nationwide, great weaknesses have emerged. This is why Senator Croll was determined to proceed with this study and to propose ways to make retirement a happy and secure period during the advanced years of life. He and his committee investigated and studied dozens of briefs which were presented to them.

Now, the following quote is rather long but I would like to use it because it is important. It shows the focus of the work of the committee.

> The ratios which measure the total dependent population to the size of the working age population are called the dependency ratios. There are various measures but the simplest and most popular one is the population dependency ratio. This gives the ratio of the older and younger dependent population compared to the remainder of the population. The aging trend is increasing but the total population dependency ratio in Canada is declining. The reason is simply that the size of the young dependent group, unlike the older dependent group, has been declining because of the lower birth rate of the post-war baby boom. This trend is expected to continue. Consequently, the older and younger dependent populations together should actually decrease as a proportion of the working age population, and reach an all-time low by 2011. Only then will the ratio start to climb back up again reaching almost the present level by 2031.

Statistics Canada warns the public that caution is needed in interpreting these trends, because there is a margin of error. It is, however, safe to assume that the aging Canadian population will not be a heavy burden on the working force. When the decreasing burden of the younger group is taken into account, the cost of supporting the total dependent population should be reasonably manageable.

Although the aging of the Canadian population should not be cause for panic, this does not mean that the economy will not face difficult times of problem adjustment. There will be problems of diverting the savings from lower education costs to increased expenditures required for social security and public pensions. The closing of schools and the laying-off of teachers will create serious hardships, but this appears to be inevitable. The tax revenue that is used to help finance education comes partly from municipal taxes and partly from provincial taxes. The tax revenue that is used for social security comes mainly from federal taxes. This change of tax revenue will probably cause a bit of trouble also, so the burden of economic dependency is a reality.

The legacy of earlier times persists today, and women, particularly elderly women, are often treated unfairly by their male counterparts. This is the area that disturbs me greatly. I am not a radical "women's libber", but I do get extremely disturbed by the way women are ignored in their retirement quotas under private pension plans, and in the allotment given to an elderly woman when her husband dies. It is either nothing or an unbelievably small amount to meet her needs. I know many ladies in these circumstances, and it is cruel and unfair. We must not tolerate such situations. Senator Bird spoke ably on all these details and I will not bore you with repetition. The fact remains that it must be corrected by emergency measures.

Ever since 1927 the federal government has been involved in old age pensions. The amount then was only $20 for those of 70 and over; the federal government paid 50 per cent and the provinces managed the administration. Over the years the sum had to be increased in many ways, and by 1967 some low income people needed more, so the guaranteed income supplement was introduced. The amount received was subject to an income test. In 1975, indexing for the spouse's allowance was brought in and examined quarterly during the year. By 1979 the old age security pension was $179-odd, and the guaranteed income was $146-odd; the spouse's allowance was $301.

The Canada Pension Plan was introduced in the mid 1960s. It is supposed to provide workers with a guaranteed pension based on a pattern of their previous earnings. The Canada Pension Plan is universal, but anyone can opt out if they have similar plans, as Quebec has, for instance. However, there must be close co-ordination with Quebec, as it is called the Canada-Quebec Pension Plan. The benefits are now available at the age of 65 so as not to discourage anyone who wants to work from doing so. The elderly are working more and more in the labour force. This report emphasizes freedom of choice in retirement, and before the actuarial adjustment the pension fund will not suffer if someone decides to retire before the traditional age of 65.

One important item, in particular, in protecting those with private pension plans, as a recommendation in the report, is that the provinces and the federal government take appropriate action to require all private pension plans under their jurisdiction to disclose to participants how their funds are being invested and how they are performing.

There are many more items worthy of discussion, but I will close now, hoping that someone else will continue later. This report is ambitious and noble. We have the finest country in the world, and our aim should be, as I think it is, to benefit all classes, regardless of sex, race, religion and those in different financial circumstances. The pride of Canada is at stake, and we do not want our beloved people to be needy.

We may be inundated with boat people. I hear that the Florida coast is black with refugees coming from Cuba. We ask why.

Food is needed and our peace is at stake. We need great men and women to show that the world's happiness and security can be achieved if we have co-operation and love in our hearts. The enormity of solving our future problems will tax all our abilities. This haven of greatness is within our reach and our grasp if we choose our top priorities well.

Honourable senators, this report, Retirement Without Tears, is a great step in the right direction.

On motion of Senator Croll, for Senator Godfrey, debate adjourned.

CANADIAN AND EUROPEAN PARLIAMENTS

SEVENTH INTERPARLIAMENTARY MEETING OF DELEGATIONS—REPORT PRINTED AS AN APPENDIX—INQUIRY STANDS

On the Inquiry of Senator Macquarrie:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Seventh Interparliamentary Meeting of Delegations from the Canadian and European Parliaments held at Ottawa from 25th to 30th November, 1979.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I do not wish to speak to my Inquiry this evening, but I should like to follow a precedent set by Senators Molson and Molgat during the last Parliament and ask leave to have the Report of the Seventh Interparliamentary Meeting of the Delegations of the Canadian and European Parliaments printed as an appendix to today's Hansard, and tomorrow I will address the house on this subject.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators that the report be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see Appendix "B", p. 194)

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 8 p.m.

APPENDIX "A"

(See p. 177)

ADDRESS of
HIS EXCELLENCY MASAYOSHI OHIRA
Prime Minister of Japan to Both Houses of Parliament in the HOUSE OF COMMONS CHAMBER, OTTAWA on Monday, May 5, 1980

The Prime Minister was welcomed by the Right Honourable P. E. Trudeau, Prime Minister of Canada, and thanked by the Honourable Jean Marchand, Speaker of the Senate.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Hon. members of the Senate and the House of Commons are happy to welcome His Excellency Masayoshi Ohira, Prime Minister of Japan, and Mrs. Ohira.

[English]

Excellency, we are deeply moved by the honour you do us of addressing this joint meeting of members of the Senate and of the House of Commons.

[Translation]

I call upon the Right Hon. the Prime Minister of Canada to introduce our distinguished guest.

[English]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Prime Minister of Japan, Mr. Speaker of the Senate, Madam Speaker of the House of Commons, members of the Parliament of Canada.

On behalf of the people of Canada and of their parliamentary representatives, I have the honour to extend to you, Mr. Prime Minister, to Mrs. Ohira, to Foreign Minister Okita and to all the members of your entourage, a most cordial welcome.

This is indeed an historic moment. I note with pleasure and pride that you are the first holder of the high office of Prime Minister of Japan to address the Parliament of Canada. Your presence in this Chamber is a living expression of the importance of Japan and Canada to each other, and of the mutual respect and friendship which animates the relations between our countries.

[Translation]

There are present today, Prime Minister, men and women representing the people of every part of Canada. Their presence, as members of the House of Commons and the Senate, symbolizes not only the unity of our country, but also the traditions of parliamentary democracy which are so deeply imbedded in our way of life.

The people of Japan share this commitment to a democratic system, and in recent years there have been increasing contacts between our parliamentarians. This friendship can only add to understanding between our peoples: and I am inclined to think, Prime Minister, that such exchanges are likely to become more frequent and more valuable for both our countries.

When we look at Japan, Canadians see many things. We see a country of many dimensions and contrasts: the tranquility and timeless beauty of the temples and shrines in Kyoto; the industrial might and dynamism of modern Osaka. We see a country whose economy is the great success story of our times. We see a country whose rapid economic adjustments in recent years attest to the remarkable resourcefulness and adaptability of the Japanese people. Most importantly, we see a friend.

Prime Minister, the inherent strength and breadth of our relationship has made it an increasingly vital force in contemporary Canadian life. Japan has become our second largest trading partner. Nonetheless we remain convinced that the full potential of relations between our two countries is far from being realized. As we begin the decade of the 1980's, I invite our respective people to focus their attention on gaining a better understanding of one another's culture and institutions, so that we may add to the variety and quality of our friendship.

Canada values Japan as a nation which realizes, as we do, that the countries of the world have never been more mutually dependent than they are today. Yet the world lurches from crisis to crisis. The rule of international law is being challenged. The immunity of diplomatic persons and premises is being violated. International economic life is subject to increasing strains and pressures. In our meeting this morning it was very much evident that we shared a strong determination to resolve these problems, and to work more closely together in our pursuit of that goal.

[English]

We agree that it is no longer possible, if indeed it ever was, for countries to create their own individual solutions to problems which are essentially global. We agree as well that the time when short-term, piecemeal responses could exert any real impact is long past.

Furthermore, the governments of both Japan and Canada are acutely conscious of the leadership demanded of us as members of the Summit group of major industrialized democracies. The world community rightly looks to us for effective solutions to the political and economic crises of our times.

The energy crisis, for example, crosses all international boundaries and has destroyed the myth that geopolitical and economic problems could be treated as if they were distinct, as if they were merely regional.

In co-operation with our Summit partners, we must help the world to build a stronger and steadier foundation for the home occupied by the family of mankind. That is why these few days of bilateral consultations, prior to the Venice Summit meeting in June, take on an added dimension of importance.

In the exercise of our shared responsibility toward the larger global community, both Canada and Japan have a common interest is strengthening relations among all our neighbours in the Pacific world.

During our discussions today, Prime Minister, you were kind enough to share with me your insights into the problems and potential of the Pacific community, your assessment of the prospects for greater co-operation in the Pacific region in the years ahead.

Canada is eager to be a full partner in that progress.

It is Canada's great interest in the Pacific community of nations, of which we are increasingly conscious of being a member, that will help to bring us closer together in the years ahead.

It is our great interest in Japan itself, in the accomplishments of its people, and in our potential for working together to build a better world, that prompts us to extend a warm welcome to you, Sir, the Leader of the Government of a great and friendly nation.

It is therefore a great pleasure to invite you to address this Special Session of the Parliament of Canada, convened in your honour.

His Excellency Masayoshi Ohira (Prime Minister of Japan): Right Honourable Prime Minister, Honourable Speaker of the Senate, Honourable Speaker of the House of Commons, Honourable Members of the Senate, Honourable Members of the House of Commons and distinguished guests.

It is my great pleasure to be here this afternoon. I am indeed grateful for the honour you gave me to speak, the first time for a Prime Minister of Japan, before the distinguished members of the Canadian Parliament.

Ever since my last visit to Canada in 1974, I have always wished to return. On this trip, I have mustered my courage to deliver my speech in English. I ask for your indulgence if my accent does not quite sound Canadian.

I only regret that the time for preparation was a bit too short for me to try to learn French as well. Excusez-moi.

Today, I should like to focus my remarks on the nature of co-operation required of Canada and Japan. While our two nations have diverse and contrasting features in many respects—in their cultural background, historical heritage, land, natural endowment, and ethnic make-up—we have also much in common: we share our belief in democracy and freedom; we are committed to the principle of free and open economy; and we possess similar objectives in our respective efforts to build a just and peaceful international community.

I, therefore, believe that there exists a basis for a broad co-operative relationship to be developed between our two countries beyond the economic relations which are already growing in both scope and intensity every year.

The 1980s saw its opening in turmoil. The events in Iran and Afghanistan highlighted the kind of challenges that we face in the present multipolar world.

We respect the cause of the Iranian revolution and have a sincere desire to expand and strengthen our ties of co-operation with this important country in the Middle East. We cannot, however, tolerate the continued holding of American diplomats as hostage, not only because this unlawful act is unacceptable from any humanitarian point of view, but it constitutes a serious threat to the basic order of the international community.

It is for this reason that, while urging the United States to continue to act with patience and restraint, we have given our full support to the international efforts through the United Nations, repeatedly made our position clear to Iran that the hostages must be released immediately, and, more recently, joined with the nine European Community countries to take certain concerted steps towards Iran to urge them to cease their unlawful act.

Japan intends to act towards the early and peaceful resolution of the hostage issue in co-operation with other like-minded countries as a responsible member of the international community. I know that Canada takes the same position on this issue and I should like to pay my sincere tribute to the dramatic and courageous role Canada played in January.

The military intervention by the Soviet Union in Afghanistan is another issue of global significance not only because of its flagrantly illegal character but because of its geopolitical implications as well. Thus, the issue calls for concerted responses by those members of the world community who are seriously concerned about the maintenance of international peace and stability. We take peace seriously and we cannot but condemn what the Soviet Union is doing in Afghanistan.

Japan, therefore, has repeatedly called for the immediate withdrawal of the Soviet forces from Afghanistan. We have taken concrete measures to demonstrate our disapproval of such Soviet action. We will continue to make our best efforts in concert with other like-minded nations in order to contribute to an early resolution of this serious situation. And here again, I am very much impressed and encouraged by the Canadian initiatives in expressing your deep dedication to the cause of international peace.

New challenges come not only from political issues but also from the economic front.

The first and foremost is the question of energy. Energy holds the key to a healthy and stable development of world economy in the 1980's and beyond it towards the twenty-first century. One of the most immediate tasks facing us is the conservation of oil. This benefits both producers and consumers. Japan has been making an effort to reduce the consumption of oil; between 1973 and 1978, while Japan's gross national product expanded by 19.6 percent, we managed to keep down the growth of the total use of energy to only 5.7 per cent and its use of oil to 0.7 per cent. We are also endeavouring to diversify the sources of oil supply and to facilitate the development of alternative sources of energy. I know Canada is at the forefront in developing new sources of energy, for instance, in the production of synthetic fuel, and utilization of solar energy and biomass. We are watching your efforts with admiration and I believe that there exist ample opportunities for us to co-operate together in this field. It is also my belief that the fruits of our research and development for conservation of energy and for development of alternative sources of energy should be made available to all the countries including developing nations.

Inflation is no less serious a challenge, and an enemy to our economic prosperity. We have recently introduced a comprehensive set of anti-inflation policies and are carrying out a determined fight against inflation. Through its vicious effects, inflation deprives national economies of their vitality and will definitely hamper our efforts to pursue steady economic growth. As inflation is internationally infectious, we should co-operate together with other industrialized democracies to curb this malicious problem.

None of the major economic problems, including the two I have just mentioned, can be dealt with effectively by isolated measures of any single country, but requires concerted efforts by all the major economies. It was precisely out of such spirit of co-operation, that the Summit meeting of major industrialized countries was born. The Japanese Government appreciates your active and constructive contribution in this regard, and wishes to continue our co-operation at the Summit meetings and in other fora.

Our co-ordinated efforts in managing both domestic and world economies are naturally of crucial importance. They alone, however, will not suffice. Progress in science and technology is essential to maintain the dynamism of the economies of the industrialized democracies and of the entire international economy. Canada is one of the countries that have the capacity and potential to lead the world in this most rewarding and yet most demanding field. Japan has also been doing much, and I am therefore certain that co-operation in the fields of science and technology will further enrich our relations.

Another area of international activities where our co-operative efforts can be very fruitful is economic co-operation with developing countries. Our long-term prosperity hinges, to a great extent, on the future of the developing countries. We know from experience that the development of human resources constitutes the basis for self-reliant nation-building efforts, and we attach importance to strengthening such basis through our assistance. We pledged in 1978 to double our official development assistance in three years, and we believe that we shall be successful in our endeavour. We are also making greater efforts to soften the terms and improve the ratio of ODA to GNP.

Canada, I know, has consistently been playing a leading role in coping with the North-South problem. For instance, the late Mr. Pearson's report, "Partners in Development", set the direction of international economic co-operation.

As an Asian country, we attach particular importance to Asia in extending our economic assistance. In this connection, we highly appreciate Canada's generous policy for the resettlement of the Indo-Chinese refugees, to which we, on our part, are making a substantial financial contribution. This program of yours is a noble humanitarian deed that also contributes to the peace and stability of the Asia-Pacific region.

The Asia-Pacific region contains some of the most dynamic economies in the world today. I believe that to promote cooperative relationships among the countries at the rim of the Pacific will contribute to peace and prosperity of the region. I feel that the Canadian and Japanese people have particularly important roles to play in strengthening the ties of friendship and co-operation in this region. I have no doubt that the Asia-Pacific region, which Prime Minister Trudeau once called "The New West", will benefit greatly from active Canadian participation.

We can be proud of the achievements we have made in recent years in the relations between Canada and Japan. The trade between us has grown five times in the past decade, and Japan is the second largest trading partner of Canada. We maintain close consultations on political issues, and the exchanges in cultural and academic fields have also increased, building on the foundation consolidated by the Cultural Agreement signed in Tokyo between Prime Minister Trudeau and the then Prime Minister Miki. But this is only a beginning. The horizons that we share extend much further.

Recent events demonstrate, in a convincing way, the imperative need for closer co-operation and co-ordination among the industrialized democracies. I believe that both Canada and Japan have useful and constructive roles to play as we share a common vision of the world we desire to shape in the new decade and beyond.

Today, I had extensive and extremely fruitful talks with Prime Minister Trudeau on a number of issues of mutual interest. As a result, I am convinced more than ever that Canada and Japan are not just neighbours across the Pacific but are really close friends sharing common concerns and interests.

We are both pursuing prosperity for our own people. But I often realize, and feel that we are not just seeking success or achievement in terms of statistical figures. The rich life that we strive for is a life that rewards us with deeper satisfactions. We strive to create a world where our children and grandchildren can feel proud to be born into.

I know that Canada offers a very rewarding and rich life to its people. I am also aware that this is the fruit of your cultural, social and economic heritage, and of your democratic tradition. We in Japan similarly benefit from the efforts of our forefathers, and I believe it is our duty to enrich this heritage and pass our achievements on to our future generations. Let us co-operate together in addressing this momentous task.

Thank you. Merci.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Speaker of the Senate): Mr. Prime Minister Ohira, Mr. Prime Minister of Canada, Madam Speaker, Your Excellencies, distinguished members of the Senate and of the House of Commons, ladies and gentlemen.

If I may, Mr. Prime Minister, I would like to say on behalf of my colleagues of the Canadian Parliament that it is a great honour for us to receive you here today. The fact that for the first time we have invited the Prime Minister of Japan to speak at one of our rare joint sittings shows how important our relationship with your country is to us. I am certain that the address you have given today will inspire us and encourage us to pursue our efforts to meet the objectives of co-operation that we have set for ourselves.

[English]

Mr. Prime Minister, detailed discussions will be held between yourself and the Canadian counterparts of your delegation on bilateral and multilateral issues which are of interest to both our countries. We anticipate great results from these contacts and exchanges, and I am convinced you share our expectations.

The ideals we share give a particular significance to our relations, and carry us forward on the road of an increasingly closer co-operation between our two countries.

Your presence here today is more than an event, it is the living symbol of our common faith in the human values proper to democratic societies. When strong international tensions threaten the world balance, it is most important that, through our concerted efforts in co-operation with friendly nations, we make sure that peace is safeguarded and world order respected.

[Translation]

Could the noblest objective of societies like ours be anything else but to bring more happiness to mankind? I am firmly convinced that this is our quest, both in Tokyo and in Ottawa. I know, Mr. Prime Minister, that the quality of life is one of the major concerns of your government. In the post-industrial era, our societies will have to adapt to new technologies which could either enrich or dehumanize the world. Like yourselves, we choose enthusiastically to remain hopeful that life on earth will be increasingly fulfilling for its inhabitants. We shall have to make full use of our imagination and creativity.

In many respects, your nation can serve as an inspiration for us in deciding the best way to react to the need for change while preserving the most valuable elements of our heritage.

I trust that on your return to Tokyo, Mr. Prime Minister, you will transmit to your colleagues of the Diet the best wishes of Canadian parliamentarians and our desire to maintain close, friendly and beneficial relations with your people. The ideals and aspirations we all share are ripe with the best promises for the future. In conclusion, let me extend my best wishes for a pleasant visit and a happy return trip.

Madam Speaker: Mr. Prime Minister, we are pleased and honoured by your visit. We listened with utmost interest to the message you gave us on behalf of your Parliament. It was an eloquent expression of your and your people's feelings for this country.

There are indeed ties that bind us and make us co-operate in building a prosperous world with institutions emphasizing the principles of fraternity and freedom examplified in Japan.

In today's universe where distance is abolished, we can easily join together and address that common task of uniting men and women with a common humanistic ideal. The maintainer of a long and rich civilization, your country generously brings us the resources of its culture and thought. It is our wish that such ongoing and increasing exchanges enhance the respect of our fellow Canadians for your people and move them to follow it on the road to arts, science and technology.

[English]

The presence among us of your official delegation consisting of hon. members of your House of Representatives and of your House of Councillors is also an honour to us. We wish to express to them our highest respect and esteem. Your Excellency may be assured that we are grateful for the opportunity we are given to meet those who work with you for the well-being of the Japanese people. We hope this visit will pave the way to further meetings which will enable us to share our experience of parliamentary democracy and lead us beyond our national frontiers to the exciting world of the universal man.

Listening to what you were saying a few moments ago, I recalled the diversity and beauty of your country, with its dynamic and industrious people. I felt the attraction of a nation rich in history and great achievements.

I thank you for having, through your presence, sir, brought us something of your radiant country.

[Translation]

Mr. Prime Minister, I would like to repeat the thanks of senators and members of this House, and I would ask Your Excellency to express our feelings of sympathy and affection to all your countrymen.

Let me now say that this House stands adjourned.

CANADIAN AND EUROPEAN PARLIAMENTS

SEVENTH INTERPARLIAMENTARY MEETING OF DELEGATIONS
OTTAWA, CANADA, NOVEMBER 27 and 28, 1979

Discussions between the two delegations included bilateral fisheries and nuclear problems, international energy questions, the problem of refugees and a variety of bilateral initiatives emerging from the Joint Cooperation Committee's (JCC) activities under the Framework Agreement. Question period topics encompassed the powers of the new European Parliament, the impact of enlargement on the European Community (EC), assessments of the international political situation and the Canadian political and constitutional situation.

List of delegates

a) Canadian Delegation
From the Senate: Senator Heath Macquarrie, co-chairman, Senator Renaude Lapointe, Senator Charles McElman, Senator Arthur Tremblay.
From the House of Commons: Mr. G. W. Baldwin, co-chairman, Mr. Robert Bockstael, Mr. Pierre Bussières, Mr. Bill Campbell, Mr. Bob Corbett, the Hon. Roméo Leblanc, Mr. Don Munro, Mr. John Reimer.

b) European Delegation
Sir John Stewart-Clark (U.K.) Chairman, Mr. Kai Uwe von Hassel (Germany) first vice-chairman, Mr. Carlo Ripa di Maena (Italy) second vice-chairman, Mr. Louis Baillot (France), Mr. Giovani Barbagli (Italy), Mrs. Luisa Cassanmagnago (Italy), Mrs. Eileen Desmond (Ireland), Mr. Wilhelm Helms (Germany), Mr. Finn Lynge (Denmark/Greenland), Mr. Robert Moreland (U.K.), Mr. Jean Oehler (France), Mr. James Provan (U.K.), Mrs. Marie-Jane Pruvot (France), Mr. Karl Schön (Germany), Mr. Joannes Verroken (Belgium), Mr. Protogene Veronesi (Italy).

Summary of Working Sessions

Question Period opened with a wide diversity of European viewpoints expressed in response to a Canadian question on the characteristics and powers of the new directly-elected European Parliament. The delegates' opinions, sometimes cutting across party affiliations, ranged from enthusiastic support for a significant increase in powers for the European Parliament and the evolution of some form of supranational accountability system to the opposing minority view which would curb the Parliament's powers. In any case the new Parliament intended to make better use of the powers already existing in the Treaty of Rome and had already moved to try to cut dairy subsidies. One member thought Parliament should be able to put its case on budgets directly to the Council of Ministers through the president of the Parliament or the Chairman of Committees. As for legal powers, a sub-committee had been set up to look at constitutional reforms, including the possibility of a second chamber. The Commission itself had begun to take the new Parliament more seriously recognizing its different quality as well as its assiduous and well-prepared committees. The problem of a permanent site for Parliament to avoid the troublesome shifts between Luxembourg and Strasbourg remained a controversial topic, with Brussels mentioned as an alternative.

The Canadian side then asked what the impact of the proposed enlargement of the Community would be with Greece scheduled to become a member in 1981 and negotiations for membership already under way with Portugal and Spain. Clearly there was apprehension over the economic impact, particularly in the southern agricultural sector with the resultant increases in unemployment. Regional disparities would be increased and where would the required increased monies for the Regional Fund come from? How would the southern Community producers of fruit, vegetables, olive oil and wine be protected? While one delegate stated he was quite opposed to enlargement at this time of crisis in the OECD countries, the majority opinion appeared to be that economic problems should not stop the enlargement process. The aim of the Rome Treaty was to build a new democratic political community in Europe free of totalitarianism and enlargement should continue. Innovative economic measures would be needed to deal with the dislocations, however.

From the European side came an inquiry for a Canadian assessment of the current international political situation, with an added question as to whether Canada was reducing its commitment to Europe. Was the contractual link an imaginary link? Was Canada's relationship to the United States becoming closer? In response the Canadian side made the following points. At the present time, foreign affairs did not rate very high in the Canadian public's concern but it was hoped this situation would be improved by public debate in the upcoming full-scale policy review. There should be no doubt about Canada's continuing commitment to Europe and to NATO, this could be seen in Canada's long-term peacekeeping efforts in Cyprus as well as in its increased defence spending. In the forthcoming policy review, the contractual link undoubtedly would be examined but there would be no attempt to diminish ties with Europe but rather to increase Canada's efforts in the Pacific rim, in the Caribbean and in South America. As for relations with the United States, inevitably an enormous preponderance of Canadian foreign policy was involved with the United States. The strong anti-American nationalist fervour of some years ago had abated. At the moment, Canada was totally supportive of the United States in the present Iran crisis and spurned the idea of rallying to Iran for economic advantage. Regarding the American pressure to enter a continental energy scheme, the Canadian reaction was to resist it and the government had indicated its commitment to pursue its objective for Canada to become self-sufficient in energy by 1990.

The Canadian side, responding to the second European question concerning the recent Canadian political and constitutional developments explained the friction which had developed, particularly since the war, between the federal and provincial levels of government. The federal government had moved into fields not envisaged in the original constitution and differences had developed over the division of powers in these fields. The delegate characterized as 'formalistic' the approach of the former federal government in resisting a revision of the division of powers and proposing changes to the federal institutions only such as the Supreme Court or the Senate. The new government he said had a more pragmatic approach and had made specific offers to the provinces such as Loto Canada and offshore mineral resources. Once the Quebec government has made its case for the referendum, the federal government could react with a clear message to Quebecers as to why they should vote 'no' to sovereignty-association. Another delegate stated the new government had not declared itself on the repatriation of the Constitution, on bilingualism or on the distribution of Canadian resources for the common good of all Canadians. The need for an amending formula in order to revise the Constitution and the difficulty in agreeing to one unanimously were explained. A European delegate questioned whether a too-great decentralization of powers would render the country ungovernable. In addition, the pros and cons of referenda, partial or national, were discussed, comparisons were made with the German federal system and various means of taxing energy profits in Canada were described.

The 1979 activities of the Joint Cooperation Committee (JCC) were discussed. In the absence this year of a finally-approved report from the JCC, the two Canadian officials who had acted as chairmen of the two subcommittees under the JCC briefed the delegation and responded to questions. As an example of the bilateral co-operation stimulated by the framework agreement, Mr. Baudouin referred to the visit by Dr. Shuster of the Commission which had led to the establishment of a co-operative program in science and technology. For his part, Mr. Guérin highlighted the businessmen's mission to Brussels and the Canadian energy bus project. In the joint working groups, there were useful meetings in the aerospace sector, the nuclear/uranium sector and the metals and minerals sector. In the latter field, five areas of co-operation were identified in the asbestos subsector and there is a joint research project underway in blast furnace technology. The E.C. Ambassador to Canada spoke of the reasons behind the Framework Agreement, the Community view of Canada as a source of assured supplies of raw materials in return for access to Community markets. He emphasized the value of the GATT negotiations in resolving many issues and the problems of translating the potential of the bilateral framework machinery into concrete trade results.

Under questioning, officials admitted that access of upgraded Canadian exports to Europe and non-tariff barriers were still a problem. However forest products promised to be a promising area for next year. While the businessmen's trips were pronounced successful, very little in the way of concrete results could be pinpointed. Mr. Guérin described the extensive involvement by Canadian provinces in the activities of the two subcommittees. They had participated as well in meetings with the private sector and made recommendations. In response to a European inquiry as to why the fighter aircraft decision went against the European aircraft, Mr. Guérin maintained that while the machinery of the Framework Agreement had facilitated the European entry being fully considered by Canada, for good reasons including cost and fuel efficiency, the decision had gone against it. As for the failure of CANDU sales in Europe, he attributed that to an appalling lack of information on both sides, now in the process of being corrected. The European side summed up the discussion with the following proposals, mainly for possible Community action:

—contacts should be made with European Community industrial associations to ensure a better exchange of information between businessmen and bureaucrats

—committees in the European Parliament should review possible steps to reduce non-tariff barriers between the EC and Canada

—information on investment opportunities in Canada should be communicated to small businesses in Europe

—EC parliamentary committees should be used to review and promote the activities of the JCC and its subcommittees

—there should be regular communication between the EC Commission and the Canadian Government on one hand and the two parliamentary delegations on the other hand on progress under the Agreement. The EC Ambassador in Ottawa and the Canadian Ambassador to the EC in Brussels could be used as additional channels of communication

—a periodic updating of the progress under the JCC could be communicated to members through the secretariats of the European and Canadian Parliaments.

There was a brief discussion of the Canada-EC nuclear co-operation which is at present governed by the 1978 interim agreement concerning enrichment and reprocessing. By the terms of this agreement, Euratom agreed to notify Canada in advance of its intention to reprocess, store or enrich Canadian nuclear material transferred since December 1974 in order to permit joint consultation on safeguards for such operation. The agreement will require renegotiation as soon as the INFCE study is completed. European investment in Canadian uranium production involves French, West German and British interests. A European spokesman agreed that in the light of the Indian explosion, the Canadian embargo and the 1978 interim agreement were sensible actions enabling a closer look at the problems. Emphasizing the enormous dependence of community countries on imported energy (80 per cent in Italy) he spoke of the unavoidability of the nuclear option including reprocessing.

In response to a European inquiry concerning Canada's success in pursuit of its commitment at the Tokyo Summit, a Canadian delegate said some progress had been made towards reducing to one per cent the annual increase in oil consumption but the Canadian "love affair with the car" was a major problem. Canadian delegates described the tar sands projects as of important assistance in attaining the goal of energy self-sufficiency by 1990.

Discussions then touched on the future of nuclear energy including the question of the relative costs and advantages of the CANDU and the light water systems, the dangers as well as the advantages of the fast breeder reactors, the problem of nuclear waste and the public attitudes of apprehension toward nuclear reactors which had been intensified by the Harrisburg accident. It was suggested that the development of fusion energy might be the subject for a joint co-operative research project with the Community.

The discussion of Indo-Chinese refugees was initiated by a Canadian delegate who described the efforts for these refugees, particularly the recent Canadian sponsorship program. The European actions particularly those of France were also described as well as the social and welfare benefits available in Canada. The main concern on both sides appeared to be how to integrate the refugees into the communities although several on the European side raised the question of whether it would not be better to try to find a home for these 'boat people' in Asia, nearer their place of origin. A Canadian spokesman doubted that this was feasible and was confident that those coming to Canada would be able to integrate into Canadian society.

Bilateral fisheries discussions focussed mainly on two questions: access for Canadian fish products to Community markets and fishing of Canadian salmon off Greenland. The Community delegate stated that the EC was interested in Canada's proposal for access by EC fishermen to Canadian waters in return for easy access to EC markets for Canadian fish. There were, however, requirements that such special access to the EC market must be negotiated under GATT—a fact that had become a real stumbling block. Another problem was that the EC had a higher tariff against Canadian fish products than it had against other third countries including Iceland.

A Canadian delegate agreed that these were the key bilateral differences over what was clearly a diminishing resource. When he had been Minister, a long-term fisheries agreement with the EC had been impossible to attain. He had been the one to first propose access to Canadian waters in return for market access in a long-term agreement but first the bureaucracy and then GATT had foiled this initiative. The result had been the interim agreement which would be subject to renegotiation shortly. As for the lower tariff for Iceland's fish products, he wondered whether this was connected with Iceland's imports of EC manufactured goods. He hoped that political will would find a way to resolve the problem. A EC delegate deplored this higher tariff against Canada and stated he thought a single tariff level should be applied to all third countries.

As for salmon, the Greenland delegate pointed out that the 1190 ton salmon limit imposed arbitrarily on Greenland and Denmark in the early 1970's was unfair considering Canada had a limit of 2200 tons. Greenland small boat fishermen depended on this fishery for a livelihood, not as a sports fishery. Although last year had been a bad year for salmon, the stocks were now replenishing and this year Greenland fishermen had caught their quota in just over three weeks. The salmon were very plentiful. Undoubtedly there was considerable poaching both in Greenland and in Canada. It has been estimated, he said, that 46 per cent of Greenland's salmon taken is of North American origin, which means Greenlanders fish about 18 per cent of North American salmon. The delegate did not think this was an excessive "pasturing fee" considering that the salmon increased in weight by 30 to 40 per cent in Greenland waters. Negotiations with Canada would be held shortly but a Canadian request to limit further the Greenland salmon catch would undoubtedly bring a strong protest, he warned. Greenland is looking for an international salmon convention. The Canadian delegate responded by promising to support the Canadian fisheries minister if he could find a solution to the Greenland small vessel salmon problem.

The question of the Italian ban on sealskins led to a defence of the seal hunt by a Canadian delegate who pointed out that there was no evidence of seals being an endangered species. Nor was the seal hunt a cruel slaughter but a supervised abattoir not so different from that for domestic animals. There was no more reason to refer to 'baby' seals than 'baby' cows, he pointed out, except to play on emotional reactions. In Canada, opinion had shifted in favour of the seal fishermen who earned a livelihood from the seal hunt. The protest movement over seals was losing ground and would probably move on to other issues soon.

Due to lack of time, detailed discussions of other trade issues had to be suspended until the next meeting.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 6, 1980

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled:

Copies of Orders in Council P.C. 1980-1063 and P.C. 1980-1064, dated April 24, 1980, amending Part I of the Schedule to the Hazardous Products Act, pursuant to section 8(3) of the said Act, Chapter H-3, R.S.C., 1970.

Capital Budget of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation respecting loans and investment for the year ending December 31, 1980, pursuant to section 70(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970, as approved by Order in Council P.C. 1980-241, dated January 18, 1980.

Capital Budget of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation respecting furniture, equipment and business premises for the year ending December 31, 1980, pursuant to section 70(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970, as approved by Order in Council P.C. 1980-377, dated February 1, 1980.

Copies of correspondence, dated April 28, 29 and 30, 1980, from the Prime Minister of Canada to all Ministers and Parliamentary Secretaries respecting conflict of interest guidelines.

Report of the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency for the year ended December 31, 1979, including its financial statements and the auditors' report thereon, pursuant to section 31 of the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, Chapter 65, Statutes of Canada, 1970-71-72.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

QUESTION PERIOD—ABSENCE OF MINISTERS FROM CHAMBER

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I see that none of our beloved ministers are here tonight again. May I have some explanation?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in answer to the question of our equally beloved Leader of the Opposition, whose presence was greatly missed last night—

Senator Flynn: Did you miss me more than you missed your colleagues from the cabinet?

Senator Frith: I would say it was about a dead heat, as they might say of the Kentucky Derby.

The ministers who are absent are on public business out west. I believe this evening they are attending a state dinner in honour of His Excellency the Prime Minister of Japan. For the last few days they have also been out there on public business, meeting with members of the Government of British Columbia and others. I expect they will be back tomorrow.

Senator Steuart: They are out winning the west.

Senator Flynn: They won't come back soon then.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, my question is perforce addressed to the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate. I say "perforce", because last night there was a considerable discussion about the fact that the three seats to his left were vacant, and it was pointed out that this was a real deprivation, because it deprived us on the opposition side of the opportunity of directing questions to sources from which we might expect answers. Not that we would expect them from our experience of recent times, but we ought, in the course of nature, to be able to expect them.

I was interested to hear the Leader of the Opposition this evening talk about our "beloved" colleagues who are now absent. Last night they would not have been addressed as "beloved," but of course absence makes the heart grow fonder.

● (2005)

I should like to conclude my preamble to this question by saying that last night, when we commented upon the absence of the three ministers and the difficulty that that imposed upon us in directing questions, we were told that in some way or another that absence was excusable because also absent from their seats were the Leader of the Opposition and the Deputy Leader of the Opposition. Well, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition is not here tonight either, but the Leader of the Opposition is. I would simply like to point out that we on this side are not one whit better off in our ability to direct questions—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Hicks: I think that is unfair.

Senator Donahoe: I repeat. We, on this side, are not one whit better off in our ability to direct questions than we were when the Leader of the Opposition was not in his seat. We were deprived of an opportunity last night, and so was he, but his presence here tonight does not give us any better an opportunity because his absence and the mention of it last night was totally irrelevant. The fact of his absence made no difference because we could not direct questions to him last night when he was absent, and neither can we direct questions to him tonight when he is present.

So I merely say that last night's suggestion that in some way the absence of the three ministers was excused by the absence of the Leader of the Opposition is irrelevant.

Having laid the groundwork for addressing my question to the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate, I should like to ask him whether he is aware of the position taken by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on his recent visit to the province of Nova Scotia where, after discussing mineral rights and their ownership, regulation and control, he assumed unto himself the prerogatives of the Supreme Court of Canada, because he declared, or is reported to have declared, that Nova Scotia's claim to offshore oil was unconstitutional. He might have declared that in his opinion it was unconstitutional, but surely he was not in a position to declare that it was, in fact, unconstitutional.

Senator Flynn: Well, if you are a Liberal minister—

Senator Lamontagne: Is this a speech?

Senator Donahoe: It is not a speech; it is a question. I have tried to explain why I am directing the question to where I do direct it, and I am now trying to explain the nature of my question so as to ascertain something about the attitude of the government.

Senator Petten: Put the question first.

Senator Donahoe: Mr. Lalonde is reported to have said that if the ownership question can be divorced from regulation of the offshore petroleum industry he is ready to discuss "an administrative agreement". Then he went on to say that it looked to him as if there would have to be resort to the courts. Now, of course, resort to the courts is always open when an interpretation is required. There has been resort to the courts on the Pacific coast—

An Hon. Senator: You are making a speech.

Some Hon. Senators: Question.

● (2010)

Senator Donahoe: My question, as honourable senators insist I put the question, is as follows: Is the hard, unyielding, uncompromising attitude expressed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources with respect to the ownership of offshore mineral rights the position of the Government of Canada?

Senator McElman: That is called a seawall.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, first, let me say that I shall pass on to my colleagues how much fonder their absence has made hearts on the other side. I then want to affirm that at no time yesterday did I suggest that the absence of the Leader of the Opposition and his deputy excused the absence of the three cabinet ministers. I did not feel it was necessary to make excuses for the absence of the cabinet ministers sitting in this chamber, nor for the Leader of the Opposition or his deputy. What I did say was that it was clear that last night was an exception, because it was the only time that I can remember when the three cabinet ministers and the leader and deputy leader on the other side were all absent, and I was not making excuses in saying so. Tonight is partly an exception, too, although perhaps less so.

As far as the question is concerned, I do not think there is any doubt, without referring to the particular adjectives used in the question, but that the position of this government is that the legal rights of the Province of Nova Scotia to offshore resources are not absolutely clear. It is the opinion of this government that they do not have the exclusive right to those offshore mineral resources, and that has been expressed by both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

So, I must disavow the adjectives used in the question. With respect to the rest of the question, it is the position of this government, as I understand it, that the question of offshore mineral rights is still in doubt as it applies legally to the Province of Nova Scotia.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, a supplementary to the one by Senator Donahoe. There is talk of renewed federalism and that after the Quebec referendum, there will be a federal-provincial conference to consider the possibility of establishing a new federalism. If it were impossible to reach a political solution with a province on some jurisdiction, would the federal government submit all those cases to a court of justice to have it decide on the jurisdiction between the federal government and the provinces?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, in my humble opinion the position now is that the legal rights are not clear. However, we hope an administrative arrangement will be possible. If not, the provinces and the federal government will have to submit the issue to the courts. However, it is hoped that an administrative arrangement such as mentioned by Senator Donahoe will be possible.

[English]

Senator Donahoe: May I ask a supplementary question relating to the same report of the minister's speech in Nova Scotia, and perhaps I might be permitted to quote it—

Senator Lamontagne: Was it a long speech?

Senator Donahoe: It was not a long one, but it certainly wasn't a very good one for Nova Scotia. The newspaper report reads:

> Lalonde, asked whether Nova Scotia will get a special subsidy to cushion any rise in oil prices, indicated that the federal government will first require an oil-pricing agreement that enables it to afford such things.

There was a proposal, not a new one, from the province for money to help it in the transition from heavy reliance on oil-fired generators, currently turning out about half the power produced in the province, Lalonde said.

That investment would be more than $500 million in the next eight years, just to keep Nova Scotia's electrical rates at their current level 70 per cent above the national average.

My question is: Will the Deputy Leader of the Government admit that the reason Nova Scotia's electrical rates are 70 per cent above the national average is the fact that Nova Scotia's electricity is produced by using offshore oil, the purchase of which was made necessary by the lack of a comprehensive national fuel policy during the time when his government previously occupied the seats of power?

Senator Frith: No, honourable senators, I would not so admit.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, a supplementary question to the one by Senator Asselin.

Is the position of the federal government on the offshore rights the province of Quebec wants to have in the Gulf of St. Lawrence the same as the one vis-à-vis Nova Scotia?

Senator Frith: As far as I know, yes, exactly.

RULES OF THE SENATE

CONDUCT OF QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, I think our whole procedure is out of order. I am looking now at rule 20 dealing with oral questions and it reads as follows:

> 20. (1) When the Speaker calls the question period, a senator may, without notice, address an oral question to
> (a) the Leader of the Government in the Senate, if it is a question relating to public affairs,
> (b) a senator who is a Minister of the Crown, if it is a question relating to his ministerial responsibility, or
> (c) the chairman of a committee, if it is a question relating to the activities of that committee.
> (2) Supplementary questions may be asked.

I think that the whole thing is out of order. I do not think we have the right, under our own rules, to ask a question of somebody who is not the government leader in the Senate or a minister.

Senator Flynn: You have put both your feet in it.

[Senator Donahoe.]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it will be recalled that last night Senator Balfour commenced the Question Period by asking to whom questions could be put. The position we took, apparently with the concurrence of the Senate, was that as acting government leader I would handle the questions or attempt to answer them, and where I was unable to do so I would refer them to the appropriate minister.

Senator Steuart: Honourable senators, I would like to deal with this now. Has the Senate the right, just by a show of hands, to set its own rules aside?

Senator Flynn: If the honourable senator is raising a serious point of order, I have no objection to his asking the Speaker for a ruling. It will be most interesting if the decision should be that in the absence of a minister we cannot put any question to the Deputy Leader of the Government. If that is what Senator Steuart is saying, I do not have any objection, and I shall not even argue the point.

Senator Steuart: I take it seriously, and I would like a ruling.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is the honourable senator raising it as a point of order?

Senator Steuart: Yes, I am.

The Hon. the Speaker: I would refer Senator Steuart to rule 5(d), which reads:

> (d) "Government Leader in the Senate" means the senator occupying the recognized position of Leader of the Government in the Senate or a senator acting for him.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO JAPAN

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, with that ruling in mind I have a question for the deputy leader in his position as Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate. Could he please inform us if the sale of a Candu reactor was high on the list of subjects discussed with the Prime Minister of Japan during his recent visit?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I know no more about that matter than what my learned colleague probably saw in the papers. I imagine it was on the list, but if he would really like to know whether it was high on the list, then I shall pass that question along.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

BOYCOTT OF 1980 OLYMPIC GAMES—ALTERNATIVE GAMES

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, on Wednesday, April 23, when I was speaking to my motion that the Government of Canada should formally support the boycott of the 1980 Olympic Games by the United States, I raised the question of providing alternative Games to allow for competition between all of the boycotting countries. It seems that there has been a considerable amount of editorial comment throughout the country in favour of having some form of alternative Games for those young people who were asked to make some sacrifice.

Could the Deputy Leader of the Government inform us as to what plans, if any, are being made by the government for alternative Games, and when an announcement can be expected?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that is a question which clearly requires a precise answer and I will take it as notice and pass it on.

GRAIN

TWO-PRICE WHEAT

Hon. Martha P. Bielish: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. I am sorry he is not here, but I am certain the minister is aware that, under current pricing structure as set out in the Two-Price Wheat Act, wheat sold for domestic human consumption is considerably below the export market price, which results in rather extensive subsidies provided by the producers to the consumers of the nation. those subsidies can amount to as much as $1 million per week.

This is my question to the minister: Would the minister tell honourable senators whether or not the government is giving any consideration to amending the two-price system so that it will reflect the increased costs of production and more accurately correspond with world prices.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Yes, honourable senators. May I direct Senator Bielish's attention to Order No. 3 of the Orders of the Day, which is the second reading of Bill S-6, to amend the Two-Price Wheat Act. I realize that that does not in any way answer her question, but perhaps the honourable senator does remember that the reason that item has been standing on the order paper is that the minister to whom the question was addressed tonight did, on another occasion, say that he is trying to make sure that he has something to substitute for the present arrangement because Bill S-6, as I understand it, simply repeals present provisions.

Frankly, I too hope that we will be able to deal with that item soon, and my impression is that when we do we will have the answer to the honourable senator's question. I hope that will be soon. In the meantime I will pass her comments along.

● (2020)

NATURAL RESOURCES AND THE ENVIRONMENT

PROPOSED SENATE COMMITTEE

Hon. Cyril B. Sherwood: Honourable senators, prompted by the fact that we have serious pollution problems in our country and because Parliament should be giving such matters consideration, I ask the Deputy Leader of the Government if he and his followers in this chamber have given consideration to the suggestion I made recently that we set up a Standing Committee on Natural Resources and the Environment?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the question of having a committee, subcommittee or special committee deal with those matters is under active consideration. The suggestion that Senator Sherwood has made together with the concerns he has expressed are shared on this side. It is a question of modality, and, yes, we are giving it serious thought.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

PRICE OF 1980 SILVER DOLLARS

The Hon. the Speaker: Are there any delayed answers?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have one answer tonight and one that might be called an interim answer. I have a long answer to a question Senator Bosa put on April 30 concerning the price of 1980 silver dollars. The answer is as follows:

> The concept of a lower price for Canadians has merit and it has been explored on previous occasions by the Royal Canadian Mint. In practical terms, however, it would be very difficult, if not impossible, to manage and it would have detrimental effects on the Mint's commercial relations abroad.
> While the silver dollar, as well as other Canadian numismatic coins, is aimed at the numismatists or coin collectors market, it has also proven attractive and profitable for coin dealers and speculators in Canada and abroad. If the silver dollar or any other of the Mint's products were available at a lower price in Canada than to the coin dealers in Europe or individual collectors in the United States, the difference would of necessity have to be very marginal so as to discourage Canadian buyers from underselling on foreign markets in competition with European dealers or for that matter the Mint.
>
> A few years ago, the European market for Canadian numismatic coins was practically non-existent and today's demand is the result of a concerted marketing effort at substantial costs on the part of the Mint. There would then be no advantage for these people to continue purchasing directly from the Mint as they would undoubtedly be able to purchase at a better price from other Canadian sources. In no time, this would be very prejudicial to the Mint's numismatic coin program and to collectors abroad who would become dependent on Canadian commercial and speculative interests for their supply. A two-tier pricing system would be administratively impractical to control as the flow of numismatic coinage between countries is not restricted.
> Notwithstanding the above, Canadian consumers and private individuals purchasing their numismatic coins directly from the Mint already enjoy a preferential treatment in that it is the policy of the Mint to sell to them at the same price as to commercial dealers and purchasers of large quantities either in Canada or abroad. Over the years, the dealers who purchase coins in large quantities have been asking, and continue to ask, the Mint to change this policy and give them a discount, as is normal practice in commercial dealings in the private sector. Up to now, the Mint has refused but the fact that private individuals buying directly from the Mint pay the same price as dealers constitutes a favourable treatment for them.

● (2025)

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

PROGRAMS—REQUEST FOR FUNDS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): The other question was one raised last night by Senator Muir. I have been asked—I assume more or less on an interim basis—to refer him to the House of Commons Debates for Monday, May 5, at pages 701 and 705. This does not mean that there will be no further answer to the question, but that might perhaps serve, in the interim, as either information or even ammunition.

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, April 30, consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's Speech at the opening of the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament, and the motion of Senator Rousseau, seconded by Senator Hays, for an Address in reply thereto.

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, I do not wish to bore you tonight with a long dissertation, but I feel it incumbent upon me to make a small contribution to the debate on the motion for an Address in reply to the Throne Speech. I am sure honourable senators know me well enough to understand that I do not rise to hear my own voice.

Before proceeding, I should like to congratulate His Honour the Speaker. His Honour brings to the Chair a long and distinguished career in both the private and public sectors. He is a man whom we all know to be dedicated to national unity.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Lang: Notwithstanding whatever limitations his present office may impose upon him, we know that he will continue to make a contribution to that cause throughout the forthcoming months. May we beg his forgiveness as he presides over the personal and collective foibles of his colleagues in this chamber.

I cannot help but make reference to Senator Grosart who preceded our present Speaker in that office. He was relieved of those burdens rather more quickly than most of us expected, but during his brief tenure he displayed all the competence and dedication to office that his predecessors had. I wish to thank Senator Grosart personally for his contribution to this chamber during that period.

[Senator Frith.]

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Lang: To both the mover and the seconder of the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne I offer my congratulations, and also to those who followed. During the course of the debate we have had interesting and illuminating dissertations.

Before proceeding, I should perhaps, like everyone else, relate my remarks to the Throne Speech itself. In that Speech there was, of course, mention of the continuing quest for national unity and the revival of the process of constitutional reform.

In that regard, I should like to refer honourable senators to the excellent speech given by Senator Connolly in this chamber on April 17. Should any honourable senator have missed hearing that speech, I urge him to read Hansard.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Lang: Even if one had heard Senator Connolly speak in this chamber, one should also read the speech in Hansard, because, as always in Senator Connolly's speeches, there is a lot of fine print that one may have missed on first hearing it.

Senator Connolly pointed to the very real issues which we are facing with respect to national unity, and presumably to concomitant constitutional reform involving the abolition of the Senate—and that in the immediate future.

I would like this evening, honourable senators, to pursue the inquiry into that area. Major and sweeping constitutional revision proposals started some 12 years ago, particularly with the Victoria Conference and the Victoria Charter, and even before that if we go back to the Fulton-Favreau formula. However, since 1970 constitutional change, as a prerequisite to national unity, has been to the forefront, not only here in Ottawa, in government and in Parliament, but has been spreading to provincial governments and the private sector.

We have had the report of the Joint Senate-Commons Committee of 1972, the paper prepared for the Canada West Foundation, the report of the Pepin-Robarts Committee, the Ontario Advisory Committee's report on the Constitution, the British Columbia government's paper on the Constitution, and the report of the committee of the Canadian Bar Association. I have probably omitted some. Above all, we had, about two years ago, government Bill C-60, with which I am sure all senators are familiar.

Senator Flynn: We would rather forget it.

Senator Lang: I think I would, too.

During the last 18 months the dust has had sufficient time to settle, and there has been time for the best legal and academic minds to study what has come forward and comment on it. In addition, we have had the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada, defining the powers of the federal government under section 91.1 of the British North America Act with respect to the Senate.

As Senator Connolly pointed out, that decision has set aside certain legal presumptions held by the government—

Senator Flynn: —of the day!

Senator Lang: —and its administrative officials. These presumptions lay at the heart of Bill C-60, and to some extent have characterized the attitude of the federal government to the provinces over quite a few years.

Honourable senators, I referred a few moments ago to the writings of academic and legal authorities over the past year. I would particularly refer you to the essays on constitutional reform contained in the special September 1979 and December 1979 issues of the Canadian Bar Review, and would ask you to indulge me by allowing me to make rather extensive quotations from some of these essays, because I think that to do so will underline the fact that the views being expressed are not my own but, are those of people who have authority, knowledge and wisdom in constitutional matters.

● (2035)

Honourable senators, I should like to quote two outstanding authorities, J. Stefan Dupré and Paul C. Weiler, both at this time Mackenzie King Professors of Canadian studies at Harvard University. They jointly authored an article in the September 1979 issue of the Canadian Bar Review in which they analyzed and dissected the Pepin-Robarts report and came to some closely reasoned conclusions. I should like to give you a few quotations from that article. In dealing with the fundamental assumptions of the Pepin-Robarts report, Professors Dupré and Weiler state:

> Just like almost everyone else in the flourishing business of reforming Canadian federalism, the Commissioners have reached too often for the constitutional lever. Not only do they find things to be seriously wrong in Canadian federalism, they also assume that we can and should fix them by rewriting the British North America Act. The main reason we have singled out the Task Force Report for critical review is to stake out our claim that constitutional reform should be the last, not the first, lever in a strategy to deal with the sources of Canadian disunity.

Honourable senators, as I go on tonight, you will see that I am amplifying that view. Further quotations from this article might be of interest. In referring to the Pepin-Robarts report, they make this observation:

> The first and overriding assumption is that the future direction of Canadian federalism must be toward a much greater devolution of authority.

They go on to state:

> The bemused ordinary citizen may well wonder how devolution of power to the provinces will contribute to a stronger sense of Canadian unity.

Further on they state:

> This is the path we advocate for dealing with our Confederation discontents. New policies, new understandings, must be pursued along the modest avenue of legislative change, rather than ambitious constitutional restructuring. There is no better example than immigration.

This next quote refers to the most eminent authority, Professor Corry of Queen's:

> As J. Alex Corry has so wisely pointed out, what the country needs now is a lot more day-to-day constitutional morality, and a benign neglect of constitutional legality.

My final quotation from this article is as follows:

> Undeniably, there are powerful centrifugal forces abroad in our country, gnawing at the roots of the Canadian fabric. To the extent that our political structures are out of joint, and new power-sharing arrangements are needed (especially with Quebec) these will most sensibly and most likely be accomplished through Canada's modern invention of federal-provincial diplomacy: in the form of detailed, tangible agreements for sharing power in specific theatres of government action. Meanwhile the aptitude and the appetite for outright institutional innovation is a scarce resource in any ongoing nation.

● (2040)

Honourable senators, I hope you will excuse me for such a lengthy quotation, but it directly summarizes my own approach to our present situation.

I should mention that in that same article in the Canadian Bar Review there is an article by our own Senator Forsey, and it is a rare honour for a non-lawyer to be sought out and asked to make a contribution to that periodical, but I think we can all understand why Senator Forsey was signalled out for just that honour.

In the December issue of the Canadian Bar Review, there are several other very interesting essays on Bill C-60. There is one by Stephen Allan Scott of the Quebec Bar and the McGill Law Faculty, and honestly, honourable senators, it is almost more devastating than Senator Forsey's critique. What he actually does is analyze the soundness of Bill C-60 in law, and I am really bringing this up, honourable senators, so that we will realize first and foremost that wherever these bills emanate from, they certainly do not emanate from the Kingdom of God. After taking apart the bill section by section, Scott comes to this conclusion:

> From this Sargasso sea of complex and confusing provisions, there emerges an overall impression of a poorly drafted and technically deficient constitutional text whose real legal effect, in vital matters, is often belied by its appearance and the professions of its sponsors.

I don't know whether I am flogging a dead horse, but it is really funny to hear this and to realize that we at any time seriously considered this bill as law. He comments on the language contained in the bill, saying:

> They have produced nothing better than schoolboy grandiloquence. The clauses of Bill C-60, beginning with the flatulent terms of clauses 3 to 5, are clumsily constructed, verbose, tortured, often obscure, and much given to clichés.

Senator Forsey advises that that was the case, but finally Professor Scott—and this, I think, is really the stake driven into the corpse—says:

> A new constitution proposed by the government—

And I want to underline these words.

> —should be an outstanding example of the lawyer's art. Bill C-60 is a scandal and an affront to the Canadian public in general and to the legal profession in particular. It is semi-literate in its law and in its language.

I go into that only to make sure that never again will any federal government bring before us such idiocy in a statutory form and ask us to consider it seriously.

Apropos the question of the Supreme Court of Canada—and this is really an aside—in practically all of these studies there is the suggestion that the Supreme Court should be reconstituted because of a bias towards the common law provinces and away from the civil law provinces, and it should be more heavily weighted with judges from Quebec.

In this same issue of the Canadian Bar Review there is an article by Professor P. W. Hogg of Osgoode Hall Law School, entitled "Is the Supreme Court of Canada Biased in Constitutional Cases?" It is a long article. I will not read it, but I will draw your attention to its conclusion. Professor Hogg examined all the constitutional cases dealt with by the Supreme Court of Canada since 1949, when appeals to Privy Council were abolished, and the conclusion of this brilliant academic mind, a man learned in the law, is this:

> My conclusion is that the Supreme Court of Canada has generally adhered to the doctrine laid down by the Privy Council precedents; and that where the court has departed from those precedents, or has been without close precedents, the choices between competing lines of reasoning have favoured the provincial interest at least as often as they have favoured the federal interest. There is no basis for the claim that the court has been biased in favour of the federal interest in constitutional litigation.

I just wanted to put that on the record.

I come now to what I think is the heart of what I wish to say tonight, namely, that in all the reports and recommendations since the 1972 Joint Senate-Commons Committee report, there is one key recommendation. That recommendation has been repeated and repeated, and it is that this chamber, be abolished. I think it is safe to presume that if the thrust of constitutional reform that we have witnessed over the last 10 years is to continue in the same direction, the Senate will likely be abolished within the lifetime of this Parliament.

Honourable senators, if national unity can only be maintained through massive constitutional change that of necessity involves the abolition of the Senate, then I for one—and I think all of us—would willingly agree to such abolition.

● (2050)

Senator Flynn: Agreed.

Senator Lang: However, at the moment I am really not quite satisfied that that is the case. Rather, I am more certain that abolition of the Senate under present circumstances, leaving either a unicameral federal Parliament or one with a House of the Provinces or a House of the Federation, would work for and contribute to more acute national disunity than we have today.

Reading the various constitutional proposals one can, generally speaking, distill the reasons or excuses put forward for abolishing the Senate. First, if I may, I would like to go to the beige paper produced by the Quebec Liberal Party. It is not too much help in this regard, but it does give us an indication of some of the current thinking in Quebec. Referring to the Senate, it says:

> In practice, however, principally because of the nomination process which has been employed, the Senate has never been able to use all of the powers entrusted to it by the Constitution. For example, it has never played a significant role in federal-provincial relations.

I do not think the Constitution entrusts that to us, but there it is. It further says:

> Because this institution no longer seems to us to be adapted to the needs of a modern federal system, we propose that the Senate be abolished and that henceforth the federal Parliament be made up of only one body, the House of Commons.

That is a pretty devastating statement. I don't know on what it is based, but it is a fact that we are going to have to face if that is representative of the policies of the Liberal Party in Quebec. It also goes on to suggest the creation of a new body, which is not supposed to be a legislative body at all and something that is not even part of the federal government, and whose members are nominated by the provinces. The personnel therein are delegates of the provinces and vote en bloc according to the dictates of the provinces, with absolutely paralysing veto powers over areas of jurisdiction which extend to treaty-making. I cannot conceive how a federal government or a unified Canada could operate under such a system.

I turn for a moment to the Pepin-Robarts report, because it throws a little more light on the reasons for abolishing the Senate. The Canadian Bar Association Committee report comes to almost the same conclusions about this body, which is that we do not meet our primary constitutional purpose, namely giving adequate representation to the regions of this country. What both those reports say is that because senators are appointees of the Prime Minister they are perceived as supporting his views. Curiously, Bill C-60 might be construed as abolishing the Senate for the opposite reasons. The Canadian Bar Association report goes on in part to say, rather gratuitously, that many senators are of "an advanced age." That report, of course, proposes an upper house appointed by the provinces, with broad legislative powers.

Frankly, all of the other reports deal with us in a like vein, but what is important to note is that the reason or excuse—and I use the word "excuse" deliberately—given for abolishing this chamber is its supposedly failed role in providing regional representation. As I said before, I think all the suggested alternatives—House of the Provinces, House of the Federation, or whatever they are—would not put regional interests but rather provincial governments in the federal legislative bedchamber, and I for one do not think they have any place there.

Perhaps I might be permitted once again to refer to Professor Weiler. I would particularly like to refer honourable senators to the issue of the University of Toronto Law Journal of last summer. Therein is printed the Wright Lecture, which Professor Weiler delivered at the University of Toronto Faculty of Law in March of last year. His address was entitled "Confederation Discontents and Constitutional Reform—the Case of the Second Chamber." Professor Weiler states his views as follows:

> I believe that Canada now has just about the most decentralized federal system in the world so far as the division of real operating power between Ottawa and the provinces is concerned.

Then he reminds us:

> What provincial politicians and their bureaucratic entrepreneurs really want is to expand their control over economic affairs, the main business of this modern age. (I emphasize that this is true not just in the West with its discontents about federal transportation, energy, tariffs and other such policies. It is a real impulse of Québécois, who yearn to end the centuries-old economic domination of "les Anglais" inside Quebec).

Please note that what Professor Weiler refers to is what provincial politicians and their bureaucratic entrepreneurs really want, and that may be quite different from what the people of Quebec or the people of western Canada want.

Professor Weiler goes on in his article to examine the proposals for a House of the Federation or a House of the Provinces suggested in these various reports and Bill C-60 as an alternative to the Senate. He comes to the conclusion:

> [The House of the Provinces] is a built-in recipe for the kind of continual log-rolling and filibustering that one finds in the American Congressional system and the jerry-built policies it so often produces. [Such a body would require] the federal government to put together policies which would satisfy the widely varying constituencies of Lyon and Lougheed, Lévesque and Blakeney. One shudders to think of the policies which would emerge.

Those are Professor Weiler's words, not mine, but I bring them to your attention because I completely agree with them. He goes on to state:

> Let us look at contemporary Canadian federalism realistically. It is mythical to suggest that Canada has an all-powerful central government, running roughshod over the regions, who need additional protection for their interests through provincial representation in a strong second chamber in Ottawa. In my view our problem is precisely the opposite. Effective management over our national economy is now hamstrung. Ottawa no longer has a real power to choose and pursue a course of action on its own . . . In sum, we might well be entering the worst of all possible worlds if we were to enlarge the possibilities of provincial vetoes—suspensive or otherwise—over the declining scope of real (if not legal) central authority, by erecting in Ottawa the Trojan horse of the House of the Provinces.

Honourable senators, those are all Professor Weiler's words, not mine. He continues:

> The burden of my argument is that there is a fundamental difference between assuring regional minorities fair representation in Ottawa and giving provincial governments an ongoing role in the federal legislative process. A House of the Provinces might marginally improve regional input at Ottawa. The price would be a continued unravelling of national policy-making authority. As far as I am concerned, that is too high a price to pay for the gains one might realistically expect from a House of the Provinces.
> I have rejected each of the alternatives for improving the ability of the Canadian Senate to perform the role of defender of the regions inside Ottawa; whether the House of the Provinces, the House of the Federation, or an elected Senate, for example, the American-Australian model. That does not mean that the current Senate should emerge unscathed from our constitutional renovations. But Senate reform should focus on the role actually performed by the Senate now rather than on the intent of the Fathers of Confederation a century ago.
> The current Senate role is legislative refinement and expenditure control and also being an agent for policy change through investigation and analysis of emerging social and economic issues. I have been struck by how many people in the current constitutional debate have considered that to be an important function, one best performed by a chamber of appointed notables (as many of our current senators are.)—

Honourable senators, a few weeks ago I received a copy of a paper on the Senate of Canada written by a first-year student at McGill. He sent this paper to me because he, for some reason, had come to me seeking some sort of material in connection with his paper. It was quite interesting, because early in it he set out the legal qualifications necessary for appointment to the Senate. The first one was that a person must be of the full age of 30 years. The perception of this young man really astounded me, because he then went on to say that to be a senator one must be either a natural born or a "neutralized" subject of the Queen.

I mention that really as a prelude to some observations that I should like to make about this chamber now. I hope they will not be taken in the wrong spirit.

Perhaps, in fact, the Senate is a failed institution that has been overtaken by history. Perhaps it is an institution that does not fulfil its original purpose, namely, to represent regions. Perhaps senators are perceived as being subservient to the appointing power, namely, the Prime Minister—particularly through the operation of our party system. Perhaps senators are really old party hacks, old war-horses and elitists. These are the labels that are applied to us, and I think we would be silly not to recognize that.

On the other hand, this has not been my perception of the members of this chamber, nor of the institution itself. However, we would be completely blind if we did not recognize that there are powerful forces in this country bent on abolishing this chamber. They exist in the federal bureaucracy; in the federal cabinet; in the House of Commons; in provincial cabinets and, indeed, in special interest groups such as the group of lawyers who formed the committee that brought down the Canadian Bar Association report which, I might add, was not adopted by the association. These groups argue that the panacea for relieving divisive tensions in this country must involve the abolition of the Senate, and of course they use the charges and the labels I have referred to as their ammunition, whether they have any validity or otherwise.

Honourable senators, I suggest that if Moses came down from Mount Sinai with a divinely-inspired Constitution for Canada carved in stone, we would still have French-Canadian nationalism and western alienation. Let me again quote what Professor Dupré said:

> Constitutional reform should be the last, not the first, lever in a strategy to deal with the sources of Canadian disunity.

What is called for at this time, I submit, is intense diplomatic negotiation between the federal government and the provinces respecting the exercise of those jurisdictions which are contested. The opportunity for reaching such agreements will be greatly enhanced if they are not cast in a constitutional context. Once you put these problems into a constitutional context, everyone freezes up. The view is that they are going to be carved in stone from now to eternity.

Take as an example how we dealt, on a federal-provincial basis, with the problem of immigration or on the question of tax-sharing. The proposal in that respect came from the Rowell-Sirois Commission. So long as these things have a temporal limitation, the parties are not afraid to enter into them. It is the fear of the permanency of constitutional change that makes a renewed federalism so difficult to achieve. However, once change is accomplished by agreements limited in time, agreements that are experimental in their approach, the atmosphere, as they evolve, can be cleared of the mutual suspicion that pervades everything that goes on in this area today.

In the past we have always stumbled on an amending formula. Once mutual confidence is established, once mutual respect for areas of jurisdiction and how they have operated is established, even that problem can be resolved. Constitutions are not edicts or decrees; they are living, legal expressions of a people's history, their development, their aspirations, their traditions and their common experiences. A constitution and its conventions must evolve. A constitution cannot be imposed, and particularly a constitution cannot be imposed on a people de novo.

None of the reports we have been looking at over the last 10 years involving the displacement of this chamber will contribute to national unity; rather, they will accelerate the centrifugal forces that are now abroad in Canada. I do not mean by that, however, that the Senate should emerge unscathed from constitutional renovation. Quite the contrary. I do feel that, in any reform of this chamber, we must focus on the role actually performed by the Senate today.

How, then, can we strengthen the role of this institution? It is said that senators lack independence because of the prime ministerial appointive system. I think there is some validity to that. If it were completely true, of course, the institution would just be a symbol, like our sister constitutional component, the Sovereign, and I am afraid such a senatorial symbol would be a rather too expensive bauble for Canada. But apart from the appointive system, is there any other evidence as to our lack of independence? I am afraid, honourable senators, there is—and a lot of it.

Our leader, God bless him, is not chosen by the Senate, but by the Prime Minister. Our Speaker, God bless him, is not chosen by the Senate, but by the Prime Minister. Our Clerk and our Black Rod, God bless them, are not chosen by the Senate, but by the Prime Minister. This is a rather compelling support for the argument that we lack independence. But what is even more disturbing is that, because of the vagaries of Canadian politics over the last 40-odd years, two-thirds of the members of this chamber are from the same party, and most, if not all, adopt the Westminster party caucus model of the House of Commons.

There are many factors that militate against the characteristics to which I have referred. First, Senate tenure—which really was intended to ensure our independence from the House of Commons, from the executive and from the bureaucracy. Another fact, I suppose, that militates against this argument is that we were not all appointed by the same Prime Minister. There are a few of us left who were appointed before 1968. But what most militates against this characteristic is the very real sense in this chamber of responsibility, first and foremost, to the people of Canada to carry out, in today's context, the role of a non-elective legislative body, with all of the actual, if not legal, implications that entails, in a democratic elective political system—and, honourable senators, that is a difficult role.

By way of an aside, I might refer to that criticism that appears in the Canadian Bar Association Committee report that we are all of "an advanced age." This comes up time and time again, of course.

● (2130)

I read recently somewhere that our average age is now 62 years, and being that exact age myself I am afraid I find it rather difficult to consider it "advanced." But that is a criticism that comes up, and I should like to refer to the excuses, as opposed to reasons, that bring it to the fore. The important thing is that we have failed to provide adequate regional representation.

In terms of trying to respond to some of these criticisms, whether real or imagined perceptions, I should like to say with respect to the allegation that we lack independence because of the appointive system that the answer simply lies in the recommendations of the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons of 1972, and I refer honourable senators to page 35 of that report. Basically, it is a recommendation that half the Senate be appointed from a slate nominated by the provinces.

It is almost too simple. It does not require any legislation. Of course, the countervailing argument is that party pressures will preclude the execution of such a procedure. I find that rather hard to believe, particularly in the present climate of constitutional crisis. If the Prime Minister cannot bring in something realistic and as easy to adopt as that in this atmosphere, I do not know what he is trying to do. That sort of procedure, of course, would be the most effective means of answering the criticism that the Senate fails to provide regional representation. And we could, without entangling the provincial governments in the federal legislative process, do that through a House of the Provinces or House of the Federation.

As to the other apparent evidence of our lack of independence, that respecting the Speaker, I think the Speakership in this chamber has a constitutional genesis far more important than any publicly perceived disadvantage in the appointive system. It goes back in to the Westminster model of the 13th and 14th centuries. The Speaker is basically an emanation of the Crown. That is important to retain, if we are to remain a Westminster model parliament as opposed to being a Congressional model.

With regard to the government leader, there is a problem involving a real conflict of interest as between his duty as leader of the Senate and his duty as a cabinet minister. Those two aspects are not always parallel of consistent. But I think a resolution of that problem lies in amending the Senate and House of Commons Act to provide for a legally recognized—and I underline those two words "legally recognized"—house leader who is recognized by the government party in the Senate, and a legally recognized house leader of the opposition who is recognized by the opposition party of the Senate.

Some people here are referred to as house leaders, but you will find no mention of such a person in the Senate and House of Commons Act.

We must also have statutory recognition, as they do in the House of Commons, of our government and opposition whips. They must be paid for those jobs and I think it is a scandal that we have allowed this to escape our notice for so long.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Lang: As to whether or not we have responsibility for our two senior officers, the Clerk and the Black Rod, that will require statutory amendments by which we will reassume responsibility for those two offices. We had the responsibility before and we threw it away by allowing an amendment to a bill to pass because no one brought it to our attention.

Our greatest problem, of course, is to prevent the opposition falling below a substantial proportion of the representation in this chamber, be they Conservatives or, perhaps some day, Liberals.

Finally, with regard to the misconception that senators are of an advanced age, as though that were some sort of disability—I doubt that Senator Croll would feel it was—I think the root of that criticism lies in the relatively slow turnover in our ranks. Such an argument could be met rather easily were senators to be put on the same basis as judges of the superior courts under the Judges Act. No one suggests that our judges are too advanced in age. Well, senators should not forfeit their pensions by opting for early retirement either. Judges do not.

Moreover, senators should be able to remain on call as supernumeraries. Our best brains would not then be permanently retired as under the present law. We could call upon them. I can think of half a dozen right now who would be invaluable could they be called upon to perform specific jobs and undertake specific responsibilities.

There are many other changes that could be made in the Senate. There are also many constitutional reforms that could be made, including our legislative power vis-à-vis the Commons, but I will not go into those at this time.

Finally, I would refer again to Professor Weiler, according to whom the current Senate role is legislative refinement, expenditure control and also being an agent for policy change through investigation and analysis of emerging social and economic issues. Well, that is what the Senate is now pressing to do through its various committees—its Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, its Finance Committee, its Foreign Affairs Committee, its Agriculture Committee, its Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee and many others. But our capacity is curtailed through the most ridiculous physical limitations imposed on our office space, our staff, our facilities and everything else. Our capacity in these areas must now be reinforced and expanded.

One final thing I should like to add, to which there has been no reference among the various authorities that I have looked at, is that if the Senate were abolished, the federal Parliament would become a unicameral system under the beige paper proposals, or it would become a bicameral system dominated by the provinces under the other proposals. I cannot imagine which would be worse for this country. Let us not forget that if we had a unicameral federal Parliament, with our party system being what it is today, and with a situation of majority governments, there would be absolutely nothing to check a determined executive.

● (2140)

Members of the majority party in the Commons might argue, cajole or remonstrate in caucus or otherwise, but when the crunch came, combined with party discipline and an election ahead, self-preservation would dominate and the member would retreat. That is too dangerous a system for Canada.

The alternative proposal, such as a House of the Provinces would, in the words of Professor Weiler, be a recipe for the continual log-rolling and filibustering that would lead to the constitutional unravelling of national policy-making authority.

What is preferable to the two abysmal alternatives presented to us by these constitutional reformers? I suggest, honourable senators, a renewed, revitalized and, indeed, a reformed Senate. Such an institution need not be feared by the cabinet or the House of Commons. Let us recall, even now, how in the recent past we have saved many a cabinet minister from unseen legislative disasters and fiascos. Look at the Income Tax Act of 1971, the Bankruptcy Act, the Investment Companies Act, and the Small Loans Act, to name only a few.

The Senate is supportive of the country's elected representatives of whatever party, but it must never be subservient to them, nor uncritical of the laws they bring to Parliament or the regulations that the unfretted bureaucracy tries to impose on Canadians under delegated legislation.

I hope that honourable senators will reread the British North America Act. It is not "obscure and anachronistic", or "plodding and uninspiring", as the government's White Paper on Bill C-60 described it. Compared to Bill C-60, the B.N.A. Act reads rather like the St. James version of the Bible. It is skeletal, it is succinct, it is adaptable. It does not coerce. It was not drafted by the British Colonial Office, as some people would try to lead us to believe. It was drafted by a few Canadians with names like Macdonald, Cartier, Galt, Tupper, Tilley and Brown. In section 3 it says:

> —the Provinces of Canada, of Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick shall form and be One Dominion under the name of Canada.

That act can be adapted, expanded, interpreted and patriated, but it must not be destroyed. It contained a vision—one Dominion under the name of Canada—and where there is no vision the people perish.

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Will the honourable senator permit a question for purposes of clarification?

Senator Lang: Yes.

Senator Tremblay: Before asking my question, I should like to thank the honourable senator for referring to the role of the Senate. He made a fascinating analysis. If I understood him correctly, he referred to the role of the Senate at the beginning of Confederation as one of representing the interests of various regions in Canada. If I recall correctly, Sir John A. Macdonald not only mentioned regions but also provinces. Also, if I recall correctly, George Brown referred to that arrangement as the only way to establish Confederation. It was a kind of bargaining point between the various provinces.

It is my understanding that Senator Lang wished to make of the Senate solely an upper chamber as a part of the legislative process, without any reference to representation of regional interests.

[Senator Lang.]

Is that really how the honourable senator conceives the new Senate, or does he think that we should get back to the original intention of the Fathers of Confederation and find ways to have the Senate perform more efficiently its role of representing all regional interests and, to use the words of Sir John A. Macdonald, "provincial interests"?

Senator Lang: To the first part of the question I would answer no, and to the second part of the question I would answer yes. The question is sufficiently long that it would be difficult for me to provide an answer in that context.

On motion of Senator Petten, for Senator Lamontagne, debate adjourned.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

BOYCOTT OF 1980 OLYMPIC GAMES IN MOSCOW

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C.:
> That the Government of Canada formally support the boycott of the 1980 Olympic Games by the United States of America and that the Government take note of the resolution adopted by the Ontario Legislature, via a free vote, calling upon the Government of Canada to boycott the Games.
> That the Government of Canada affirm its solidarity with the dissidents, cultural and religious minorities in the Soviet Union, who, like the people of Afghanistan, are now under totalitarian Soviet dictatorship; and
> That the Government of Canada affirm Canada's strong continued support for international human rights and worldwide peace.—(Honourable Senator Macdonald).

Senator Macdonald: Honourable senators, I should like to yield to Senator Yuzyk.

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Honourable senators, I shall not be long. My contribution to this debate will be to present a different but important dimension of the boycott of the 1980 Olympic Games in Moscow. Western democracies, including Canada, should be fully aware of the stance that has been taken by the various dissident groups in the U.S.S.R. and the Soviet bloc countries which are courageously fighting for the implementation of human and national rights under their totalitarian regimes.

I warmly commend Senator Nathan Nurgitz for initiating this motion. He was indeed happy that shortly after its introduction the Canadian government announced the decision to boycott the 1980 Olympic Games in Moscow and adopted a number of restrictive measures which were initiated by the former Conservative government.

The indecision of the present Liberal government up to April 22 caused some confusion among our NATO allies. Nevertheless, Canadians welcomed this action and will give the government every support to make it effective, and strongly demonstrate our opposition to the brutal Soviet aggression of Afghanistan and Soviet suppression of human and national rights.

As we have been accustomed to in this chamber, Senator Stanley Haidasz capably defended the record of the Canadian government and extolled the performance of Canada in the support for international human rights and worldwide peace.

● (2150)

I am particularly happy now that Canada has stood up proudly to be counted with the United States at this time of great trouble and stress, and with our allies in NATO. I wholeheartedly welcome—and I feel sure that all freedom-loving Canadians also welcome—the determination of the Canadian government to strengthen the NATO alliance and its commitment to "doing its full part." In this respect this is a follow-up of the policy of the former government, and thus provides consistency in Canadian foreign policy, which can only serve to enhance our stature in the international arena.

I fully share the profound feelings of Senator Haidasz, and the Poles in Canada and throughout the world, regarding the heinous murder of some 15,000 Polish officers in 1940 by Stalin's Soviet regime in Katyn forest, on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of the Katyn massacre. I feel sure all freedom-loving Canadians join in condemning this vicious crime perpetuated by the Russian Communist government, and pay tribute to the Polish nation in its struggle for the realization of national freedom, democracy and human rights.

At this time I should like to commend the Canadian Olympic Association for voting to accede to the federal government's decision to boycott the Moscow Olympic Games. We are acutely aware that this was a substantial personal sacrifice for the athletes who have been preparing for several years to participate, and we congratulate them. The cancellation of the Canada Cup tournament, in which a Soviet hockey team was to participate, was a logical and proper move.

Yet Canadian athletes are not the only ones making a sacrifice. Because of the limited embargo on exports to the Soviet Union that has been imposed by the Canadian government, farmers in Canada, scientists and academics involved in exchange programs, businessmen selling high technology products, and others, are also making considerable sacrifices. Let us not forget, either, our taxpayers who must pay for the increased expenditures in defence and external affairs resulting from the Soviet aggression in Afghanistan, and NATO's preparations to stop further Soviet aggression elsewhere, particularly in the Middle East and Europe.

Senators, and for that matter, all Canadians, should be aware that the Helsinki monitoring groups in Moscow, Ukraine, Yellow Russia, Lithuania and Georgia, and leading dissidents on whose behalf the Canadian Parliament has intervened with the Soviet government, have condemned the holding of the Olympic Games in Moscow. They point to the fact that the pre-Olympic period in the U.S.S.R. is marked by massive repressions against activists defending human and national rights in direct violation of the Helsinki Agreement that was solemnly signed by the Soviet Union. At the 25th Annual Meeting of the North Atlantic Assembly, which was held in Ottawa last October, 10 of these dissidents who had been expelled by the Soviet government, and who now represent the Helsinki monitoring groups in the U.S.S.R. under the leadership of Major General Petro Grigorenko, stated that although the boycott of the Moscow Olympics is a weak and insufficient response to the Soviet invasion, it is nevertheless a symbolic response to the murder of thousands of Afghans, and to the repression of human rightists, nationalists and religious believers in many republics of the Soviet Union.

In 1978, dissidents of Russian, Ukrainian, Jewish and other origins formed the Association of Olympic Guarantees in the U.S.S.R., an underground organization. The statement of the dissident group was made public at a press conference at the Winter Olympic Games at Lake Placid on February 18. The first sentence reads:

> By the will of fate, the upcoming Olympics '80 and human rights have shown themselves to be bound in one knot.

The statement then cited numerous events, names of persons and groups who have been recently persecuted, and continued:

> —corroborate the growing evidence that our (Soviet) government has decided to destroy the movement in defence of rights and, first and foremost, to cleanse Moscow, before the Olympics, of all dissidents by whatever means—arrests, banishment, exile and various despicable provocations.

The argument that sports and politics should not be mixed is meaningless in the Soviet Union, because the totalitarian regime has always made sports a part of politics. Here is another part of their statement:

> By contributing to the prestige of Olympiad '80, they also contribute to the destruction of the opposition in the U.S.S.R. to repression, to "cleansing" the Olympics of a free exchange of people and ideas, thus turning sports into politics, but into politics that benefit not democracy and friendship, but tyranny.
> There is no guarantee that those in the Soviet Union who wish to do so will be able freely to be present at the Olympiad. There are no such guarantees even for persons of the Western World; those among them who do not please the Soviet authorities will not even be allowed into the U.S.S.R.

On this point I should like to refer to the section in the International Olympic Committee rule book, chapter 4, paragraph 39, which states that colonies, dominions and even those national entities that are temporarily incorporated into other nations, may participate in the games. Such dependent colonies as Bermuda and Hong Kong, and non-U.N. members such as Liechtenstein and Monaco participate independently in Olympic Games. The Soviet Union, however, blatantly violates this principle. Ukraine, a 45-million nation and member of the U.N., and Byelorussia, a 12-million nation and U.N. member, as well as many other nations with ancient cultures and traditions, are not allowed to form Olympic committees of their own and field independent teams. The U.S.S.R. fields single teams composed of various nationalities, under the Soviet Russian banner. Athletes who express pride in their nation when it is not Russian are repressed. For example, Mykola and Valentyn Papirovy, Ukrainian brothers, were barred by a decree of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian S.S.R., January 29, 1980, from participating in the Lake Placid Games, accused by the KGB of nationalistic tendencies and of being politically untrustworthy.

The Association for Olympic Guarantees in the U.S.S.R. outlines three objectives:

> 1. To inform the community about actions of the government aimed at liquidation of the movement of rights relating to the approach of Olympiad '80 and the Madrid meeting in 1980;

● (2200)

> 2. To demand that our government give official assurances to the International Olympic Committee as to a halt to the persecution of defenders of rights and that prior to Olympiad '80 a general political amnesty will be proclaimed; otherwise, to appeal to the IOC to transfer the Games to another country, or postpone them;
> 3. To propose to all athletes and all honest citizens of our country to boycott the Olympics in Moscow, if the government does not stop the repressions against participants in the democratic movement and does not proclaim an amnesty for political prisoners.

This body has the support of dissident groups in the U.S.S.R., and of most dissidents, if not all of them, who have been expelled from that country. Among the latter are such distinguished spokesmen as Solzhenitsyn, Grigorenko, Alekseyeva, Plyushch, Kuznetsov and Avital Scharansky. Andrei Sakharov, the great Russian scientist, writer, Nobel Prize winner and leader of the human rights movement in the Soviet Union, who last year was exiled from Moscow, has condemned the Olympics in Moscow and urges active support for a worldwide boycott.

A very recent voice on this subject has been that of Dr. Nina Strokata-Karavansky, a microbiologist and a founding member of the Ukrainian Helsinki Monitoring Group, who spent four years as a prisoner in the Mordovian labour camps, and was released a few months ago. I should like to quote briefly from her statement at a press conference held at the Lake Placid Games on February 18, 1980. She said:

> In the upcoming Olympic capital city, and on the territories of nations enslaved by Moscow, there are taking place many searches, arrests, surveillance and bugging of private conversations, and even the forced resettlement of those whose words can serve as testimony to the true nature of the aggressive and repressive regime.
> The striving of athletes to compete on a forum above politics is quite understandable, however no one can be above ethics. And the ethics of Moscow are the ethics of an invader and conqueror.
> Perhaps the fresh bloodletting in Afghanistan will jar the sombulent conscience of the world into saying "No" to the Olympics in the capital of Red Fascism.
> I understand that to say "No" will be the most difficult for those who have expended much effort in preparing for the Olympics. But this is not a policital step, but rather an ethical one, and for this reason it is a difficult, albeit an unavoidable step to take. For if ethical considerations were primary in the world, the threat of destruction which hangs over the world would disappear.

Honourable senators, the voice of the oppressed peoples under the totalitarian Soviet regime has been consistently clear and loud. The conscience of the free world has been profoundly stirred. We can be proud of the stance of the Canadian government, backed by the athletes and the people, in supporting the United States and an increasing number of countries in the boycott of the Olympic Games in Moscow.

May I conclude with a quotation from the great Russian philosopher, Solzhenitsyn, published in Time, February 18, 1980. I understand all senators have received a copy of this article. The article states:

> Communism stops only when it encounters a wall, even if it is only a wall of resolve. The West cannot now avoid erecting such a wall in what is already its hour of extremity . . .
> All oppressed peoples are on the side of the West: the Russians, the various nationalities of the USSR, the Chinese and the Cubans. Only by relying on this alliance can the West's strategy succeed. Only together with the oppressed will the West constitute the decisive force on earth. This is also a matter of principle, if the West is to uphold freedom everywhere and not merely for itself.

The bulwark of freedom and democracy in the world is NATO. Let us in Canada carry out our full share and keep NATO strong.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

May 7, 1980

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Julien Chouinard, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 7th day of May, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to a bill.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

THE SENATE

RECORDING OF SPEECHES FOR RADIO BROADCASTING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before I table certain documents I should like to inform you that the Clerk of the Senate received a phone call a short time ago asking if Radio Mutuel could record Senator Lamontagne's speech in the debate on the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne today. The Clerk and I discussed the matter, and I also discussed it with Senator Flynn.

I am sure all senators realize that no one can give permission to have anything recorded or photographed in the Senate chamber except the Senate itself. Therefore, of course, none of us presumed to give any such authority. However, Senator Flynn and I felt that in principle there was nothing improper in the Senate's considering giving such permission in a proper case, but, without there being any suggestion that this is not a proper case, the notice did seem rather short.

The Clerk, Senator Flynn and I felt it was our duty to inform the Senate that the request had been received. The Senate, of course, is the sole authority.

Senator Walker: Will it be used to help the "Noes"?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne: I rise on a question of privilege. I wish to tell honourable senators that I was not aware of this request.

Hon. Azellus Denis: I also rise on a question of privilege. A framed photograph of the Senate is selling at a cost of $125, which I think is much too expensive. Perhaps someone wishes to make money out of our nice faces.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I think the question should be referred to the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders. I don't think we are prepared today to make a decision in the affirmative.

• (1405)

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, in view of the fact that I know this whole matter was placed before the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration by myself on another occasion recently, let me say, first of all, to honourable senators, that it is a great compliment to Senator Lamontagne that this request has been made.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Grosart: The request as it was presented to the Senate in the last session was that access might be permitted on specific occasions as requested by the CBC or CTV or others. This, as far as I know, is the first request following that original request, and as I said, it is a great compliment to Senator Lamontagne. But I would suggest this is a matter that should be dealt with in the larger context of the request of the CBC to come in here and set up its equipment. I for one am in favour of that, but I believe it should be dealt with on a recommendation of the Internal Economy Committee in discussion with the Speaker when he is in the Chair.

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, under normal circumstances I would agree entirely with Senator Flynn and Senator Grosart that this matter should be considered by the appropriate committee before an exception of this type is made. However, it seems to me we are obviously dealing with an unusual situation, unusual in the extreme because of the time limits involved. It this were a speech that a senator was going to give—however interested the CBC might be in recording it—involving any number of subjects which are not going to be decided within the next couple of weeks, then certainly the question could be sent to committee for consideration. The speech could be delayed and the CBC advised later as to the decision of the Senate committee and the Senate itself.

In this case we are dealing with a speech which obviously is going to bear profoundly on the referendum in Quebec. I see Senator Flynn, who is from the province of Quebec where the referendum will be taking place, and I would bow to his judgment as to the importance of these matters there. I speak as a senator from the far west, but naturally we all have a deep concern as Canadians about what is going to happen in that referendum. If an adverse headline results from a decision of the Senate not to allow the CBC to record Senator Lamontagne's speech—and because of the work he has done and the book he has published, and so on, relative to the referendum, he is not like any other senator with respect to this particular subject matter—I think we would do injury to the Senate and possibly prevent an important message from being put forward relative to the referendum at this particular time when a week's delay could be of some concern.

So in spite of the shaking of the head of the Leader of the Opposition, I am going to make a plea that we make a decision now. I only heard about this the minute I walked into the chamber—I have not been prompted—and I accept totally the word of Senator Lamontagne that he did not promote this idea. However, the idea having come before us, we should deal with it now and not give the press an opportunity to criticize us under these circumstances. A delay of even a few days that would result from referring this question to the Internal Economy Committee could deny the forces of federalism in Quebec the use of this extra tool, whatever its importance might be. So I would certainly make a plea to honourable senators that they speak to this matter now and endeavour to resolve it now.

Senator Graham: May I ask the Acting Leader of the Government what use is going to be made of this particular film if it is indeed allowed?

Senator Frith: It would appear that some senators came into the chamber after the start of this discussion, so I should make it very clear, as will appear from the record, that it is not the CBC, and it is not a film; it is a recording. So the equipment involved, as I understand it, would be negligible; in fact, they probably could patch into the system that we have.

● (1410)

I should also say that just before coming into the chamber I had a call from a representative of Radio Mutuel, and I told him that I would bring the matter up but that I did not think, in view of the short notice, it would be possible to have permission given. That is the way I left it with him, that I would raise it but that I did feel that with the notice being so short we probably would not be able to come to what I would consider the necessary unanimous decision. I do not know that there is any rule that it should be unanimous, but it seems to me to be the kind of question that should be settled unanimously. The gentleman from Radio Mutuel seemed to understand, although he was disappointed.

We can see that it is apparently in the context of the explanation given by Senator Grosart, that this is the first of the specific requests. I did say—I hope you will forgive me for having done so—that I did not want this gentleman to feel we were turning down the principle in any way, and that I hoped he would renew his request, but if possible would try to give us a little more notice so that we could get it straightened out in due course.

If honourable senators will support this view—and I do not wish in any way to block the suggestion made by Senator van Roggen—if it is the feeling of the Senate that the decision should be a unanimous one if we are going to do it, subject to your feelings, Madam Speaker, it does not seem to me that such unanimity prevails, but I leave that for the decision of the Speaker and the chamber.

Senator Choquette: May I ask when this speech will be given?

Senator Frith: Later this afternoon. I just want to add one thing, which is to put on record my apologies to Senator Lamontagne that I told him nothing about this, because it happened at such short notice. I am sorry that I did not do so.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I wonder if, as a novice, I might be permitted to express my feelings on this subject? I have tried to take a deep interest in the workings of this chamber, and I am getting to have more and more respect for it as time goes by. However, I must honestly say, with no reflection at all on anyone who has addressed the Senate since this session of Parliament opened, that in my humble opinion very little has been said on this extremely important event that is taking place in the province of Quebec, which, in my humble opinion, will affect the whole of this country that we all so dearly love.

It seems to me that for once this chamber could make an exception, because of the stature of the person who is going to make this speech this afternoon, because of his deep involvement in the matter and the work he has put into his writings on the subject. As a newcomer to this house, I would be very happy if this chamber could make this unanimous decision without pondering for weeks, and allow the speech of Senator Lamontagne to be recorded.

● (1415)

Senator Flynn: If the idea is to have a sitting of the Senate to deal with that problem, that might be arranged for next week. If that were the case, not only Senator Lamontagne would have an opportunity to speak on the subject, but others would too. I do not see why permission should be given to one station and not others. This is a very dangerous precedent to set at this time. My friend, Senator Thériault, disagrees. Of course, anything that is all right with the Liberal Party is all right with him.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Flynn: I am serious about that.

Senator Thériault: I am, too.

Senator Flynn: You do not have to stand up. There is no question of privilege. Take your seat and stay there.

Senator Thériault: I am on a point of order.

Senator Flynn: There is no point of order. Try to raise a real point of order.

Senator Thériault: The point of order is that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition in the Senate mentioned my name in reference to the Liberal Party. I thought that, with all his experience of being a Canadian, he would be bigger than that and would not try to—

Senator Flynn: This is not a point of order.

Senator Thériault: —inject politics into the important matter which Senator Lamontagne wishes to discuss this afternoon.

Senator Flynn: I did not. You did.

Senator van Roggen: I take personal exception to the remarks made by Senator Flynn. I would have made the same remarks if that request had concerned a speech of his on the same subject. What I said was absolutely unrelated to the fact that I was a member of the Liberal Party.

Senator Flynn: Don't get worked up.

Senator van Roggen: My remarks related only to the concern that we, as Canadians, have for the referendum in Quebec. It was a completely non-political statement that I made.

Senator Flynn: I did not mention you; I mentioned Senator Thériault's name. So you have nothing to get excited about it. What I said is that we should not improvise on this kind of decision.

I am going to be in Quebec City this evening speaking on the same platform as the Prime Minister of Canada, so I do not have any lectures to receive from you or any other member of the Senate on the importance of this matter.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: What I am saying is that we should not set a precedent like that. I am asking Senator Lamontagne to delay his speech to next week so that we can arrange a sitting of the Senate and invite everyone to speak on the matter.

Senator Asselin: He wants to sell his book.

Senator Flynn: This is improvising, and it is not wise to improvise in matters of such importance. That is my point. That is why I am objecting to it. We do not know what implications may flow from a precedent such as this. Sober second thought is supposed to be our motto. We should not be rushed into making decisions on the spur of the moment.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I think the question I raised has caused a more heated discussion than I anticipated. However, I think that is thoroughly understandable in view of the importance of the events taking place in Quebec, and in view of the concern we all have about them.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: As we say in French, "vous vouliez nous passer un Québec", you were up to an old trick again.

Senator Frith: I beg your pardon?

Senator Asselin: As we say in French, "vous vouliez nous passer un Québec" on the sly.

Senator Lafond: That one is not funny at all either.

[English]

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, it seems that any difference of opinion we may have on these subjects would be better dealt with under another rubric. I suggest, unless someone wishes to move that we deal with this now—and I would not take it personally if the Senate disagreed with me—that we pass on to other business on the order paper. I would simply ask for your support, or lack of support, respecting my understanding that we should only give permission on such short notice in the case of unanimity.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

• (1420)

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I would like to make very clear the position I took in my former intervention. In the first place, I believe that a request such as this should be referred to the Speaker of the Senate. It should not come in this fashion from the government benches. I say that as a suggestion. The procedure in the past was that such requests were dealt with by the Speaker.

The reason I raise some doubts about the suggested procedure is the fact that the CBC did come to the Senate, through the Speaker of the Senate, with a request that they be permitted, on occasion, to broadcast the proceedings of the Senate. On that occasion, the Speaker referred the question to the Internal Economy Committee, and the committee, after consideration of the question, refused to permit the CBC to broadcast any proceedings of the Senate until the matter was given further consideration.

That, as I understand it, is the situation at the moment. It would, therefore, be an insult to the CBC, given that their request is now before the Speaker of the Senate and the Internal Economy Committee, to permit some other organization to come in and pre-empt the very privilege that the CBC has requested. A decision on that request has been deferred.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I believe it is unfair of Senator Grosart to say that the Internal Economy Committee has refused such permission to the CBC. Senator Grosart, as a former Speaker of this house, should inform honourable senators why permission was refused. The ground on which permission was refused was that of fair play. The Internal Economy Committee wanted to ensure that, in the event that permission to broadcast was granted to the CBC, that same permission would be granted to CTV and some of the other networks and independent stations from time to time.

The decision taken by the Internal Economy Committee, rather than being a direct refusal, was in fact a decision to allow due consideration to all involved.

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, when I first spoke on this subject, I tried to do so in modulated terms. I was not being emotional. I simply felt that the time limits were such that we should consider this question as quickly as possible.

It is obvious, as the Deputy Leader of the Government has said, that there is no unanimity on the question. However, I would ask honourable senators to consider referring this matter to the Internal Economy Committee immediately, with the hope that, subject to its deliberations, it may see fit to bring down its report early next week, at which time Senator Lamontagne, and any other honourable senators who wish to address themselves to this subject, could then speak to the matter. The committee, I assume, would automatically take into consideration the fact that such permission would not be granted to only one radio network, but to a number of them.

If a motion to that effect is in order, I would so move.

Senator Frith: It seems to me, honourable senators, that such a motion would be in order. Under rule 46(b) no notice is required for a motion for the referral of a question to a committee. If there is such a motion, perhaps we could dispose of the matter in that way.

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, I move that this question be referred to the Internal Economy Committee.

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, I would inform the Deputy Leader of the Government that at the time I was Chairman of the Internal Economy Committee, and Senator Guay was the Vice-Chairman, we did receive a letter from the CBC requesting permission to broadcast portions of the proceedings of the Senate. Following receipt of that letter, we had a meeting of the full committee, and the committee decided unanimously that the privilege should not be granted to only one broadcaster; that what the committee granted to one, should be granted to all. That letter is available in my office.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I will second Senator van Roggen's motion that the question be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, rule 67(1)(f) of the Rules of the Senate reads:

> The Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration . . . is empowered on its own initiative to consider any matter relating to the internal economy of the Senate—

In light of that rule, no motion is necessary.

Senator Flynn: We should hear from the chairman of the committee as to whether he agrees to take that step.

[Senator Guay.]

Senator Frith: That is the point. That rule would cover it provided the Senate were assured by the chairman that the committee would consider the matter on its own initiative. I would respectfully suggest, having a choice between those two methods of procedure, that we might vote on the motion of Senator van Roggen, seconded by Senator Flynn, and then we can be assured that the committee will deal with it.

Senator Thériault: Before the question is put, may I ask what it is that we are being asked to refer to the committee? Is it the whole subject-matter of radio and television coverage of the proceedings of the Senate?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Senator Argue: Whatever the motion says.

• (1425)

Senator Frith: With respect, I think the actual motion before us is that this particular request be referred to the committee, and that does not preclude the committee from dealing with the matter in the context of the whole question, which I am sure they will do. However, the specific matter being referred to the committee at present is this particular request, which they can consider in the overall context.

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, as Chairman of the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, I can assure all honourable senators that the overall question will be dealt with at the first opportunity. With respect to the question that is raised today, it seems to me that the horse will be out of the barn, because I understand that Senator Lamontagne is going to speak this afternoon. But I assure honourable senators that any other request will be dealt with forthwith by the committee.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, that is why I asked the question. I think I see Senator Lamontagne shaking his head to indicate that he is not going to speak. I am anxious, personally, that that speech be recorded, because of the work being done by Senator Lamontagne. Is the committee going to deal with the request by the radio station to tape Senator Lamontagne's speech?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I would respectfully suggest that we deal with the motion, and if it is adopted we can permit Senator Lamontagne to make up his mind as to whether he wants to wait until next week or not.

Senator Lamontagne: Honourable senators, I repeat that while I am the object of the discussion I am not really the cause of it, because I was not aware of the request before I entered the chamber this afternoon.

Perhaps this is a good opportunity to establish this new tradition, and I am quite prepared to postpone my speech until sometime early next week. After I speak I would certainly hope that other senators on the other side—and I see Senator Tremblay in his seat—would also have something to say about the Quebec situation and the referendum. This might be good not only for the current campaign in Quebec, but also good for the Senate.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Would the leader prepare a motion which can be put later?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, Senator van Roggen's motion is—and I would ask him if he is satisfied with this working—that the request by Radio Mutuel to record for radio the speech to be made this afternoon by the Honourable Senator Lamontagne, P.C., be referred to Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration.

• (1430)

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, following up Senator Lamontagne's remarks or comments when he suggested rather explicitly that other senators on this side rise to speak after him, am I to understand that by rising after Senator Lamontagne either to ask questions or make comments we would thus be using up our privilege to rise on our own behalf in the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne?

Let me explain. I think I will see more clearly when Senator Lamontagne expresses his views and I assume it will be interesting, following his speech, to have a dialogue. Personally, I expect it will be possible to do it that way. However, I would not want such an intervention to be limited to a single question but for it to take the form of an exchange of views, and afterwards not prevent me or any of you from taking part in the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, after the referendum. That is the time I had anticipated to rise. However, I would urge Senator Lamontagne to intervene explicitly as long as I can reply next week. I do not know if our rules allow that. That is why I am asking the question.

Senator Frith: All we want is honourable senators to agree—

Senator Guay: Honourable senators, I think that with respect to this matter, other senators who might want to speak after Senator Lamontagne should be given an opportunity to do so. I believe the motion before us does not contain any reference to that.

Senator Flynn: Maybe this practical problem being raised by Senator Tremblay and to which Senator Guay just alluded could be solved if, for example, the Senate were to decide to reserve the whole sitting of Tuesday or Wednesday for that debate outside the period allotted for the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne—if you want a sort of inquiry on that issue, which would solve the problem. We could then continue the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne limiting ourselves at that time to the referendum issue. Perhaps the committee could consider that.

Senator Guay: Yes.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, I believe we should not be extending special privileges to a senator. All senators have the same privilege to rise. If the committee decides that the debate in which Senator Lamontagne will be participating is to be aired, we should ask the committee to consider the possibility of setting aside the full day when the proceedings of the Senate will be broadcast. Then Senator Lamontagne or someone else could speak. Because of the privileges the other members of this house have, I would not want that privilege to be extended only to Senator Lamontagne and then that the broadcasting of the other speeches be cut off. I would want that privilege to apply to all members of the Senate. If Senator Flynn wants to speak after Senator Lamontagne, or Senator Tremblay, or others, or myself, I would want my remarks or the remarks of Senator Flynn to be broadcast as well. Because, otherwise, this would be giving a senator a privilege over the others. I am not against Senator Lamontagne expressing his views in the Senate but I want that privilege with respect to the broadcasting of the debate to apply to all senators who want to speak.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, it is impossible for such a motion to solve all the problems that can arise, including those created by the demands by other broadcasters. We do not know whether they intend to record the full speech or to select certain portions. We do not know what the committee report will suggest. I hope to persuade you that, if we pass the motion now before us, the committee I imagine will consider all the other problems that could arise in the future, the results of which could affect not only the privileges of senators but those of the networks, and so on. This is only a matter of having a question that will settle the whole thing in the future.

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, it is precisely for that reason that I do not want the committee to study only the possibility of broadcasting Senator Lamontagne's speech. I shall object as a member of the Senate. If the radio station wants to broadcast all speeches made in the Senate that day I entirely agree. But if it favours a senator at the expense of others I think that we would misinterpret our rules if we authorized the broadcasting of only one senator's views.

Senator Frith: We did not propose that the committee give its authorization but only that it study the matter. I point out that the Senate alone can give that kind of authorization.

Senator Asselin: Then I want to give the committee notice of my intention.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, as concerns Senator Asselin's remarks, I should like to say first that our house must make a decision on a request from a radio station for broadcasting the speech made by a member of the Senate. I suppose that the request has been made because Senator Lamontagne has been working for a long time on the issue he must deal with in the Throne Speech debate. I am very pleased, honourable senators, that Senator Tremblay who is famous for his work on constitutional matters has asked for leave to put certain questions to Senator Lamontagne and discuss the matter with him.

But I do not believe that the best answer lies in the position taken by Senator Flynn and Senator Asselin. I think that we have here a specific request concerning a particular case, in this very particular time we are going through in our country.

I would have liked and hoped that honourable members on both sides of this house, on the three sides if there were three, had agreed on that matter and made a decision now, without postponing if for two, three or four weeks.

Senator Asselin: Well, if that is the interpretation given to the motion I can tell you right now that if the report of the committee is to seek unanimous consent of the Senate I shall not grant it.

● (1435)

Senator van Roggen: As the mover of this motion, I would ask honourable senators to reflect on the remarks I made earlier, which were simply to the effect that this whole question should be referred to the Internal Economy Committee, which could make a decision and in its report—which I hope we shall have early next week, because of the pressure of time—indicate which radio stations—hopefully any radio station—would be entitled to record whatever speeches made on this subject they chose, including speeches from the opposition side. In those circumstances, perhaps Senator Lamontagne might wish to consider giving his speech next week.

My resolution was not aimed at recording only Senator Lamontagne's speech. The Deputy Leader of the Government has proposed a specific wording for the resolution, to which I would have added words to the effect that all the comments made during the past half-hour should be considered by the committee.

However, we do not need to stipulate that in the motion. It is obvious that the committee will consider this in the broadest context. The Leader of the Opposition nodded his head at the suggested wording, and I am certainly content with it. I am confident that the Internal Economy Committee will consider this matter in the broad sense, and bring down a recommendation which will encompass the concerns expressed here. I submit, honourable senators, that we should not try to conduct that committee hearing here this afternoon.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I think it is time we applied our rules. There is a question before the Senate. Rule 28 is very specific:

> A senator shall not speak more than once to any question or other matter before the Senate except in explanation of a material part of his speech in which he may have been misunderstood, and then he shall not introduce new matter.

I ask that that rule on the point of order be now applied, otherwise we will be here all afternoon rehashing this subject.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Are honourable senators ready for the motion?

Hon. Senators: Yes.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: It is moved by the Honourable Senator van Roggen, seconded by the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., that the request made by Radio Mutuel to record for radio the speech to be made this afternoon, or on some other day, by the Honourable Senator Lamontagne, P.C., be referred to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Asselin: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE

INDEXING OF PENSIONS

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I have a question which I suppose should be directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. In his absence perhaps the acting government leader can direct the question to the appropriate authority and get the information for me. Actually, I have a series of questions, but I will restrict myself to one this afternoon. I will pursue the matter later, perhaps, when the ministry is represented more fully. My question concerns the civil service pension plan, which is a matter of concern to me.

Civil service pensions are indexed to the rate of inflation, I understand, but the funding system is not indexed. The result of this—and it will be obvious in a short period of time—is that the contributions will not keep up with the expenditures. I wonder if the government has any plans to remedy this situation, or is it their intention to supplement the funding through general revenue or by means of taxation?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I take that question as notice on behalf of the Minister of State for Economic Development.

SASKATCHEWAN

SASKATOON—TRANSFER OF DISTRICT POST OFFICE

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow: I wonder if I might ask the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board a question pertaining to the post office facilities in Saskatoon. A question was asked in this chamber over a week ago about the possibility of the regional post office in Saskatoon being moved to Winnipeg. The minister at that time said that he would check on the matter, and report. I wonder if he has anything to report at this time.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, just before that question was asked I had written to the minister involved, but in any event I have since carried that request to the Postmaster General, and he listened to my representations very carefully and, I would say, very sympathetically. This request that the post office facilities in Saskatoon remain as they are, and that there be no amalgamation of the administration of that post office with the post office in Manitoba, is strongly supported by Senator Buckwold, Senator Steuart and Senator Sparrow.

Honourable senators will be pleased to know that I have had an encouraging and sympathetic response from the Postmaster General that leads me to believe that a decision will be taken to retain the post office facilities in Saskatoon in their present state, and with the same authority as they have at the present time; in other words, that this move to amalgamate the administration between Saskatchewan and Manitoba will not take place.

JUSTICE

HONOURABLE LÉO LANDREVILLE—FEDERAL COURT RULING

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government, which I would ask him to direct to the Minister of Justice, concerning the ruling brought down by the Federal Court in the case of the Honourable Léo Landreville, former Ontario Supreme Court judge.

The Federal Court having ruled that the cabinet did not exercise its discretion with regard to the pension of the former judge, can the minister tell us whether the government accepts that decision and, if so, when it intends to reach a decision as required by the ruling of the court?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall refer that question to the Minister of Justice.

PUBLIC SERVICE

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I was hoping that the Leader of the Government in the Senate would be here today so that I could put these questions to him. Without any reflection on the deputy leader, I will ask my questions of him, and he in turn will perhaps take them as notice.

In view of the Auditor General's findings on civil service efficiency, I wonder if the government leader can tell me what remedial action, if any, is being taken to ensure that the situation improves.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I will pass that question along.

Senator Muir: Thank you. My supplementary question is: Does the government propose to establish efficiency norms for the public service that are comparable to those in the private sector, and see to it that these are enforced? I would also like to know what, if anything, is being done to improve personnel management and productivity.

Senator Frith: I will see that that question also comes to the attention of the government leader.

● (1450)

Senator Muir: I thank the honourable senator. I am sure he will have many notes to pass along. My final supplementary is: Since it was the Auditor General's opinion that the work being done by 50,000 clerical regulatory federal civil servants could be done by 38,000, does the government anticipate reducing the size of the federal bureaucracy? If so, how and when?

Senator Frith: I will also draw that question to the attention of the Leader of the Government.

ENERGY

EXPORT TAX ON ELECTRICITY

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government.

It seems that to compensate for the oil price increase and also to reimburse the government for the funds given to the eastern provinces of Canada, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Honourable Marc Lalonde, is getting ready to levy an export tax on electricity produced in Quebec and Ontario and sold to the United States.

Could the deputy leader check whether, to recover the cost of oil increases and the compensation paid to the eastern provinces of Canada, the minister intends to impose an export tax on electricity produced in Ontario and Quebec and sold to the United States?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall ask the minister and the Leader of the Government in the Senate to get a reply to the question.

INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE TO CHRYSLER CORPORATION

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: My question would be addressed to the Minister of State for Economic Development, but in his absence I will address it to the Deputy Leader of the Government. It pertains to the subject of government assistance to Chrysler Corporation.

The Minister of State for Economic Development mentioned last week that the agreement would be settled very soon. In view of a declaration made by the President of the United Auto Workers that an agreement must come within the next week—and this statement was made two days ago—because the entire United States package hinges on approval of the Canadian package, and that without the help being sought by Chrysler, Chrysler would fold shortly, would the minister tell us what action is being taken or what is the state of negotiations?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in view of the urgency that appears implicit in the question I shall bring it to the attention of the Minister of State for Economic Development as quickly as possible.

Senator Charbonneau: By way of supplementary, would the minister report on the talks, if he can, held the night before last between Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce representatives and the United Automobile Workers concerning plans that the government could be making for alternative employment should Chrysler cease to operate?

Senator Frith: Senator Charbonneau will understand that I cannot undertake on behalf of the minister to report on that meeting, but I willingly undertake to bring his request to the minister's attention.

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Charbonneau: I only wished to put the question on record for that reason. We must have a report fairly soon in view of the seriousness of the situation.

FISHERIES

ASSISTANCE TO FISHERMEN

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, my question is for the Minister of State for Economic Development, but in his absence I direct it to the Deputy Leader of the Government.

The gracious Speech from the Throne tells us, and I quote:

> Farmers and small businessmen are also hit especially hard by rising costs, and my government is sensitive to their plight.

Is the government also sensitive to the plight of the fishermen in the country; if so, in what manner does the government intend to demonstrate that sensitivity? Could the specific programs to help fishermen be brought to the attention of the Senate?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I feel confident that the government is sensitive to the needs of fishermen, but certainly, as to the manner in which they propose to express that sensitivity, I must pass that question along to the Minister of State for Economic Development.

Senator Doody: As a supplementary, I should like to bring an inadvertence to the attention of the Senate. The portion of the Speech from the Throne which I just read states:

> Farmers and small businessmen are also hit especially hard—

I expect that small businesswomen are also included and that they are not deliberately excluded.

Senator Frith: I have no comment. That is my best answer to that.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, I do not know whether I should raise a point of order or a question of privilege, but I would like some clarification on the answer given to me yesterday by the Deputy Leader of the Government to a question I had asked concerning the administrative arrangements between the federal government and the provinces. As recorded on page 199 of Hansard, I asked whether, for the renewal of federalism or in cases where the provinces and the federal government do not agree on a jurisdiction, the federal government would try to reach a political solution through negotiations or whether all cases would be submitted to a court of justice, such as the Supreme Court of Canada, as in the past. Senator Frith replied that indeed the provinces and the federal government would have to submit such cases to the courts.

This is an extremely important issue and if, to change or renew Canadian federalism, the federal government must appeal to the courts every time it cannot come to an agreement with the provinces on some jurisdiction, this would mean that federalism would be renewed by the effect of court decisions. I do not believe that this is the spirit in which the government and the Parliament of Canada want to seek a renewed federalism.

Since this is an important issue and since my honourable friend may have replied too quickly, would it be possible to have a ministerial statement on the subject, about which we would be warned in advance so that the opposition could respond to this statement and comment on the attitude of this government?

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I have no objection to the privilege requested by the honourable senator. However, I would like to say that I do not believe this to be a point of order. He can raise the issue by asking a question if he so desires. This is neither a point of order nor a question of privilege.

Senator Asselin: You can call it what you want, but it is an important issue.

Senator Guay: I quite agree.

Senator Asselin: Moreover, if you do not consider it important yourself, I do not know where your interpretation is leading us.

Senator Guay: I consider this question to be important, but not a point of order.

Senator Asselin: You may think what you want in any case, but if Madam Speaker judges that I am out of order, I shall sit down. However, if I can continue to ask my question, I shall do so.

Senator Denis: We have no objection to your sitting down.

Senator Asselin: Do you want to say something?

Senator Denis: No.

Senator Asselin: No, you do not want to say anything? I would be surprised if you did.

Senator Denis: I still find this rather long.

Senator Asselin: You find this rather long! Do you mean for yourself?

Senator Denis: Oh, yes.

Senator Asselin: Absolutely. I can well understand your position!

Senator Denis: You are not alone!

Senator Asselin: Are there others who find that I am going on too long?

Since the question I asked is important and since the Deputy Leader of the Government may have answered it too quickly or prematurely, and in view of all the consequences that this answer could have for renewed federalism, could he ask the responsible minister to make a statement so that we can know where we are going and what to expect as concerns renewed federalism?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if my answer left the impression that the government's policy is to refer to the courts every matter of jurisdiction or other, or difference between the provinces and the Canadian government, I did not understand the question correctly. If I remember correctly, the question touched on jurisdiction over offshore mineral rights settlements. That was the specific question: If the provinces and the federal government agreed it was a matter of jurisdiction, a legal matter, should we finally refer the question to the courts?

That is my impression of what the question was. If this is so the answer remains unchanged, because in that case, if I understand correctly, in order to arrive at administrative agreements we must first determine the legal rights. By the way, when I made a speech in the Senate on the question, when I was explaining the arrangement in Australia, Senator Asselin suggested this was a bargain, an arrangement, a settlement. I was in total agreement.

However I suggested that it was only in the context of offshore mineral rights that finally, if we cannot agree, the question should be referred to the courts, only for a determination of what our rights are, and then we could arrive at administrative arrangements. Certainly, if I left another impression, that this principle applies in any area of jurisdiction, I misunderstood the question. I did not want to leave that impression.

Senator Asselin: Will the Deputy Leader of the Government agree that on the communications issue, that same attitude was taken by the federal government and, after the court judgement, it was decided that communications belong to the federal government? The provinces should then arrive at administrative arrangements with the federal government.

Senator Frith: In that respect yes, because normally we can try to arrive at an administrative arrangement right away, before the determination of legal rights. But there must be a determination of rights just the same to arrive at an administrative arrangement. Possibly the area of communications is a good example. I wanted to stress that such an approach would not apply to any field whatsoever.

Senator Asselin: Would there be in the deputy leader's mind other areas where the federal government could ask the court for a determination on joint provincial and federal jurisdictions?

Senator Frith: In my view, the question is so hypothetical that it cannot be answered. We only need to scrutinize sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act to see that the fields of speculation are very large.

Senator Asselin: All this means that when I requested an answer, I did not obtain it. You have not yet answered my question. When I enquired whether the federal government would propose, before the referendum in Quebec, constitutional changes of jurisdiction between the provinces and the federal government, and whether the federal government would propose these changes before the referendum, I never had an answer. Is it no, we will never have such a proposal from the federal government?

Senator Frith: Should the government finally refer every point of difference to the courts if no settlement is possible? The answer is no. But if a more precise answer is required, I can take note of the question and provide more specific information.

AGRICULTURE

PROPOSED EASTERN CANADA POTATO MARKETING AGENCY

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I am very glad to see the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board here. Since I am against the non-utilization of resources, I should like to ask him a question about the establishment of a marketing agency for eastern Canadian potatoes, a matter of great importance in Prince Edward Island, and in neighbouring areas where they grow fairly good potatoes as well. Is the minister in a position to indicate what progress has been made, what role the Government of Canada is playing and will play, and if he has reason, from his vast knowledge and genuine interest in marketing agencies and boards, for optimism that this regional board will be in place for next year's crop?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): I am sure the honourable senator will realize that I am not likely to have the definitive kind of information that he is seeking. I do know that the Minister of Agriculture is well aware of the difficult potato situation in eastern Canada, and some provincial governments have taken steps towards support of a marketing agency. I shall be delighted to bring this question to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture, and I hope to be able to give a full report shortly.

NOVA SCOTIA

TRANSFER OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SERVICES TO SYDNEY

Hon. Robert Muir: I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government, which concerns the decentralization of government services. In light of the fact that for a period of at least two years when I served in the other place I threatened, cajoled, wheedled and coaxed the government to transfer some services to Sydney, Nova Scotia; in light of the fact that that concept was finally accepted and the necessary land purchased by the Trudeau government; and in light of the fact that the Clark government immediately cancelled those plans, would the Deputy Leader of the Government take notice of this question and make a full and comprehensive report on whether the government is now proceeding with this project, which would mean, as I have been led to understand, an additional 300 jobs in a high unemployment area, and an economically distressed area.

[Senator Asselin.]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I will. I cannot guarantee that the report will be so full and comprehensive as to entirely satisfy the honourable senator, but we will certainly do our best.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

FISHERIES—CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I now have an answer to a question asked by Senator Marshall on April 24 last with reference to the Canada-United States negotiations on the subject of fisheries. It is a long answer, and if honourable senators agree I will place it on the record. If Senator Marshall has any supplementary questions, he can ask them on another occasion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

> The motion in question, which was presented by Mr. McGrath and adopted by the House of Commons on April 23, urges the Senate of the United States to take early and favourable action to "ratify" the separate but linked Gulf of Maine Boundary Adjudication Treaty and the East Coast Fishery Resources Agreement.
> These two treaties were signed by both Canada and the United States on March 29, 1979, subject to ratification by both governments to bring them into legal effect. Since then the Canadian government has consistently and repeatedly urged the U.S. Administration and influential U.S. senators to ensure that these treaties were given early Senate approval. The Senate of the United States must give its consent to these treaties before they can be ratified by the United States. Most recently, the Secretary of State for External Affairs conveyed to his U.S. counterpart, Mr. Vance, Canada's disappointment that, in over a year since the signing of these treaties, Senate consent has not yet been obtained. Mr. MacGuigan pointed out to Mr. Vance the dangers of conflict in the boundary region in the absence of a sound fisheries management régime and pointed out that the government was under pressure from Canadian east coast fishermen to take steps to ensure that fishermen were not prejudiced by the long delay in U.S. ratification of the treaties.
> The government has every reason to believe that the new U.S. Secretary of State, Mr. Muskie, will maintain the commitment of Mr. Vance to the treaties as signed. Whether the Administration can obtain the necessary consent by the Senate, of course, is another matter. The government is keeping this matter under careful surveillance and is examining available options in the event that these treaties are not given Senate consent in very short order.

Senator Frith: That is all I have been furnished with as of today by way of answers, honourable senators.

GRAIN

FEED BARLEY AND OATS—EXPORT PERMITS

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I would like at this point to respond to the question asked by Senator Bielish on April 23 last regarding the desire on the part of some farmers in southern Alberta to export crushed and rolled barley and oats to the United States. At the outset I might inform Senator Bielish that I have discussed this question with the Canadian Wheat Board.

Section 33 of the Canadian Wheat Board Act requires that no person other than the board shall export wheat, oats or barley, or the products thereof, out of Canada, except as permitted under the regulations. Regulation 14 permits the board to grant export licences subject to conditions considered advisable to the board, always including a requirement for recovery from the applicant, by the board or board designate, a sum which, in the opinion of the board, represents the pecuniary benefit inuring to the applicant as a result of the granting of the licence. Therefore, producers wishing to export are treated in generally the same manner as are the board's accredited export agents, who must obtain their export supplies from the board at a price acceptable to the board. The effect is that the difference between that price and the initial price is preserved for the account of all producers in the same way that it is for all other export sales of wheat, oats or barley.

Within these terms, licences are readily available to farmers wishing to export feed barley and oats to the United States. The conditions attached to them are those I have outlined, and the mechanics of meeting them exist in board procedures. If the terms are met, a farmer may truck the licensed commodity to prospective customers across the border. The restrictions which apply to such a movement also apply to grain products as defined in regulations 16 to 19 inclusive. In brief, grain products are those containing greater than 25 per cent wheat or oats or barley, or mixtures thereof.

The Canadian Wheat Board is by law given authority to market wheat, oats or barley in export markets on behalf of producers. If they or anyone else were allowed to freely export grain, the board would be placed in the untenable position of competing with the very people—that is, the producers—on whose behalf it is supposed to be marketing grain.

I might add that if the board were to allow digression from the requirements of the act and regulations, it would, in all fairness, be obliged to extend the same concessions to any and all who wished to bypass the board and negotiate direct sales to United States purchasers. Such sales would be for the seller's own account and at whatever price he was able to negotiate.

I think honourable senators will agree that this would quickly erode the board's marketing effectiveness and its statutory position. Moreover, to ignore the requirements of the act and regulations would be a violation of the law.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Monday, May 5, the debate on the motion of Senator Thériault for the second reading of Bill S-4, to amend the Department of Labour Act.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, the purpose of Bill S-4 was well explained by its sponsor, Senator Thériault, and there is nothing I can or need to add to his explanation. In the course of his remarks in moving the second reading of this bill, Senator Thériault gave a short review of the history of the publication known as the Labour Gazette. My only purpose in speaking to this bill is to expand somewhat on that review, and to add a few complimentary remarks about the Labour Gazette.

As Senator Thériault mentioned, the Labour Gazette was founded in 1900, with its last edition being Volume 78, Nos. 11 and 12, November and December, 1978.

That final edition contains a very interesting article as to its origin and development. The story in question was written by its distinguished executive editor, G. F. Sanderson. I do not know how many editors that publication had over its 78 years of existence, but it is interesting to note that its first editor was a person who later became well known in the public life of Canada, a person who held the office of editor of that publication for nine years, one W. L. Mackenzie King.

The purpose of the original publication is well stated in the article written by Mr. Sanderson, and I should like to quote from it, as follows:

> The Conciliation Act of 1900 establishing the Labour Gazette was introduced in the House of Commons by then Postmaster-General William Mulock, who said the legislation was designed "to provide a useful publication for all classes concerned in industrial life, whether employers or employees" and "to enable them better to understand not only the conditions affecting their own side, but the conditions affecting the side of the other party." In this way, the government hoped that labour and management "would be more ready to adopt peaceful arguments for the settlement of controversies."

Over the years, the Labour Gazette made an important contribution to the industrial life of Canada and to the employee-employer relationship by giving authoritative statistics and factual information on matters pertaining to industry, both in Canada and elsewhere. It developed, too, that it gave more than that in that it began publishing the results of conciliation boards and arbitrations, as well as summaries of labour legislation.

As you know, back in 1900, and for a good many years thereafter, such information would have been very difficult, if not impossible, for many persons to obtain. The Labour Gazette was used by those interested in the labour movement. In addition, it was used as a reference source for many schools and universities. I well remember that in the late 1930s the extension Department of St. Francis Xavier University ran night school or evening classes in industrial Cape Breton for those either involved in or interested in the labour movement. If my memory serves me right, the class was called Labour Economics, and one of the textbooks used was the Labour Gazette.

Of course, as time went on, other sources of information became available. Indeed, there were a great many changes in the labour movement. In the early days the officers of a union also had to work at their ordinary occupations. The evolution has been such that those offices now constitute a full-time occupation.

As more and more information became available from other sources, the original need of the Labour Gazette became less important. This was well summarized in the article by Mr. Sanderson in which he said, speaking as of the date of the editorial:

> Today the Labour Gazette is an independent and lively periodical with a cross-country circulation and a significant readership abroad. From a journal of record, presenting dry statements of fact and collections of statistics, it has evolved over the past 10 years into a unique national forum for the analysis and discussion of prime problems and issues affecting the world of work. At the same time, the magazine has consistently striven not to reflect favouritism toward nor to serve as a platform for the vested interests of any individual or institution. In this way, the Gazette has continued to impart knowledge while furthering understanding and looking for attitudes and concepts suited to our changing socio-economic climate.

It is obvious that the original purpose had to be changed. The publication was no longer necessary in terms of its original purpose. It had to change with the times.

The amount of money to be saved by the cancellation of this publication was not large, and while it was a factor, I do not think it was a major factor in the decision to cease publication.

● (1520)

The original purpose of the publication is no longer necessary, and while it was an interesting publication with an influence probably far greater than its circulation seemed to warrant, nevertheless its continued existence would, I think, be a luxury rather than a necessity.

Honourable senators, I think it is only right that it should be placed on record that in its 78 years the Labour Gazette was an outstanding publication which did much to foster good relationships in our industrial society and, indeed, helped to inform, if that is the proper word to use, many of those who worked hard and long in the labour movement. Those were the days when the labour union leaders were not as highly educated or as well informed as they are today. While we may regret that the Labour Gazette has ceased to publish, I think it is but right that acknowledgment should be made of the great service it rendered to the people of Canada in the 78 years of its existence.

Honourable senators, the intent of the legislation is so clear that no useful purpose would be served by referring it to committee.

[Senator Macdonald.]

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I do not propose to make a speech about the bill, but to say something about the honourable gentleman who has just spoken. Senator Macdonald has done a great service this afternoon to this chamber and to Parliament. He has taken a lot of trouble to look into the history of the Labour Gazette, which is a most honourable history, and has put the information before us in a way for which he should be commended.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Connolly: There was no question of his reading some essay, written by someone in a department of government, on what the legislation means. What Senator Macdonald has done is give his own views on what the Labour Gazette has meant to this country, has meant to the labour movement, and what it has now come to because it has outlived its usefulness. There are now other ways of obtaining the same kind of information and making it available to the people concerned with the problems which the Labour Gazette attacked.

We are indeed indebted to Senator Macdonald for his speech this afternoon. It is a model for a good many of us.

Hon. H. Carl Goldenberg: Honourable senators, I feel that I should say something about the passing of the Labour Gazette. I have spent, as you know, most of my career in mediating and arbitrating labour disputes. To me the Labour Gazette was one of the most valuable publications in that work.

I personally objected to the government's proposal in 1978. I was advised of it and I objected strongly. I was supported in my objection by, among others, the head of the Department of Industrial Relations at McGill University; the director of the Industrial Relations Centre at Queen's University; leading arbitrators and mediators, and professors of industrial relations in the United States and in the United Kingdom. It is my view that the government could have saved far more money than it is saving by this measure by simply cutting out some of that vast volume of literature which I find on my desk every time I return to my office, the larger part of which I throw out.

The statement that the Labour Gazette had a circulation of 2,800 and La Gazette du Travail a circulation of only 750, does not means much. For the people interested and involved in labour management relations that was a large circulation. The publication has not been replaced by any other publication similar to it, and those of us in the field—and I am still in that field—miss it, and will continue to miss it.

I must add that I am rather surprised that we are now dealing with a bill which is intended to allow the Department of Labour to put an end to the publication, when, in fact, the publication was terminated almost two years ago. I find that a little difficult to understand.

In any event, I know the Labour Gazette is dead. I join with Senator Macdonald in his eloquent outline of the history of the publication. I am proud to own copies of the first two volumes, 1900 and 1901, and I can only end by paying a tribute to those who over a period of 78 years made the contribution they did to the Labour Gazette and to Canada, because the Labour Gazette allowed people interested in labour throughout the western world to know what Canada was doing.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

Senator Thériault moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Hicks, seconded by the Honourable Senator Deschatelets, P.C., for second reading of the Bill S-2, intituled: "An Act to implement conventions between Canada and Spain, Canada and the Republic of Liberia, Canada and the Republic of Austria, Canada and Italy, Canada and the Republic of Korea, Canada and the Socialist Republic of Romania and Canada and the Republic of Indonesia and agreements between Canada and Malaysia, Canada and Jamaica and Canada and Barbados and a convention between Canada and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax".—(Honourable Senator Grosart).

Senator Grosart: Stand.

Senator Hicks: Honourable senators, before that order stands, I should like to point out that because of convocations at my university I shall not be here again until May 20. Would you agree to stand the order until that time, as I understand that Senator Grosart has some questions he wishes to raise and which I should like to deal with at that time.

I should point out that no one will be prejudiced as a result of the delay in passing this bill, because there are provisions in it that make it operative from the first day of January in the year in which it is passed. As long as this bill is passed this year, no taxpayer is adversely affected.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Rousseau, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hays, P.C., for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to His Speech at the opening of the session.—(Honourable Senator Lamontagne, P.C.).

Senator Lamontagne: Honourable senators, on the basis of what was arranged earlier this afternoon with respect to my speech, and with the co-operation of Senator Asselin, I am happy to yield to Senator Hicks.

Senator Asselin: I don't know why you mentioned me, but I agree.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, first of all I wish to associate myself with the congratulatory remarks that have been directed to the mover and seconder of the motion for an Address in reply and the compliments paid to the new Speaker of the Senate, who has already shown, I think, that he will be presiding over our deliberations with that wit and good humour that characterize his conduct of affairs generally.

I wish also to refer to the loss, in the relatively short time we have been sitting in this session, of two valuable members of this chamber.

• (1530)

The death of Senator Josie Quart cannot but sadden all of us. Her good nature, wit and humour were a constant joy to all those who had anything to do with her, and she will be missed by this house.

I also want to refer to Senator Desruisseaux who, having achieved his seventy-fifth birthday, has retired. I knew Senator Desruisseaux for a long time before I came to the Senate, and have always had the greatest respect for him. His interventions were always carefully prepared, and were always constructive, useful and informative. I hope that each of these senators will be replaced by someone who will worthily fill the places they have vacated.

Honourable senators, I wish to deal primarily with only two subjects mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, the first of which is the re-affirmation by the Government of Canada that it would increase expenditure on research and development in Canada from 0.9 per cent of the gross national product, which is approximately the present level, to 1.5 per cent by, it is hoped, the mid-1980s. This is a worthy goal, and an achievable one, but I am not sure that it is going to be achieved by increments of only $190 million per year, which is indicated as being the increment that will be applied in the year 1980-81. I will enlarge upon that just a little.

First of all, government research in Canada compares favourably with that in most of the industrialized countries of the world, and so, in a general way, does research in the universities of Canada compare fairly well with research in the universities of other countries in the world, though we have suffered some serious declines in recent years. Between 1969-70 and 1976-77, federal support to universities for research declined from $111 million to $78 million, or by nearly one-third in terms of 1969 dollars. I am reading from a report of the Science Council of Canada, published in 1978.

Corrected to the growth in the Canadian labour force the decline is to $63 million, or by 42 per cent. This deterioration occurred, despite the recommendation of the Lamontagne committee that total spending on research and development increase from 1.1 per cent of the gross national product—the level in 1972—to 2.5 per cent of the gross national product by 1980. Instead of increasing from 1.1 per cent since 1972, as honourable senators know, expenditure on research and development in Canada has declined to something like 0.9 per cent.

I am glad that the government has again expressed its determination to move this figure upward, though not to the 2.5 per cent which was the original recommendation of the Lamontagne committee, and which was the figure seized upon by the Clark government when they came into office about a year ago; though I suspect that the present state of affairs in Canada is such that we could not realistically hope to achieve an expenditure of 2.5 per cent of the gross national product on research and development by the mid-1980s no matter how well-intentioned we were. Indeed, I am concerned that the personnel to enable us to increase our spending to 1.5 per cent by the mid-1980s may not be available, and I will make a brief reference to this in a minute or two.

I now turn to industrial research. As everyone knows, of course, this is where Canada falls behind the other developed countries. Our businesses and industries are not carrying their share of research and development. They are content, generally, to rest upon their laurels, or to depend upon their parent corporations, mostly in the United States. This is not good for Canada. It is not good for Canada's industry, nor is it good for Canada's science and technology.

I read with great interest—and I hope other honourable senators have done so too—the speech of Walter F. Light, the President and Chief Executive officer of Northern Telecom Ltd., delivered in Toronto in February of this year. With respect to Northern Telecom he said:

> My company maintains the largest R&D establishment in Canada and our principal research subsidiary, Bell-Northern Research, employs about 2,900 people, making it the contry's largest industrial R&D centre by far. Big, you say. Hardly. Our West German competitor, Siemens, employs 25,000 in R&D—nearly nine times as many.

This is the company that is by far the largest in terms of undertaking R&D in Canada.

Mr. Light had this to say about research directed towards semi-conductors:

> A recent survey indicated that financial support by governments outside of North America for the development of semi-conductors totalled $1.7 billion. If one includes hidden subsidies such as inflated prices paid by some governments to their selected domestic suppliers, that total probably exceeds $2 billion. Because of the vital importance of semi-conductor technology, one can reasonably assume that half of the $3 billion government subsidization of the U.S. electronics industry last year was directed towards semi-conductor development.
> This suggests that upwards of $3.5 billion is being spent by free world governments to support research on semi-conductors, one of the keystones of the data, computer and telecommunications industries.
> In contrast, I know of no Canadian government program dedicated to the development of semi-conductors. A proposed three year, $50 million federal development program—

Please note, $50 million, as compared with $3.5 billion in the other western countries associated with us, and who are our competitors.—

> —for the electronics industry, introduced in April 1979 allocated $10 million to be used for microelectronics. As of today—

He is referring to February 1980.

> —none of these funds has been committed. In other words, Canada is thinking in pennies, while others are spending big bucks to ensure their positions in the electronic age and a profitable, competitive position in international trade.

This is a sobering thought. Mr. Light ends by saying that if he comes to address these people in five years' time he hopes the situation will be much more optimistic, but does not believe, on the basis of current performance, that it will be.

I referred to personnel requirements, and again I refer, honourable senators, to Report No. 31 of the Science Council of Canada, entitled: "University Research in Jeopardy", but I am not going to quote from it. Suffice it to say that in order to achieve an expenditure of 1.5 per cent of the gross national product we are going to have to provide a great many more technicians and scientists than are being turned out by our universities today. With the levelling off of staffing and student enrolments in our universities, we are not going to have enough people to perform the research and development that would be possible if we did devote 1.5 per cent of the gross national product to it.

On page 12 of this same report they point out, to make the problem more complex, that in about 15 years there will be a substantial increase in demand for academic staff and research personnel. A major intervention by the federal government—because I do not believe the provinces can do it—will be required in the training of scientific and technical personnel in our universities and technical institutions if we are going to conclude the twentieth century in a competitive position in relation to countries in the western world.

I am glad that the statement I quoted has been made again, and that we are striving toward the goal of these expenditures on research and development in Canada. I do not think we in Canada can compete in the modern technological world in which we live unless we are as good as everyone else, at least in some specific areas, and we cannot be that good unless we are prepared to devote a fair amount of our resources to development and to promoting research in the way it is being promoted by West Germany, the United Kingdom, the United States, Japan and Italy. It is true that Italy is lagging a little bit, as is Canada, but the first four countries I mentioned are those which are spending more than 2 per cent of their gross national product on research and development.

I turn now to the Canadian Constitution and the present state of affairs in relation to its reform. I am one who believes that Canadians have been led to believe that a great many more things will be accomplished by constitutional reform than is the case. A great many Canadians feel that constitutional reform will, in itself, solve some of our problems. I do not believe it will. I do not believe that all problems in Canada are legal and constitutional; I believe they are political.

I point out that the British North America Act was passed 113 years ago and, despite all criticism, it has served this country extremely well. Whenever we have been able to agree on what we wanted to do in Canada, we have been able to do it under the British North America Act and very quickly achieve an amendment or make an agreement or bargain between the federal government and the provinces in order to achieve our goal. I refer, of course, to the devices that have made possible the payment of old age pensions by the federal government; all the welfare programs which the federal government has entered into, notwithstanding the original requirements of the Constitution; the payment of unemployment insurance; and the many other changes that have taken place.

I am not suggesting that we do not need to revise or reform our Constitution. Certainly, it is anomalous that it is still an act of the Parliament at Westminster. The Canadian Constitution ought to be brought to Canada; it ought to be patriated. I have no doubt about that. Again, there is no difficulty in doing this if we can agree on how we want to patriate it, and this largely means a review of the division of legislative powers—which everyone thinks is necessary—but, most importantly, it means that we have to agree on an amending formula for the Constitution. We will certainly not be obstructed by any desire of the Parliament at Westminster to hold on to the British North America Act. The question, as I say, is not primarily a legal and constitutional one. These things can be done very quickly. The question is for us to reach political agreement as to what we want to do.

I do not believe that Bill C-60 was the way to go about this, but, in view of the splendid speech of Senator Lang last evening on Bill C-60 and its ramifications, I do not think I have to say another word about it except to associate myself almost completely with the views he expressed. However, I do think that we have to reform the Senate.

As a matter of fact, when I was Premier of Nova Scotia in the 1950s, I wrote to Mr. St. Laurent, the then Prime Minister of Canada, with suggestions how the Senate might be reformed. I do not think a House of the Provinces or a House of the Federation is the way to go about it, but I do think we should allow provincial governments or provincial administrations to have some direct say in the appointment of senators. The recommendation I made to Mr. St. Laurent about 25 years ago was that we should allow a certain proportion of senators from each province to be appointed by the Governor General in Council, but on the recommendation of the Lieutenant Governor in Council of the province concerned. The tenure of office should be the same as for senators appointed as we have been appointed. I do not think the sort of merry-go-round which would have resulted by reshuffling the composition of the Senate after every provincial election, giving the members of it no particular tenure, would have achieved anything; and I do not think it would have achieved the presence of provincial governments in the federal capital as was envisaged by those who advocated this scheme.

Of course, you know, the biggest reform that could occur in this chamber would not require any constitutional change at all. It would merely require the government of the day to make more use of the Senate. In only one of the eight years that I have been here was the Senate used anywhere near its capacity and, even then, not really close to its capacity. When the Honourable Mitchell Sharp was the house leader in the other place, he directed a good deal of legislation to be initiated, and to be studied by committees, in the Senate. Generally speaking, it may be that these eight years have not been typical, and that political instability has made ministers want to keep their portfolios under their own arms and not divest themselves of legislation which they can handle themselves by allowing it to be introduced in the Senate. This is one way in which the Senate could be used much more effectively.

Because of the necessities of the situation which faced the Clark government, ministers were appointed from the Senate. I think our discussions during the brief period when that government was in power were extremely useful and, again, there was evidence that more legislation was to be introduced in and dealt with by the Senate. I am glad that the same situation applies now. Again we have ministers in the Senate.

We tend to think that this is abnormal, but, of course, a great many ministers were appointed from the Senate in Sir John A. Macdonald's time, but not very many in the years of the twentieth century. Perhaps it is a good thing that necessity has compelled the present administration to appoint some ministers from the Senate. I commend them for thus far introducing about a quarter or one-third of government bills in the Senate to be dealt with by this chamber, and I am sure that all of us want to give first-class attention to this legislation. I have confidence that we will deal with it as expeditiously and as carefully as the other place. In fact, I actually believe that we will do the work a little bit better than they would.

My view is that the Senate could be made much more effective just by making a different use of it. As we have done over the past years, I feel we should express our willingness to do additional work and, indeed, our desire to do additional work.

There seems to underlie in all proposals for constitutional change in Canada today the assumption that we ought to strengthen the provincial governments, and disperse the federal authority. For some reason, which escapes me entirely, some Canadians seem to think that this is going to establish a solid unified Canada. I do not believe it at all. I think what this country needs is a stronger central government, and that we must do our work in relation to every part of Canada carefully, sympathetically and even generously, particularly toward some parts of Canada that may need federal intervention and assistance more than others. However, I do not think that we are going to make Canada stronger by making the federal government weaker. I believe the contrary is, in fact, the case.

What we do need, it seems to me, is a national pride and concern for all parts of Canada. Traditionally, most of us in the east and the west have accused Ontario of being selfish in wanting to develop its own industry and thus to promote tariffs and other policies which assisted it at the expense of the west and at the expense of the maritimes.

When I was Premier of Nova Scotia, I had an attorney general who had worked out the figures—I never did check his arithmetic, but I think he was correct—from which he said that if Nova Scotians could buy their automobiles on the world market without tariffs, calculated at that time to protect the motor car industry in Ontario, we would need no transfer payments of any kind whatsoever; that we would save more money than the transfer payments were worth at that time. That was in the mid-1950s, and I know the financial situation has changed greatly now, and that the same argument might not pertain. In any event, I would hope that the people of Ontario would be generous in their attitude towards the rest of Canada.

I note with some concern, notwithstanding the position of the province of Alberta during the 1930s and 1940s when its people were heavily dependent upon the goodwill of the central government and of other parts of Canada, now that that province has become independently wealthy it is close to adopting just as selfish an attitude as the one which was traditionally attributed to the province of Ontario.

Even the fine little province of Newfoundland, in the wake of its discovery of oil off the coast, has started to show the same selfishness, wanting to exclude any sharing by other provinces, even adjacent provinces such as Nova Scotia, in fishing and the exploitation of hydrocarbon resources. I therefore enjoin all Canadians to think of this country as a country, not as a conglomeration of provinces alone.

The recently expressed attitude of three members of the House of Commons in relation to the Michelin Tire Company in Nova Scotia is a case in point. We are fortunate to have in Nova Scotia a company with the most modern technology in the manufacture of automobile tires of any country in the world. Their market is largely in the United States. If we frustrate that company in its development by adding a third plant in Nova Scotia in order to meet the demands of their American markets we may influence them to leave Canada entirely and relocate in the United States. I tell you, honourable senators, that this is not just a figment of my imagination. This, I believe, has actually been discussed by officials of that country.

If the automobile tire manufacturers in Ontario are not technologically up to the Michelin plant in Nova Scotia, let them pull up their own socks. But it is very sad for me to hear members of the other place, largely from the Hamilton area, actually urging the Government of Canada not to assist the development or expansion of the Michelin plant in Nova Scotia. This is the sort of attitude that seems to me to be non-Canadian, to be ultra-provincial, and to be contrary to the best interests of the development of the whole of Canada.

We must, as I say, think and act like Canadians. I do not believe we amount to a row of beans in the world as Nova Scotians, or even as Quebecers or Ontarians. But we do amount to a great deal in the world as Canadians, and I hope that we can develop that Canadianism. I know that this is going to require generosity on the part of those who are in a better position to help than others. It is going to require the application to the solution of Canada's problems of all of us in this chamber, and outside, and I am confident, despite the current difficulties and the current pessimism that one finds in Canada, that Canada will surmount this challenge, and that we will be a greater country in the 21st century than we have been in the 20th century.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

The Senate resumed from Monday, May 5, debate on the consideration of the Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Retirement Age Policies, entitled: "Retirement Without Tears", tabled in the Senate on April 15, 1980.

Hon. John Morrow Godfrey: Honourable senators, when the motion to establish the Special Senate Committee on Retirement Age Policies was being debated, I was somewhat less than enthusiastic about the idea. Like, I am sure, everyone else, I had some pretty firm views on the subject, formed from a lifetime of personal experience. I felt quite capable of sitting down and writing a report on mandatory retirement based on age without hearing any evidence whatsoever. May I say that, while I agree with many of the recommendations of the report, on this narrow question my report would have been somewhat different.

Like me, Senator Croll also had firm views based on his own experience, and based on the fact that he is a great humanitarian, and, as such, he was very sympathetic toward those who don't want to retire at a mandatory age. Senator Croll expressed those views very clearly and unequivocally in his speech in support of the establishment of the committee.

Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), in his speech on this report, stated that the cost involved was far below that of a royal commission. There are many Senate committees that do the work that is often done by royal commissions. The fact that the chairman, Senator Croll, announced the basic finding of the committee on mandatory retirement before it was even authorized makes it somewhat different from the usual royal commissions. Even the terms of reference of the committee in effect amounted to a finding against mandatory retirement based on age. May I remind honourable senators that one of the terms of reference was to report upon "the protection for those over sixty-five against age discrimination in all employment areas". That part of the terms of reference bears the imprint of Senator Croll's drafting and views.

At pages 27 and 28 of the report there is a very fair summary of the arguments for mandatory retirement based on age, and I will list them.

First, the retirement of older workers aids in dealing with the problem of unemployment.

Secondly, it frees avenues of promotion for younger and ambitious employees. If older employees continue in their jobs beyond what has been regarded as a normal retirement age there is a risk of stagnation in the organization as promotional opportunities shrink. Younger executives, in particular, may find their expectations frustrated and there may be some consequent drop in morale and excessive turnover. It may be troublesome when senior executives regard themselves as indispensable and cannot bring themselves to relinquish control.

Thirdly, employers on humanitarian grounds will often permit an employee to continue for several years until the mandatory retirement age, even though it is recognized that the performance of the employee is below standard.

Fourthly, it would be necessary in all cases when older employees did not want to retire that they be retired "for cause". He would have to be dismissed for incompetence after many years of faithful service. This would be a cruel and bitter thing to have to do.

Fifthly, whenever an employee is dismissed for incompetence, the employee can threaten suit for wrongful dismissal. I might say here, as a lawyer with some experience in this area, that, except in very clear-cut cases, it is difficult to prove that there was sufficient cause to justify the dismissal. Such cases are settled probably 99 per cent of the time, usually for a year's salary or more, depending upon the position, length of service, prospects for a new job, and so on.

Sixthly, people do not have any excuse for putting off their retirement planning. If there is merely a zone of retirement without a special date, people tend to drift along in the hope that they will be retained until the last possible moment.

Now, in my admittedly very prejudiced opinion, those are very powerful and persuasive arguments against making retirement based on age at 65 illegal.

How does the report counter these arguments? With respect to the argument that the retirement of older workers aids in dealing with the problem of unemployment, the report says: "Quantitatively this is not an important consideration." It also, quite rightly, points out that this aspect of retirement policy, if valid, should vary depending upon a labour surplus or a labour shortage.

As to the other arguments, how do they deal with them? Very simply. They just ignore them and then go on, at page 37 of their report, to make the flat statement:

> From everything that has been said so far it is clear that the practice of mandatory retirement at a particular age is an outmoded practice which can harm both individuals and the economy.

I will agree that mandatory retirement can harm individuals. What little evidence there is in the report suggests that this is a very small minority indeed if we adopt the thrust of the other recommendations in the report and make provisions for improving the economic well-being of our elderly retired.

How about the economy? The report's only argument is that there aren't many who would be affected, and that mandatory retirement would adversely affect the economy when there is a labour shortage. When there is a labour shortage, surely companies themselves can be relied upon, out of sheer necessity, to adjust their own mandatory retirement policies to take care of a labour shortage, particularly with respect to skilled workers.

• (1600)

Is mandatory retirement an outmoded practice, as is so dogmatically stated in the report, without any authority whatsoever cited to back up the statement?

From my own personal knowledge, and from my reading of some of the briefs presented to the committee, I would say exactly the opposite, although some of our larger institutions, such as the banks, which used to have compulsory retirement at age 60, have raised it to age 65 with respect to newer employees.

The Royal Bank of Canada submitted what I thought was an excellent brief. They gave essentially the same arguments against the abolition of mandatory retirement because of age as are set out in the report. The recommendations of the Royal Bank in that respect are as follows:

> —That government rely on natural forces to determine appropriate retirement ages rather than create legislation to establish or restrict mandatory retirement ages.
> —That employers be encouraged to examine both sides of the retirement question, both early and deferred retirement, and develop policies and plan designs to accommodate their employees' needs in both areas.

I should like to quote further from the brief of the Royal Bank of Canada, which was appended to issue No. 8 of the proceedings of the Retirement Age Policies Committee. I quote from page 8A:10, as follows:

> Perhaps the most significant trend we are witnessing today is towards earlier retirement. While it is still too early to fully assess the impact of the introduction of the early retirement option in the bank, the number of employees electing this option is steadily rising. When one considers that the vast majority of our older staff have a normal retirement age of 60, retirement only a few years earlier than that would not seem significant. What is significant, however, is why these employees are retiring early and what is happening with them in retirement.
> It would appear that one of today's trends is to retire early, embark on a new career or paying hobby . . . and, in ten more years or so, retire permanently. One of the main reasons for this is rather simple: two sources of income add up to more than one.

I might say this is in accordance with my own observations. The Shell Oil Company, for example, has a mandatory retirement age of 60 for all senior executives and 65 for the rest of their employees. A few weeks ago the head of their legal department retired on pension at age 52 to join my old law firm because he did not relish the idea of retiring at age 60.

The trend to earlier mandatory retirement is most noticeable in the accounting and legal professions. This certainly is not because of any tradition; rather, it is because of practical and sometimes bitter experience of what happens when there is not a mandatory retirement age.

They say that old lawyers never die, they just lose their appeal. I have seen mighty law firms in Toronto fade to comparative insignificance because older lawyers, who dominated the firm, insisted on staying on past their prime and dealing with clients' affairs. As a result, most of the bright, young lawyers left, followed by the clients.

The three largest law firms in Toronto have, in recent years, adopted mandatory retirement policies based on age, with some flexibility. The Clarkson, Gordon Company, one of our largest and best known auditing firms, have had, for a good many years, mandatory retirement at age 65. Several years ago, after considerable thought, this was reduced to age 60, with the provision that partners could, upon special request from the firm, stay until age 65.

I understand that all of the large accounting firms now have mandatory retirement policies, with the trend towards a lower age. Their senior partners quite often take early retirement and start second careers.

To state that mandatory retirement at a particular age is an outmoded practice is not in accordance with my personal knowledge, limited as it may be, as to what has been going on in the business and professional worlds in the last few years. If the committee had any authority or statistics for that statement which will show that I am wrong, no doubt some member will point it out to us.

This brings me to a matter where, on the surface, in any event, there appears to be conflict between the report and the speech given by Senator Croll in this chamber on the report. In Hansard of April 22, at page 80, Senator Croll is reported as having said:

> At one time there was a rough rule of thumb that one-third of those reaching the age of 65 would keep on working, one-third would retire before the age of 65 and one-third would retire at the age of 65. This is no longer true. It is indicated that now nearer 50 per cent want to stay on.

At page 50 the report states:

> Statistics Canada estimated that the elimination of mandatory retirement would probably increase the labour force participation rate of the older population by 2 per cent once the floor was reached. In other words, if the labour force participation rate of the older male population were 15 per cent, the elimination of mandatory retirement would increase it to 17 per cent. Somewhat higher estimates were made in the United States. As mentioned earlier, the United States Department of Labour estimated that raising the mandatory retirement age would increase the labour force by about 175,000 to 200,000 persons. In the U.S. in 1978 approximately 3 million workers were 65 and over out of a total labour force of over 90 million.

I find it impossible to reconcile those two statements and would welcome any explanation that Senator Croll can give us.

On the question of mandatory retirement age, my overriding concern is, without it, how does one get rid of the boss and the other senior executives? There are many historical instances of men staying on in command past their prime, with disastrous results. I can never forget that the French army that was so out-generaled by the Germans in 1940 was commanded by General Gamelin, who was then 68. He was succeeded, with no better results, by General Weygand, then age 73.

Gladstone, the great English Prime Minister, was senile for the last eight months he was in office. I have just read Mary Soames' Life of Lady Churchill, and this confirms the oft-told story of Harold MacMillan going to Lady Churchill, on behalf of his cabinet colleagues, to ask her help in persuading her husband to retire because, in their opinion, he was physically incapable of handling the job. She did her best, but without success, as he insisted on staying on for another 18 months, notwithstanding that there were long periods of many months in succession when he could not function as Prime Minister at all.

The report emphasizes the fact:

> There is no clear association between age in a biological sense and age in years. There are many examples of people who retain their physical and mental faculties unimpaired until they are very old.

That is, of course, true. Unfortunately, it is not always easy to detect when one becomes impaired.

I should like to quote from the 17th Victor Horsley Memorial lecture given by Dr. William Goody, an eminent London physician, at University College Hospital in London, England, reported in the October 1979 edition of the World Press Digest, as follows:

> Men and women become more powerful in human affairs as they grow older. Though they may grow wiser with experience up to a great age, powers of intellect, and especially of insight, eventually fail. Then people are positively dangerous in proportion to the powers they wield and to the rate of progression and degree of damage before the problem is detected. The most frightening state occurs when brain failure is detected but concealed for reasons of policy and power.
> Clearly large groups of people, millions perhaps, run the risk of having their lives directed by sufferers from brain failure. In medicine there are several ways of checking whether we are fit for our jobs; but in positions of highest power there are no such stringent precautions.

As a profession we should try to devise the best rule for the age of retirement on the grounds that such an age is most properly determined by the actuarial likelihood of brain failure. We may well select 65 as the age of retirement, even though there are many instances of much longer durations of brain excellence individually. It may be wise that several brilliant surgeons lay down their scalpels at 65 so that one failing operator may be prevented from causing harm to an occasional patient.

I recently read a book by Ross Harkness of the Toronto Star. He tells about Harry Hindmarsh, the boss of the Star, reaching the age of 70. Mr. Hindmarsh had evidently suffered a series of minor strokes which he didn't admit to, and it was the opinion of a least two members of the board of directors that he wasn't fit enough to carry on. There was a mandatory retirement age of 70 which could be waived by the board. Two members of the board were not prepared to waive it and permit Mr. Hindmarsh to continue unless he could produce a doctor's certificate saying that he was capable of carrying on. At the next board meeting, Mr. Hindmarsh produced the doctor's certificate and forced the resignation of the two questioning directors from the board. The point of all this is that the very next day Mr. Hindmarsh collapsed and died. Mr. Hindmarsh's death saved the Star, because he had just verbally agreed, as the chairman of the trustees of the Atkinson Foundation which owned the Star, to the sale of the Star to persons whom I would regard as unsuitable owners. If he had lived another 24 hours, the deal would have been signed and the Star would not have been the vigorous independent newspaper it is today.

I would now like to turn to the question of retirement income. Here I must confess that I had strongly held, preconceived ideas on this subject long before the committee was formed. I am delighted to say that the committee came to the same conclusion, namely, that the private pension system in Canada is a failure for those in the middle and lower income groups, and that the public pension system must be expanded to fill the gap. I will not repeat all the reasons so persuasively detailed in the report and in Senator Croll's speech. I will just repeat one statistic: "In 1975, 81 per cent of unmarried women 65 and over, 74 per cent of the elderly unmarried men, and 60 per cent of elderly couples received no private pension based on previous employment".

May I say that the pension industry and employers have been repeatedly warned over the years by many reputable experts and commentators, that if there wasn't greater coverage of our work force by private pension plans, then the only alternative was for the government to step in and expand the Canada/Quebec Pension Plans. I don't blame the private pension industry for this failure. There are practical problems, which are well outlined in the report, which make it very difficult, in fact almost impossible, for them to significantly improve the situation under the present laws.

There are, however, several questions with respect to the recommendations in the report which I would like to raise. The report at page 67 makes the following statement:

> If no other changes were made in the structure of the Canada/Quebec Pension Plan it may be assumed that the approximate doubling of the contribution levels would yield a pension of roughly twice the size of present levels, or about $450 per month.

The way the report puts it, it all sounds very simple, doesn't it? Double the contribution and you double the yield, after, of course, the five-year phasing in period recommended by the report.

In his speech to this house, Senator Croll said:

> None of the recommendations contained in the report of the special committee will involve any cost to the government, either provincial or federal. It will not cost the government a penny or a nickel—not even a plug nickel.

That is true, of course, but for the ordinary taxpayer it doesn't make much difference if the increased costs are paid by the government out of increased taxes or paid by the taxpayer out of increased contributions to a pension fund.

Senator Croll referred in his speech to a study entitled, "The Retirement Income System in Canada," which has just been issued. It does show that there has grown up in Canada in the last few years what might be termed a retirement income study industry. This study was produced by an interdepartmental task force of officials formed by the federal government in 1976. The task force functioned under the general direction of a steering committee of senior officers from the Departments of Finance, National Health and Welfare, Insurance, and Labour, and from the Privy Council Office and the Treasury Board Secretariat. Its report is in two volumes and runs to about 750 pages. Luckily, they published at the same time a summary of the report which is only 64 pages long, and it is only the summary that I have read.

I might also mention that about the same time, the Ontario government created a royal commission to study this question. The Ontario report, which is reported to run to 10 volumes, is not expected to be ready for some months.

In other words, three different bodies—one appointed by the federal government, one by the Province of Ontario and one by the Senate, were all merrily going along their separate ways studying the same subject. I should qualify this somewhat by saying that the federal government task force, in deference to the Senate, did not go into the question of mandatory retirement because of age. I might say that, rather than duplicating the work of the other two bodies, my own preference would have been to wait until each had brought in its report and then have a Senate committee study their reports and bring in its recommendations.

Senator Croll said in his speech that in politics timing is vital. I completely agree with that statement. The only thing I am inclined to disagree with is his timing in this particular instance. Instead of rushing into print first, after spending a lot of time and money on duplicating research being performed by, as Senator Croll says, "some very competent public servants" who produced a report which he describes as an "excellent one," the senator could have waited to take advantage of their research and the research of the Ontario royal commission. The Senate committee could then have examined the alternatives and recommendations of these two reports and had the final word with our own recommendations instead of the first word.

To digress for a moment. I was co-chairman of a task force formed by the Canadian Council on Social Development on Social Security. Practically all of our research was done for us by the Senate Committee on Poverty, chaired by Senator Croll, and the Castonguay-Nepvew report commissioned by the Quebec government. After examining both of these reports, we eventually came down in favour, with a slight modification, of the two-tier system of guaranteed income recommended by Castonguay-Nepvew. The federal government then issued its orange paper, which followed the recommendations of our committee. True, the Senate Poverty Committee has justly received a lot of favourable publicity, and is a recognized textbook on the subject. The committee that I co-chaired was considerably helped by having the last word and was able to persuade the government to our way of thinking.

To return to the federal government task force report, it states at page 20 of the summary:

> If full cost contribution rates were being charged—rates that would cover the cost of benefits of those now entering the labour force—Canada/Quebec Pension Plan contribution rates would be about double what they now are.

At page 6 of the summary it states:

> If the Canada/Quebec Pension Plan contribution rate is left unchanged, it is currently estimated that both funds will ultimately be depleted just after the turn of the century. If the present contribution rates were maintained until then, and the plans were subsequently put on a pay-as-you-go-basis, under which annual contributions would be approximately equal in amount to annual benefit payments, it is estimated that the contribution rates would then have to be in the order of 6 per cent, compared to the present 3.6 per cent; in later years, the pay-as-you-go contribution rate would be in the 9-11 per cent range depending on demographic developments.

Senator Croll quotes with approval in his speech a statement made by L. E. Coward, whom he describes "as the best authority I know of in this country on pensions."

Mr. Coward stated: "It is true that the Canada Pension Plan Fund will be exhausted in about 20 years if contribution rates are not raised, but it was always intended that they should be raised from their initial very low level".

The federal task force report explains, again at page 6 of the summary, how the present funds were accumulated:

> Since virtually everyone in the labour force pays these contributions, and since in the early years of the plans many of the elderly were not eligible for pensions from the Canada/Quebec Pension Plans, funds of around $14.5 billion and $5.2 billion had accumulated in the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan respectively, by the end of 1978.

[Senator Godfrey.]

It took 10 years for the benefits under the Canada/Quebec Pension Plans to be phased in. The Croll report recommends that the increase in the benefits be phased in over a five-year period only. This will not permit the kind of accumulation to occur with respect to the increase in benefits as occurred during the initial 10 years of phasing in of the Canada/Quebec Pension Plans. No explanation whatsoever is given in the report as to why the double benefits can be phased in in five years when it was deemed necessary to have a 10-year phasing in when the Canada/Quebec Pension Plans were initially introduced.

If, as Mr. Coward says—and Senator Croll obviously agrees with him because he quotes him with approval—the present low rates have to be raised just to maintain the present level, then why did the committee ignore this in its report and flatly state that doubling the rates will double the benefits? Obviously, they won't for very long, if it is to remain actuarially sound.

Surely we should know how much the present rates have to be raised to maintain the same level, then how much above that will have to be charged in order to double the benefit after a phasing in of only five years and maintain it at that level. We will then, and I suggest only then, be in a position to judge whether or not the increased rates that will have to be charged are reasonable under all the circumstances.

The next point I would like to discuss is the question of survivor benefits for widows. At page 91, the report says: "It has been established that one survivor cannot maintain the same lifestyle with even one-half the income". With that statement I completely agree. The present Canada/Quebec Pension Plans provide that a surviving widow receive 60 per cent of her husband's pension, thus recognizing, to at least some extent, that a surviving widow cannot maintain the same lifestyle with one-half the income.

What does the report recommend? It completely ignores this fact, and by providing that public pensions are to be split evenly between husband and wife it reduces the amount of the survivor benefit for the widow from 60 per cent to 50 per cent.

Senator Bird recognized this anomaly in the report, and in the speech she gave on it she stated with considerable ingenuity and logic that the widow would "presumably" be entitled to a survivor's benefit, as at present, of 60 per cent of the husband's 50 per cent; thus her pension as a survivor would be 80 per cent of the total.

My only comment on this is that if that was the intention of the committee, then it should have said so in clear and unequivocal language in its report. Because they didn't say so, I can only presume that the committee overlooked the consequences of this recommendation and didn't realize that it would reduce the survivor's rights of widows from 60 per cent to 50 per cent.

The next point I would like to discuss is the guaranteed income supplement.

Senator Croll in his speech stated, as reported in Hansard at page 82:

> From the very beginning, the committee was completely aware that any proposal to solve the associated problems of retirement and retirement income by the major expenditure of public funds would be a waste of time. The committee from the outset was of the view that there should be no cost to the federal treasury, and that is a point stressed repeatedly in the report.

I was somewhat surprised at this statement. This did not sound like the crusading Senator Croll of old. It is obvious now, of course, that the committee was wrong. It would not have been a waste of time to have proposed a $35 increase per household in the GIS, which the Liberal Party promised in the last election, and the Liberal government has promised in the Throne Speech. I endorse this proposal 100 per cent. It is obvious that it is needed now, particularly for unattached males and females. We cannot wait for improvements in the Canada/Quebec Pension Plans, which eventually will largely replace the GIS, but this won't happen for a good many years. It must be a new experience for Senator Croll to lag behind his party and the government in an area of social reform.

In connection with the GIS, I would also like to refer to a statement made by Senator Croll in his speech. He referred to the present day on the question of selectivity versus universality, and he said:

> No one would think of introducing the principle of selectivity to such programs as old age security—

May I respectfully disagree. When the GIS was introduced some years ago, that was certainly introducing selectivity into the old age security program, because there was a means test in order to qualify for the GIS in addition to the old age pension. The recent addition of $35 to the GIS is a further example of selectivity in the old age security program.

Honourable senators, may I now deal with this matter on a more general note. We often hear these days about human rights, and much highly commendable legislation has been passed in order to outlaw discrimination based on sex, race, religion and age. I have always supported these human rights laws and have been a member of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association for many years. I am a great believer in individual rights and protection of minorities. But somewhere one has to draw the line. There are occasions when individual rights must give way to the interest of the public as a whole. I suppose the simplest illustration of this is where land is expropriated for public purposes such as airports, highways, public buildings, housing and parks. This nearly always creates an uproar, and individuals always suffer as a result. It is a question of weighing the interest of the public as a whole against the suffering, inconvenience and annoyance caused to individual property owners. In weighing these competing interests it is legitimate to consider how many individuals are being affected. The decision not to add new runways to Malton Airport but to build a new one at Pickering was primarily based on the greater number of people affected at Malton. Then, of course, the people of Pickering rose up in arms and, while not nearly as many as at Malton, they eventually forced the government to back off.

Mandatory retirement because of age does cause a lot of suffering, much of it economic, some of it emotional. If that part of the report dealing with retirement income is adopted, then there will be a significant easing in the economic suffering. Furthermore, as the report points out, "quantitatively this is not an important consideration."

In fact, it is estimated, as I have pointed out, that it will only affect 2 per cent of the group over 65. Actually, some good men and women are forcibly retired because of age who could continue to make a great contribution. When this subject comes up in the Senate all you hear about are Senators Arthur Roebuck, Salter Hayden, David Croll, Chesley Carter and Eugene Forsey. I should, of course, remind honourable senators that Eugene Forsey, in one of his last speeches in this house, said that he felt it was proper that he should retire before his growing infirmities became as obvious to other people as they were to him. Nobody, however, mentions the large number of ancient senators in the past who made absolutely no contribution other than to help maintain a quorum during sittings of the Senate; and, of course, we are all aware of some who weren't even capable of doing that.

As I said before, I am mainly concerned with the effect on our economy if commerce and industry are dominated by old senior executives who cannot be gotten rid of decently because mandatory retirement based on age is made illegal. I want to continue to permit mandatory retirement because of age as far as senior executives are concerned with sufficient flexibility, so that there can be extensions in exceptional circumstances.

As far as our political institutions are concerned, we do not need to impose mandatory retirement on elected officials. In a democracy the electors will take care of that, so that we avoid being dominated by old men as they are in Moscow and Peking.

The whole movement to at least extend to age 70 mandatory retirement because of age was started in the United States by representative, and former senator, Claude Pepper, who was, like Senator Croll, a truly remarkable man of about the same age. It is so easy to forget that they are not typical, and to be carried away by the eloquence of their speech and their truly humanitarian concerns.

I believe that government should take a very active hand in social and economic affairs. I am not a devotee of Adam Smith. For that reason I am regarded as somewhat left wing by my friends in the business community. On this occasion I really do believe, however, that governments would be going too far if they stuck their noses into this issue and made mandatory retirement because of age illegal. Their job should be to see that such retirement can be made with comparative economic comfort and otherwise let companies decide in light of their own experience what policy they should adopt.

Over the weekend I was reading the overseas edition of the Manchester Guardian. It contained an article on John Arlott, a prominent sportswriter for the Guardian and a BBC commentator who has just announced his retirement. He is quoted as saying:

> As you get older your techniques get better but you begin to run out of fresh ideas. It's time to give other people a chance.

To that I simply say, hear, hear!

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

CANADA-EUROPE PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING — DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Heath Macquarrie rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, April 22, 1980:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Seventh Inter-Parliamentary Meeting of Delegations from the Canadian and European Parliaments held at Ottawa from 25th to 30th November, 1979.

He said: Honourable senators, I realize it is a dangerous and dubious distinction to be taken up with the last agenda item, but I know why benedictions are brief and I will govern myself accordingly, and I hope to dispense with my wisdom in very short order today.

I should like to say, as a former professor, I am confident that all honourable senators have read the brief, succinct report of the meeting of the European-Canadian Parliamentary Association, which was held in Ottawa and Toronto last November. You may see a discrepancy between the dates given in my inquiry notice and in the printed appendix. This is because the latter refers only to those sit-down sessions of the two delegations. The dates of the meetings with government officers and their very interesting trip to Toronto, the meetings with Speakers and so on, are not referred to.

This, honourable senators, was the seventh annual meeting of the Canada-Europe Parliamentary Group but, so far as my research carries, I believe it is the first time it has been reported upon. At my advanced age I have become somewhat of a pioneer, and I hope that whoever is the Senate co-chairman of the forthcoming meetings will also bring to the attention of the chamber future gatherings of this very important group of people.

It would be impossible to over-estimate the value of our continuing friendly association with the parliamentarians of western Europe. The community has 260 million people; enormous resources, and a vast store of knowledge and experience which is so valuable today. A few years ago there was a period when we seemed to be in danger of wandering away from some of the important priorities—NATO was under question—and we seemed almost to neglect our ties with Europe. I remember having the honour of moving a motion in the other place which actually precipitated a two-day debate on external affairs. The purport of that was that we reappraise our priorities and that we look to Brussels, to the European community, and to NATO.

Our meeting came under a very exciting situation in that for the first time members of the European Parliament had been directly elected, whereas heretofore they had been designated members of the constituent national assemblies. Millions of people voted to elect 410 members of the Parliament of Europe for a five-year term, and, acting in that capacity, these people abandoned sitting together as nationals of a given country and sat in political groupings. Those political groupings comprised people from a number of countries. It was truly a remarkable and encouraging project in supranationalism. While we know the European community has its troubles, as has its Parliament, it is nevertheless a move which should gladden the heart of anybody who believes in such verities as the rule of law, parliamentary free expression, and goodwill among men.

We felt some of the excitement of the Europeans. They, in turn, were very concerned and questioned us about what seemed to be some of the problems in our own country. I was very proud of the great support which was given, and the knowledge which was bestowed upon the meeting, by my colleagues in the Senate—Senators Lapointe, McElman and Tremblay—along with distinguished members of the lower house. We talked of many important subjects which are discussed in the appended report. I will not give you a travelogue or dilate upon the events in Toronto when I was the sedate escort of the group to that great metropolis. Suffice it to say that it was a stimulating, interesting series of discussions from which we emerged enriched.

If any members of the Senate are interested in seeing the report which the members of the European Parliament produced, they will see that they too found it a worthwhile experience. I hope we progress, and give greater emphasis to this association across the Atlantic. Senator Grosart, in greeting the delegates, pointed out how very close we were in miles if you look to the northern isles.

We had frank discussions about fisheries and energy, and we did some soul-searching about the problem of refugees. We had a valuable discussion on international relations. We talked about Iran.

The events since we met enhance the value of a continuing dialogue between the "new world" and the "old world", as we used to call these two areas.

As I look with some anxiety, and at times with alarm, at the international situation, I think of how important it is for us and, indeed, for the United States, to draw constantly and freely upon the wisdom and experience of the Europeans. We should never forget the background which the British have in the Middle East. Perhaps, even more particularly, the wisdom and the pragmatism of the French in that area is of tremendous importance in these difficult times.

The other day on the radio I heard the comments of Harrison Salisbury from Brandon, Manitoba, an acknowledged expert on the Soviet Union—if there is any such thing as an expert on that confused and complex country. He said that while he quite understood and appreciated that the west European allies supported the United States but sometimes had secret misgivings about their policy, he expressed the belief that probably it would be a better exercise in friendship if they were more forthcoming and frank in their point of view.

● (1640)

As we always like to give the last word to an Irishman, I heard Dr. Connor Cruise O'Brien, the editor of the Observer, last Sunday, when I was listening to the international news when I should have been in the kirk. He said that of course it was proper for the United States to be followed and supported fully by their European allies, but he added that at times it would be helpful if we had a clearer idea of where they were going. This forthright approach—not carping criticism, because we know we all walk the same path—and values of that kind gladden my heart when I have the opportunity and honour to meet with our European associates. I think we have enriched our Parliament by developing a meaningful association with them.

On motion of Senator Petten, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Julien Chouinard, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976.

An Act to repeal The Canada-France Trade Agreement Act, 1933 and The Supplementary Canada-France Trade Agreement Act, 1935.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 8, 1980

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Renaude Lapointe, Speaker pro tem, in the Chair.

Prayers.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CELEBRATION OF 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF HANSARD

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I should like to draw your attention to the fact that this year the House of Commons is recognizing the 100th anniversary of the establishment of its Hansard Reporting Service.

At noon yesterday, Madam Sauvé, Speaker of the House of Commons, unveiled a commemorative plaque in the rotunda of the Parliament Buildings, and when that house met at 2 p.m. she read a message of congratulations from Her Majesty the Queen.

I take this opportunity, on behalf of the official opposition in this house, to add our congratulations to those that are pouring in from parliaments and legislatures around the world.

The official reporting staff of the Senate was not appointed until 1916, so our Hansard will not celebrate its centennial until 2016. However, while examining the early volumes of our debates, I came to the realization that the verbatim record of our proceedings goes back to 1871, the volume for that year having been produced by John George Bourinot, who styled himself "Short Hand Writer to the Senate," and who later became the Clerk of the House of Commons. The debates for the years up to and including 1916 were reported by outside contractors.

While congratulating the House of Commons Hansard I take the opportunity to thank the ladies and gentlemen of our own Hansard staff. They deserve high praise for their competence and patience. I am sure it is not always easy to understand all that is said in this house, yet one can hardly tell from reading Hansard that, in truth, a given speech was almost incomprehensible when it was made. Senate Hansard reporters and editors do a sterling job of making readable prose from what at times is rambling rhetoric. For that we thank them most sincerely. The work of all those associated with the production of Hansard is greatly appreciated.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, on behalf of those on this side, I thank Senator Macdonald for reminding us of this important event in our parliamentary system.

There is no question but that Hansard is a most valuable tool to all of us, and we owe a great debt to those who take down our words in shorthand. Not only do they have to listen to us, but they must then proceed to transcribe what we have said, and it is always a wonder how quickly and accurately they do their work. When our work is finished, they have hours of labour ahead of them.

We are much indebted to the men and women of Hansard, both here and in the House of Commons, for the fine job they consistently do.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A) PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS AN APPENDIX

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on supplementary estimates (A) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1981, and I ask that it be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of today and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see appendix, p. 250.)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, I move that this report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND ADOPTED

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented the following report:

Thursday, May 8, 1980

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, to which was referred the request made by Radio Mutuel to record for radio the speech to be made on Wednesday, May 7, 1980, or some other day, by the Honourable Senator Lamontagne, P.C., makes the following recommendation:

That until further notice permission be granted for the audio recording and broadcasting of the proceedings of the Senate.

Respectfully submitted,

B. Alasdair Graham,
Chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Graham: With leave, now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, most of you were in this chamber yesterday when this matter was considered at some length, but by way of explanation I should like to say that we decided in committee this morning to deal with this matter in isolation, and not to deal with the over-all question of television broadcasting in this chamber. That and related matters will be dealt with in due course by the appropriate committee. I do not believe any further explanation is required, except to say that we did cover the matter in considerable depth this morning. As I said, we will be covering other related matters on a future date.

Hon. Allister Grosart (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as Senator Graham has said, there was considerable discussion of this matter in the Senate yesterday and again in the meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration this morning. I think we can say that we are in full agreement with the report that is before us. However, I should like to suggest that the words "in arrangement with the appropriate authority in the Senate" be added to the end of the recommendation. I have discussed this briefly with the chairman of the committee, and the reason I make the suggestion is that it might be unfortunate if this appeared to be a blanket authorization for anyone to come here at any time and record our proceedings. Perhaps the chairman will accept this amendment, just to give us additional protection so as to ensure that we will have control over our affairs.

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, I see no problem with the amendment, and I am perfectly prepared to accept it.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that the report be amended by adding to the end of the recommendation the following: "in arrangement with the appropriate authority in the Senate."?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should just like to add that we had a very open and useful debate on this question. I think the report of the committee, including the suggestions made by Senator Grosart as to the wording of the report, is eminently sensible. I compliment and thank the committee for not only effectively dealing with the matter, but for doing it so promptly.

• (1410)

Motion agreed to, and report, as amended, adopted.

NORTHERN PIPELINE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE EXPENSES TABLED

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development) tabled, pursuant to rule 84, a report of expenses incurred by the Special Committee of the Senate on the Northern Pipeline in the First Session of the Thirty-first Parliament.

He said: I have only one comment. In keeping with this government's attitude on fiscal restraint, this report calls for the expenditure of $15.35.

(For text of report, see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, May 13, 1980, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Hon. Allister Grosart (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Before the question is put, could the Deputy Leader of the Government give us an indication of the business that will be before the Senate and its committees next week?

Senator Frith: Yes. We plan to meet next Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock, and again on Wednesday and Thursday afternoons as usual at 2 o'clock. Then, as I mentioned last week, we may be required to sit on Friday, probably Friday morning at 11 o'clock, to deal with the supply bill. In fact, I think you should so mark your calendars. This possibility was mentioned before and Senator Flynn inquired at that time why we would have to do so. As I recall it, he was satisfied with the eventual explanation given, that it would be too risky to delay its consideration until the following week, the week of May 19. That week starts with Victoria Day. The referendum is on May 20. We do not expect to have any legislation from the House of Commons for that week. It is our intention, therefore, to suggest that we not sit at all that week. I should be able to confirm that by Wednesday of next week.

Next week we will be continuing with the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. There are other items on the order paper to be dealt with, including the debate on the report of Senator Croll's committee. We also expect to conclude our consideration of certain bills now before us, and to receive some new legislation, including, of course, the supply bill. If it works out as anticipated, and we do not receive any legislation from the House of Commons which urgently requires our attention, we will not meet the week of May 19.

Senator Grosart: Could the Deputy Leader of the Government inform the house whether it is the intention of the government, on the weekly motion to adjourn, to follow the practice of former sessions of indicating which committees will be sitting in the week ahead, and what legislative and other matters honourable senators will be asked to deal with in the chamber? I think it is important that that information be on the record from time to time.

Senator Frith: Yes, I think that is a satisfactory practice. We do intend to follow it, and the details of the work for next week are being determined right now.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

BRITISH COLUMBIA

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING RE NATURAL RESOURCES, RAILWAYS AND PORT FACILITIES

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I am very happy to welcome back the Minister of State for Economic Development.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

● (1415)

Senator Donahoe: The house did not seem quite the same in his protracted absence. We are glad to have him back with us today and, since he is here, I would like to direct my question to him.

In the light of the fiasco over the federal assistance to the export of British Columbia coal, would the minister tell us if it is now the policy of his government to cancel existing arrangements with the provinces when the government is approached for funding for different projects?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, no, it is not.

I appreciate the honourable senator's words in welcoming me back. I also read some of the comments that were made here in my absence that indicate to me that I was missed, and it is nice to be missed.

There were even some better comments than that about our beloved colleagues who are not here, and I appreciate all that.

I am sorry that the senator phrased his question with the preamble in such a way that it attempts to lay the blame on the federal government for some kind of undefined fiasco.

The meeting that we had in British Columbia over a number of outstanding matters, including the progress on the development of the northeast coal fields, the railways and the port facilities that are required, was anything but a fiasco. It was a very useful meeting. It was a meeting of minds between about eight federal cabinet ministers—it may be seven, and I stand to be corrected on that—and 14 ministers from the British Columbia cabinet. At the conclusion of that meeting we had proceeded substantially to an agreement on a whole package of things—such things as the northeast coal fields, Ridley Island, Roberts Bank, Trident Aircraft and the Vancouver Trade Centre. I am not trying to leave the impression that all of these matters were conditional on the others, but there was a great deal of enthusiasm and sincerity that progress was being made.

There are some words in the press now about a fiasco, and other things. I think that we should be patient for a day or two, and I am sure that we are going to have complete agreement on all of those things to the stage where they can go forward.

So I do not accept the preamble to the question at all. It was a very useful meeting. A lot of progress was made that is going to enhance the economic development of that part of our country, and not only that part but the entire country.

Senator Donahoe: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. I am prompted by the response to my first question to recall a premiers' meeting at which I was present along with the former Premier of Newfoundland, Mr. Joseph Smallwood. He was a little less than enthusiastic about what was being accomplished at the meeting, and finally, when it was his turn to speak, he said, "Well, I am prepared to say that this meeting was a success just by reason of the fact that it was held." I am reminded of that by the answer I have just received from my honourable friend.

My supplementary question relates to the minister's saying that Ottawa's commitment to help move the coal was enhanced. I am not quite sure what "enhanced" means, but I am sure the minister knows what it means because that is the word he chose to use. He said Ottawa's commitment to help move the coal was enhanced at the meeting of federal-provincial cabinet ministers in Victoria. That prompts me to ask: Is federal assistance going to be made available to help move coal in northeastern British Columbia to port for ultimate export to Japan, and, if it is, is this assistance tied in any way to a renegotiation of the federal government's commitment to assist in the Alaska oil pipeline project?

Senator Olson: No, it cannot be put down exactly in those terms. Starting back at the beginning of the question, it is a fact, as I announced in Victoria at the conclusion of the meeting between the two cabinets, that the federal government made a substantial additional commitment to the totality of what is required to get the infrastructure in place so that coal can be brought to export position. However, it must also be taken into account—I am not prepared to discuss the details now, because they have not all been worked out—that a large part of that commitment can perhaps be called start-up costs, because there is some cost recovery involved in it.

We raised the question of the Alaska pipeline. We asked them to clear up that matter too, because both Alberta and Saskatchewan have long since provided us with an undertaking that there will be non-discriminatory tax on that pipeline, in keeping with the Canada-United States agreement. The agreement has not been signed, because there was the condition attached to it that if the deal was better for other provinces then they wanted the same treatment, which is a perfectly reasonable attitude.

What I am saying is that we put that matter on the table and said we would like it cleared up. It was one of the matters discussed.

Committees of cabinet have to face the fact that they are not decision-making bodies. All decisions have to be referred to the Premier of the province and the Prime Minister. I understand that there was some misunderstanding about that.

However, I want to add that I think we would do Canada a great disservice, and so would the press, if there were any attempt to hold up these things to the point where what I think is a good economic development agreement is scuttled. I can tell you now that I am not going to jeopardize the final negotiations in any way by going into that. We do not want things like this to go down the drain when there is a good possibility of their being successful.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

TASK FORCE ON REVIEW OF UNIFICATION OF THE CANADIAN FORCES

Hon. Jack Marshall: Could the Deputy Leader of the Government confirm the published reports that the Minister of National Defence plans to reject the proposal of the Task Force on Review of Unification of the Canadian Forces that there be a return to distinctive uniforms for the three arms of the service?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): No, I cannot confirm it. I take it that I am being asked to pass this question along. In direct answer to the question, I cannot confirm or deny it.

Senator Marshall: If the proposal has not been rejected, would the Deputy Leader of the Government extract from the Minister of Defence information as to whether there is going to be a review to consider it? Would he also make a report to the Senate on the nine major problems outlined in the Fyffe report; and, in consultation with his leader, would he consider the referral of the Fyffe report to the appropriate committee of the Senate so that it can delve into this very important matter, which has to do with the future of the Canadian Forces?

Senator Frith: I take it, Senator Marshall, that the antecedent to "he" in most of that question is the minister, and not me. I will pass the honourable senator's comments on to the minister.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

FEDERAL AID FOR CONSTRUCTION OF TRADE AND CONVENTION CENTRES

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: My question is for the Minister of State for Economic Development who has just told us that the government has announced a grant of $17 million towards the construction of a convention centre in Vancouver. Do I understand that none of the financial assistance that had been promised to the city of Montreal for the building of its convention centre will be forthcoming?

Why is it that $17 million can be found for the city of Vancouver, yet nothing can be found for the city of Montreal? Furthermore, what has happened to the help that had been promised to the cities of Edmonton, Ottawa and Halifax for the same purpose?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the fact is that the aid to the Pacific Trade and Convention Centre to be located in Vancouver was committed by this government prior to May 22, 1979. The government honoured that agreement because that commitment had been made. With respect to the other cities the honourable senator mentioned—Edmonton, Montreal, Toronto, St. John's, Ottawa and other places—as far as I can determine no commitment was ever made by this government either before or after May 22, 1979. That commitment was made by the government that was in office between May 22, 1979 and February 18, 1980.

As I understand it, there were no commitments given to the extent that contracts were let. There may have been some anticipation, but what was offered, I think, was something in the neighbourhood of 25 per cent of the cost for convention centres per se. All of those applications are still before us. We are going to hold a meeting as soon as we can to study the parameters that are involved, and, in keeping with our other stated policies of fiscal restraint, I cannot predict at this time what the result will be. However, that is the difference between Vancouver and the other cities which are waiting to see what the policy may be.

Senator Charbonneau: So that I understand the minister, the Montreal commitment—whether it be 25 per cent, or whatever—is now cancelled. At least, it is for the time being.

Senator Olson: The Montreal commitment, whatever the degree of commitment, as far as I understand, is in the same category as all the others I have mentioned.

ENERGY

TAXATION AND EXPENDITURE TO ACHIEVE SELF-SUFFICIENCY

Hon. Cyril B. Sherwood: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. Mr. Marshall Crowe, the former chairman of the National Energy Board, said earlier this week that $200 billion in energy investment would be necessary for Canada to achieve energy self-sufficiency, and that this money would, of necessity, come from the cashflows of the energy companies.

In light of Mr. Crowe's estimate—which seems to be a common one—would the minister tell us if, in considering possible taxes on energy companies, the government is aware that the achievement of energy self-sufficiency could be seriously delayed?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I am sure the honourable senator wanted to say $200 billion instead of $200 million. I really do not think it would be proper or wise to comment on an assessment that has been made by people outside of the government, however well-informed and eminent they may be. Therefore, I cannot answer a question relating to where the government will find the amount of money that is calculated by others.

Senator Sherwood: Honourable senators, could the minister inform us as to whether or not the government is considering new taxes, or a tax increase, designed to fall directly on the energy companies?

• (1430)

Senator Olson: I shall take that question as notice and refer it to the Minister of Finance. As my honourable friend is aware, it is the Minister of Finance who considers these types of things and makes recommendations to cabinet thereon. I rather doubt, however, that he is going to advise my honourable friend as to the kind of fiscal changes, including tax matters, before they are announced by way of a budget speech, and no date has yet been set for the bringing down of a budget.

Senator Asselin: When will that be?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I would be pleased to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is prepared to tell Senator Asselin when the budget is going to be brought down. That question has been asked in the other place several times.

NATIONAL REVENUE

BUDGETS—INCREASES IN TAXATION

Hon. Allister Grosart (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wonder if the minister would care to assure the Senate that, in the event that additional taxes are imposed in the near future, they will be announced in a budget in the normal way.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, we could get into a lengthy debate as to what is normal and what is not normal. It is a perfectly normal thing for Ways and Means Motions to follow budgets by several weeks and, in some cases, several months. It would require a fairly lengthy debate before we could come to any agreement on that one.

Senator Grosart: A supplementary, honourable senators. Would it not be possible for the minister to answer the question? It is very simple, and I shall repeat it. If additional taxes are to be imposed, will they be imposed in the normal way in a budget? All he has to say is "yes" or "no."

Senator Olson: I expect that that will be the case, yes.

Senator Asselin: He doesn't know.

Senator Lamontagne: What about Conservative precedents?

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

JAPAN—FOREIGN INVESTMENT CONTROLS

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. My question arises out of the recent visit of the Prime Minister of Japan to Canada, and specifically some comments he made at a press conference.

The Prime Minister of Japan indicated that, in his opinion, if Canada wants to increase its exports, it should both improve the western transportation system and relax its foreign investment controls. It is the second part of that particular hypothesis that interests me. It appears to be in direct conflict or contradiction with the expressed opinion of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who has advocated a strengthening of FIRA and a consequent discouragement of foreign investment.

I wonder, in the interests of investment in Canada generally, whether the minister responsible for the economic development of the country could let us know which of these two courses he thinks is the better one for Canada to follow.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I do not see any great conflict involved in that. I understand my honourable friend was either quoting or paraphrasing a statement made by the Prime Minister of Japan. Any such statement, of course, represents only Mr. Ohira's opinion, and while that is something we take into consideration, obviously we in Canada make our own laws.

As to the comments attributed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I would not like to say whether they were accurately reported. We have stated that we do intend to increase Canadian ownership of our energy resources rather significantly in the coming decade. As to the other details that were involved, I do not see any great conflict. It may be merely that two people have a difference of opinion.

Senator Doody: I am not quite sure I understand the answer. In any event, I shall read it later in Hansard. Perhaps a supplementary question might resolve the matter.

Is it the intention of the Government of Canada to try to raise the $200 billion necessary to make Canada self-sufficient in energy internally, or is it the intention to encourage foreign investment in this field?

Senator Olson: I expect, honourable senators, it will be a combination of both.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I am overwhelmed by the deluge of information that comes from the minister. Would he care to give me some idea of the proportion of each, since it is going to be some of both?

Senator Olson: No, I am not prepared to comment on that today.

Senator Doody: Once again the honourable minister is batting one thousand—no information.

Hon. Allister Grosart (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Did I understand the minister to say that part of the package would be to encourage foreign investment?

Senator Olson: No, I did not say that at all. The honourable senator was talking about—well, I guess maybe I did. However, any such foreign investment would have to be compatible with the very firm policy of this government to get Canadian equity in our energy resources up to 50 per cent by 1990.

Senator Grosart: I am sure the minister would agree that he did say that it would be part of the policy to encourage foreign investment in our energy resources.

● (1435)

Senator Olson: I said it would be a combination of both. I did not put more emphasis on one aspect than the other. But if you want my private opinion, quite apart from the government statement, I think the encouragement would be on more Canadian participation in that investment package.

Senator Grosart: That is not what the minister said.

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO JAPAN

Hon. Martial Asselin: Could the minister say whether, during the visit of the Prime Minister of Japan, the Government of Canada succeeded in convincing him to buy our nuclear reactor?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I shall have to take that question as notice. I expect that if discussions had reached a point where an announcement could have been made, then such an announcement would have been made by now. But I shall ask the Prime Minister the specific question put to me by the senator.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: Could the minister also find out whether it is true, as was reported in the press, that Japan refused to buy a Canadian nuclear reactor on the pretence that the Japanese will soon be coming out with their own nuclear reactor?

[English]

Senator Olson: I shall have to take that as notice too.

HOUSING

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION—LOW-RENTAL ACCOMMODATION

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question which Senator Charbonneau asked on May 1 dealing with CMHC. He asked why does CMHC intend to stimulate the housing industry when rental units are empty, and then he asked two supplementary questions. With your permission I would like to have the answers taken as read.

(The answers follow:)

"Why does CMHC intend to stimulate the housing industry when rental units are empty?"

CMHC has no plan in mind for the indiscriminate stimulation of the housing industry. The Corporation does, however, maintain an awareness of the situation in specific rental markets across the country. While on a national basis, the vacancy rate suggests that a sufficient level of vacancies exists, this situation does not exist in all rental markets. For example, the latest vacancy rate information shows that the vacancy rate in Vancouver and Victoria is close to zero. While in Toronto and certain other markets the rate is less than 2 per cent. A three per cent rate is viewed as normal for a well functioning rental market.

How many rental units are vacant on a national basis?

CMHC conducts a semi-annual survey of vacancy rates of rental units in the twenty-three largest centres in Canada. This survey, which covers almost all rental buildings having six units or more, was most recently done in April 1980. It shows that for the 1,242,000 units surveyed, 35,000 were vacant. This is a vacancy rate of 2.8 per cent.

Is government considering an increase in funding for RRAP—rural and urban?

Yes. CMHC is seeking approval for an increase in funding for RRAP—rural and urban.

ENERGY

OIL IMPORTED FROM MEXICO—COST OF CONVERSION

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I wish to reply to a question asked by Senator Charbonneau during Question Period on May 1 last, concerning negotiations with Mexico for oil imports, and the cost of converting that oil for use in Canadian refineries.

Negotiations are still under way with Mexican officials, and, as I have stated in the Senate before, until an agreement is signed I obviously cannot speculate on the actual price or other details under negotiation. However, I have ensured, as requested by the honourable senator, that the Canadian negotiators are fully aware of his concern that some Mexican heavy crude may not be capable of being processed in eastern Canadian refineries without conversion. I am sure that the honourable senator will be pleased to know that indeed our negotiators are fully aware of these facts, and that they are being taken into account in the negotiations.

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE FOR FARMERS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I wish to reply to a question asked by Senator Phillips during Question Period on May 1 concerning assistance to Canadian farmers towards the purchase of seed, fertilizer, pesticides, et cetera.

The Minister of Agriculture has stated that consideration will be given to a program that might include assistance with respect to interest rates, long-term credit sources from the private sector, and possible changes in the Farm Credit Act. As I have said, such measures are under consideration and I will be pleased to keep honourable senators informed of any future announcements in this respect.

INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE TO SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I wish to reply to a question asked by Senator Muir during Question Period on Tuesday, April 29, concerning possible financial assistance to the Sydney Steel Corporation.

I wish to assure the honourable senator that the government recognizes the importance of employment at Sysco to the economy of Sydney and Cape Breton in particular, and to Nova Scotia and the Atlantic region.

Since 1977 the Government of Canada, through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, and the Government of Nova Scotia have provided joint funding in an amount of $27 million for projects relating to capital work and equipment at Sysco as well as for business planning studies. These business studies were aimed at seeking means of developing a self-sufficient steel industry for Cape Breton.

This government reaffirms its willingness to discuss viable future options for the Sydney Steel Corporation with the Government of Nova Scotia and with the management of the company. We are awaiting further information from the Government of Nova Scotia and the management of Sysco. Meanwhile, officials of both governments are continuing discussions.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

QUESTION PERIOD—DELAYED ANSWERS

Hon. Allister Grosart (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Minister of State for Economic Development a question for purposes of clarification. It has to do with delayed answers, particularly with respect to the delayed answer to the first question which he asked to be taken as read.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Yes, I did ask that.

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Grosart: I wonder if he would explain just what he meant by that, because it is a new practice in this place.

Senator Olson: It is probably a practice that has not been used much, but it has been used a number of times. Rather than having an answer which is taken as read printed as an appendix to Hansard, the practice is to place it in Hansard, at the point where it is mentioned. In other words, it is taken as read, so far as my interpretation goes. It is considered by Hansard to have been read by me.

Senator Grosart: I would suggest, honourable senators, that that is a dangerous practice and one that should not be accepted by the Senate. I say that because once an answer is taken as read—or we might say "taken as said," which would be more accurate—it means that it has been put on the record as if it had been said in this house without any response or comment being made. It is then taken as an accepted and acceptable answer. I suggest that that is a bad practice, unless the answer is long and detailed, in which case the minister responding should indicate the substance of it and seek the approval of the Senate to have it taken as read for the reasons that I have just indicated.

I have no idea what was in the particular answer today, what its purport was, or whether it proposed something which the Senate might act or decide upon.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do not think we need have a great debate about this, but I disagree that that answer should not be taken as read. I will give Senator Grosart an undertaking that, if there is any proposal or suggestion in a reply, I will screen it out. I will also give him an undertaking that every time I have delayed answers which are long and which seem to be of interest to a fairly narrow group—I mean "narrow" in the sense of "regional"—I will ask permission to have the answer taken as read.

If members of the opposition would rather have me stand here and read the answer out in full, I will do so. There is no question about that. In the alternative, I could ask that it be printed as an appendix to Hansard, but the honourable senator understands the difficulty there is that the answer will appear at the back of the daily issue of Hansard. That may be an objectionable practice. I have no problem with it, but that is the way Hansard will deal with it, and that is the way it will reach hundreds, and perhaps thousands, of readers. It just seems to me a little bit better to try to make these delayed answers easily read.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I agree with much of what the minister has said, but I would commend to him a practice which is commonly used in some legislatures in such cases, and that is to extend to the questioner the courtesy of advance notice of the written answer so that he or she can then decide whether the answer is one which should be taken as read, or actually read to the Senate so that it can be discussed. That is a simple process, because I am quite sure that in most such cases—perhaps in all such cases—the minister will have the reply on paper. I suggest, therefore, that the ministers adopt that practice.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that is a great idea, and I would suggest to the Acting Leader of the Opposition that a lot more information would be forthcoming a lot sooner if those on his side would give us notice of the questions they are going to ask.

Senator Grosart: That was not the practice of the honourable senator when he was on this side in the seat on my left.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

RENEWAL OF NORAD AGREEMENT—REFERENCE TO PARLIAMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some answers to questions that were asked previously.

On April 22, 1980, as reported at page 71 of Hansard, Senator Macquarrie asked a question concerning the renewal of the NORAD agreement, with a reference to Parliament.

I do not propose to read the question because it is already in Hansard, but the answer is as follows:

> The question of a possible parliamentary review of the NORAD agreement has been studied by the government. Without presuming on any decisions which may be taken after discussion with relevant committees, it is hoped that procedures will soon be initiated enabling a parliamentary contribution to be made on the matter.

I have an answer to a further question asked by Senator Macquarrie at the same time on the same subject. That question is also on the record and I shall not repeat it. The answer, which is related particularly to the fact that the agreement is due to expire on May 12, is as follows:

> The question of extension of the current NORAD agreement which expires on May 12 is currently under discussion with the United States government. Additional comment on this matter would be inappropriate while these discussions are under way.

FISHERIES—CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have the answer to a question asked by Senator Marshall on April 24, 1980, as reported at page 114 of Hansard. The subject of his question was "Fisheries—Canada-U.S. Negotiations." It had to do with the loggerhead situation between Canada and the United States in respect of seabed mining and the law of the sea. The answer is as follows:

> Canada and the United States have been co-operating on a number of important law of the sea issues throughout the LOS Conference but there are some fundamental differences in the two countries' positions, particularly with regard to the question of seabed nickel production. The United States' position at the Conference on seabed mining, which would guarantee seabed miners a minimum percentage of production independent of world nickel market conditions, has caused Canada concern and we are hoping they will adopt a more flexible attitude. I am pleased to advise that as a result of the meeting between the SSEA and the then U.S. Secretary of State in Ottawa on April 23, Canadian and U.S. officials are to meet in the near future to try to resolve these difficulties.

Senator Marshall asked a further question on the same subject on the same date, and in that question he referred to the motion that was discussed in the other place on unanimous consent. The answer is as follows:

> The motion in question which was presented by Mr. McGrath and adopted by the House of Commons on April 23 urges the Senate of the United States to take early and favourable action to "ratify" the separate but linked Gulf of Maine boundary adjudication treaty and the East Coast Fishery Resources Agreement.
> These two treaties were signed by both Canada and the United States on March 29, 1979, subject to ratification by both governments to bring them into legal effect. Since then, the Canadian Government has consistently and repeatedly urged the U.S. administration and influential U.S. Senators to ensure that these treaties were given early Senate approval. The Senate of the United States must give its consent to these treaties before they can be ratified by the United States.

• (1450)

> Most recently, the Secretary of State for External Affairs conveyed to his U.S. counterpart, Mr. Vance, Canada's disappointment that in over a year since the signature of these treaties, Senate consent has not yet been obtained. Mr. MacGuigan pointed out to Mr. Vance the dangers of conflict in the boundary region in the absence of a sound fisheries management regime, and also that the government was under pressure from Canadian east coast fishermen to take steps to ensure that fishermen were not prejudiced by the long delay in U.S. ratification of the treaties.
> The government has every reason to believe that the new U.S. Secretary of State, Mr. Muskie will maintain the commitment of Mr. Vance to the treaties as signed. Whether the administration can obtain the necessary consent by the Senate, of course, is another matter. The government is keeping this matter under careful surveillance and is examining available options in the event that these treaties are not given Senate consent in very short order.

ENERGY

EXPORT TAX ON ELECTRICITY

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question that was asked by Senator Asselin on May 7.

[Translation]

If I remember aright, honourable senators, the question was asked in French, but I deeply regret that the answer is in English. I can translate it or read it in French. In any case, I am trying to obtain answers in French to the questions asked in that language.

Senator Asselin: I can understand and I can even translate English.

Senator Frith: Fine, but I think this is a matter of courtesy. [English]

The question was as to whether the government was going to compensate for the oil price increase by levying an export tax on electricity.

The answer is that, so far as the tax on electricity is concerned, there has been no discussion with respect to a tax, as the honourable senator suggests, and certainly no decision has been taken along those lines. Mr. Lalonde has no such tax or levy under consideration.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

IRAN—DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question asked by Senator Nurgitz concerning diplomatic relations with Iran. His question appears on page 96 of Debates of the Senate for April 23.

The pith of the question was whether Canada had given any further thought to severing diplomatic ties with Iran. The answer is as follows:

> On April 23 the Secretary of State for External Affairs announced a number of limited measures against Iran and warned that if diplomatic approaches to be made by Canada and other countries to Iran did not yield satisfactory results by May 17, consideration would be given to implementing further measures. Canada has thus joined with the EEC member countries, Japan and Australia, in supporting the sanctions which the U.S.A. unilaterally announced on April 7.
> There are presently no Canadian diplomatic staff in Tehran and the Iranian Embassy in Ottawa is, as a result of the policy announced on April 23, limited to one Iran-based diplomatic officer with his supporting staff. For Canada alone to break relations with Iran would therefore have little impact on the situation. At this stage no other country is contemplating such a move, so far as we are aware. However, in the absence of a solution to the situation, the eventual possibility of concerted action of this kind cannot be ruled out.

JUSTICE

HONOURABLE LÉO LANDREVILLE—FEDERAL COURT RULING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question asked by the Leader of the Opposition yesterday. The question was in French, but I am sorry that I am unable to provide a reply in French as the answer which has been supplied is in English.

The Leader of the Opposition's question related to the ruling of the Federal Court in the case of the Honourable Léo Landreville, former judge of the Supreme Court of Ontario. The question was whether at the time of his resignation in June, 1967, Mr. Landreville was entitled to a pension under the Judges Act by reason of permanent infirmity. The court had held that Mr. Justice Landreville was entitled to have the matter decided by the Governor in Council.

The answer to the question is as follows: The decision is presently being reviewed and a decision will be taken within the next few weeks as to whether to appeal.

Senator Asselin: The matter will be submitted to the appeal court?

Senator Frith: The Governor in Council is studying the question and will decide within the next few weeks whether to appeal the judgment of the Federal Court. I believe it is a decision of the Trial Division of the Federal Court. If so, the appeal would be to the Federal Court of Appeal.

ENERGY

GOVERNMENT NUCLEAR POLICY

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question asked by Senator Balfour on May 5 concerning a domestic and international nuclear policy inquiry. The answer is as follows:

> The government does not intend, at this time, to initiate an inquiry into domestic and international nuclear policy in Canada. Rather, a thorough appraisal of nuclear industry policy is being carried out on an interdepartmental basis. When this government appraisal is completed, likely by mid-summer this year, a decision will be taken in the context of a new energy strategy as to further investigations and inquiries that may be required. This internal study will assist the government with some near-term decisions with respect to international trade and it will also provide a solid basis for future planning.
> The Prime Minister has assured the members of all parties that there is no intention of preventing the Canadian public, concurrently or subsequently, from participating in various ways of expressing their views relative to nuclear policy. The many avenues of advice to the government which are open to the public will be relied upon during this present period of government study, as has always been the case in the past.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

NORAD HEADQUARTERS—VISIT OF CANADIAN PARLIAMENTARIANS

Hon. Allister Grosart (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it is fair to compliment the Deputy Leader of the Government on presenting so many answers at this time. We on this side of the house have complained about the long delay in receiving such answers. Senator Frith has given us an excellent demonstration of the fact that we can get answers promptly. I compliment him and hope that he will carry on that practice, which is most helpful to us on this side.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Grosart: I should like to ask a question after hearing the answer concerning NORAD. Was there a recent official visit of Canadian parliamentarians to the NORAD headquarters? If so, what was the composition of the group, what was the purpose, and what was the result? I do not expect an answer immediately, but perhaps the deputy leader will be good enough to provide us with an answer in due course.

Senator Frith: Yes, honourable senators, I shall.

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Rousseau, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hays, P.C., for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his Speech at the opening of the session.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Senator Frith: I yield to my colleague, Senator Wood.

Hon. Dalia Wood: Honourable senators, it seems like yesterday that I was waiting at the door of the Senate in awe and apprehension for my name to be called. I heard it well. My flash impression at that moment was of walking into history and the past, but with a mandate and a desire to work in the present for the benefit of future generations of Canadian people.

The meaning of the institution of the Senate of Canada was further implanted in me by my escorts as we walked along the hallowed aisle. May I, at this time, express my fond appreciation to the Honourable Senator Pietro Rizzuto and the Honourable Senator Ray Perrault, whose meticulous attention to their roles as sponsors would not allow me to stray one inch along the way.

The next hurdle was to remain intact while contemplating my presentation to the sombre concept of the Speaker. Within moments, I felt part of this organization and ready to work. The Honourable Senator Grosart was admirable in his cordial expressions of welcome and his genuine smile of brotherhood. I subsequently observed him conduct the deliberations of that first session in the Thirty-first Parliament. It was my first session also, one in which to start learning, and I am grateful for the knowledge and inspiration which I received from Senator Grosart.

I have warm words of congratulation for the Honourable Jean Marchand, Speaker of the Senate. My knowledge of his performance goes back in time, now referred to as history. May the vigour with which he loved and defended his cause be imparted to us, and may it serve as our raison d'être during this impending crunch. His years of battle for a more human social order in Quebec, followed by his efforts for a stronger Canada as a lasting way of developing a better Quebec, are perhaps now culminating with the Speech given in this chamber on April 14 dedicating the Government of Canada to the forces for a "no" vote.

May fortitude continue to reign in his heart and mind so that his present non-partisan role as Speaker may be invoked in this chamber in such a way as to persuade all honourable senators to become involved in this epic debate without having to compromise their political affiliations. I am certain that all Canadians would ask this of him, just as all Canadians will be expecting unyielding efforts from the Senate in using every means of communication at their disposal, even at this late hour. We will all keep our own time sheet, because Canadians will be asking for an accounting of their Senate, now as well as in future times.

I would also like to congratulate the Honourable Senator Rousseau for her eloquence and courageous delivery in opening the debate on the Speech from the Throne. In addition to this, honourable senators, we must commend Senator Rousseau for her enthusiastic and untiring efforts as a fully fledged "Yvette" in the referendum crisis.

I offer my congratulations also to the seconder of the motion, the Honourable Senator Hays, and to the Honourable Senator Ray Perrault, recently opposition leader and now Leader of the Government in the Senate, in which role I wish him success. To both him and the Honourable Senator Royce Frith, I pledge complete devotion and co-operation.

To the Honourable Senator Petten, the government whip, I offer my thanks for his patient co-operation in the past. I trust I can look forward to more of the same in the future.

There is one more example of a memorable senatorial inspiration that I want to put on the record. This occurred some twenty years ago, during my involvement with a national industrial convention which was being held in Quebec City. I was there simply because my husband was chairing the meeting, and it was customary for the spouse to busy herself with women's activities, such as sightseeing, or any pursuits that would serve to keep us away from business sessions. The featured speaker at the women's luncheon, was the Honourable Senator Quart of Quebec City. Let me simply say that our group was motivated and inspired in such a way that I, for one, decided never again to be a satellite in the social, business or political spheres. The late Senator Quart, when greeting me at my investiture, simply whispered a reminder that she was there when it all started for me. I will always remember Senator Quart's elegant serenity. I will also miss her deeply.

If, honourable senators, during this my initial speech, I give glimpses of myself, a born and bred Montrealer, subsequently classified in the 1960s as an anglophone Quebecer, it will be simply to relate viewpoints on human anguish created by unstable, insidiously inspired political barriers—in other words, as always, man's inhumanity to man.

The sixties brought us the quiet revolution, the positive effects of which are evidenced everywhere, and not least in the Parliament and bureaucracy of Canada. It gave to Quebec, for example, for the first time, a ministry of education, and this and other major breakthroughs were instituted without ever having to refer to the British North America Act. It rid us of many shackles imposed by previous Quebec governments, the scars of which will remain in our social history. The Honourable Senator Marchand will remember the deportation of Archbishop Charbonneau for having fought the tyrannies of false prophets.

I personally dread and abhor the thought that the positive results of the quiet revolution of the sixties will succumb to a movement that will virtually cripple Canada and destroy the will and economy of Quebecers as they are goaded into becoming a foreign country in the eighties. Have we, as the Senate of Canada, exerted all our efforts in working for a better and more involved Canada?

Constitutionally, we are a country well conceived, but we will not be born until we are able to repatriate our Constitution. In the meantime we exist in various states of prosperity, apprehension and happiness, always in the wake of disturbances which create acts of Parliament as compromise solutions. We have had, prior to the statutes of Westminster, the Quebec Act of 1774, the Constitutional Act of 1791, the Act of Union of 1840, and the British North America Act of 1867, while still awaiting our own birth. All of these documents were intended to give something to someone and take away nothing from anyone; in other words, to treat us "d'égal à égal". I refer, of course, to the traditional French-English impasse and this is still what the situation boils down to.

The British North America Act never confronted this issue of languages as it would have created that impasse at that time. Our Fathers of Confederation set us on this collision course, by segregating us by religions as a culture base. I am referring, of course, to section 92. They could not, at that time, envisage the dilemma, in Quebec education, of the advent of French-speaking Protestants and English-speaking Catholics. It is, nevertheless, incredible that even under the aegis of religious and confessional schools, these traditional hatreds, emanating from European battles, were in fact perpetuated. Still more incredible is the will of the people to conquer prejudice and the disruptive forces of narrow nationalism, and, in some instances, chauvinism in the short run.

[Senator Wood.]

Like many other citizens, I usually, often for social or other reasons, volunteered for work during federal and provincial election campaigns. In addition, we found it necessary to involve ourselves in school board elections as our children were continually under threat of expulsion due to facilities being required by one majority group or another. It was often necessary for mothers to carry placards in Montreal in order to obtain entry to schools for their children. Yes, honourable senators, there are times when our school boards are laws unto themselves.

The various separatist movements were beginning their threats and harassments. Nationalism was showing its disruptive force, and bulwarks against it were needed. In 1965 I, as a member of the Liberal Party for the federal constituency of Mount Royal, worked for the nomination of Pierre Trudeau. There were four contestants, but this man had a meeting with destiny. His concepts respecting the role of French-speaking Canadians, coupled with his dedication to the idea of a strong central government as essential to nationhood, instilled a pride in Mount Royalers that continues to flourish, as has been evidenced at each election campaign ever since.

Many of you will recall the scenes, pursuant to the leadership convention of April, and election of June 1968, when our Prime Minister was virtually mobbed by separatist demonstrators. Our committee room, in those days, was under armed guard. Our Prime Minister carried on in many-faceted roles, building against time, against province builders, against decentralizers, against provincially-oriented electoral machines, against alienators, against racists. Certainly he might have been allowed to weaken, as some suggest he has, but instead he has again risen to the challenge. Honourable senators, let us, above all other groups, not let him down. I ask this especially in the name of Canadians residing in Quebec. We have not even begun to lose this dream of Canadian nationhood.

There is hardly a province which has not equalled, or in some cases surpassed, Quebec in demands and efforts to undermine the role and authority of our national government. The unnerving aspect of the Parti Québécois government is its strategy of non-negotiation and non-meeting until it achieves its much-desired mandate to separate, and this in the form of a "oui" or "yes" vote. Such a mandate would, of course, render official negotiations futile, but would, in the meantime, virtually eliminate the credibility of the Canadian government.

As each province secured its world markets and alliances, mini-associations could be envisaged. There is every possibility that we would never put it together again. Our immediate national emergency may perhaps be found in the nebulous nature of the question. A seemingly harmless motherhood proposal covering up a subversive insidious ploy so clever that it could work. This, in itself, is justification for our government's emphasis on the "no" vote, which is in a sense a "no" to separation, whereas a "yes" could unfold a series of yet unknown chain reactions.

Honourable senators will recall the efforts of René Lévesque to convert the provincial Liberal Party into a movement of sovereignty association. His failure to accomplish this move from within the party obliged him to form his own organization in 1968, which was named "Movement Sovereignty-Association". It could not survive, and the handful who had joined its ranks were no loss to the Liberal Party. Furthermore, René Lévesque could not compete on centre stage with the separatists whose strategies were media headline exposure by committing acts of civil disobedience, terrorism, bombings and kidnapping, all culminating in the October 1970 revolution which was not quite so quiet any longer.

This was when the Quebec government asked the Canadian government for help, and once again Prime Minister Trudeau, recently referred to in this chamber as the "philosophical muser", acted with the resources at his disposal. Law-abiding Canadians in Quebec will always appreciate this rescue mission, and they have ever since shown it. We hope it will never again be necessary, but it is a comfort to know that Canada will not let us down.

However, when the Sovereignty-Association Movement of René Lévesque merged with the separatist movement to create the Parti Québécois, you will note that in their promotional literature in the April 1970 election the word "association" was dropped, no doubt a condition of the merger. This political tract quotes—with accompanying photos of René Lévesque, a former Liberal; Gilles Grégoire, a former Créditiste; and Jacques Parizeau, a former federal financial consultant—"One solution only, Souveraineté".

Also seen at the front and centre of this 1970 publication, is the psychological impact and the beginning of the "oui" syndrome. Furthermore, the inside back page carries a photo of Camille Laurin urging Quebecers to vote "oui" on April 29, 1970. He has since surfaced as the psychiatrist of the Péquistes. You will note that throughout this booklet you have the "oui" concept. The question on page 24, for example, asks Quebecers if they want to escape from this "house of fools", which is the federal régime. This, honourable senators, includes us.

This has been perpetuated constantly and consistently. Most people under 25 in Quebec have never known another philosophy, because the movement is inextricably intertwined with union bosses, school teachers and bureaucracy members, all very well-paid activists whose every action is for the cause.

Let us make no mistake: While the Canadians of Quebec are the affected, they are not part of the cause. In fact, 23 per cent of the voters in the provincial election of April 1970 voted to separate, and 30 per cent in 1973. The option became vague again, vague enough to give them 40 per cent of the vote in November 1976. In recent months we may have let down our guard when we tallied the results of seven consecutive by-elections which demolished the credibility of the Péquiste government along with its options.

Canadians in Quebec do not want another hyphenation added, such as "Associate-Canadian", especially since we have been the real thing from the very outset some 350 years ago, nor do we want to be interim citizens during the years of deliberation when Quebec would be bargaining, not with the resources of Rupert's Land and its rich mineral and hydropower base, but rather with its growing astronomical per capita debt which would be made larger by having to re-purchase electricity and petroleum at world prices.

Honourable senators, in less than two weeks I will be afforded the chance to decide whether I want to remain a Canadian. Up till now I have been a Canadian without having to make a choice. Today the opportunity is given to me to express my thanks to Canada for having granted citizenship to my parents and grandparents. I now find myself in a position similar to the one they were in; that is, to make a choice as to which country I want to live in for the rest of my days. My choice must be Canada. I must, therefore, vote "no" in the referendum.

I am always a Quebecer and, indeed, over the years have participated in political and other activities of Quebec and Canada. How else can we remain Quebecers and Canadians unless we vote "no" to sovereignty association? Those who vote in favour of sovereignty association are in fact voting against the fundamental precept and privilege of being Canadian. What I want is to remain both a Canadian and a Quebecer, and I must therefore vote "no" in the referendum.

The time and energies I have committed during the seventies to political organizations in Quebec in my role as President and Executive Director of the Liberal Party of Canada in Quebec gave me that precious opportunity to work with my people in every federal constituency of Quebec. I cannot believe that these same people, excluding the exceptions mentioned, could ever compromise their love, loyalty and dedication to themselves and to their country, as there was one rallying theme: "Canada, Trudeau et le fédéralisme."

However, to be Prime Minister of this country, as leader of the National Liberal Party of Canada, with an opposition composed of provincial legislatures, most of which have IOUs with national electoral machines, is similar to being a United States Republican President trying to govern with a Democratic Congress and/or Senate. Surely the moment of responsibility is now, even if this responsibility means delaying commitments to partisan provincial governments for the sake of a whole nation which must be stronger than its parts.

The advantages of a "yes" vote are already being echoed in the national media—the advantages for everyone except, of course, Canada, Quebec and Petro-Canada. Honourable senators, we all agree that a nation does not exist or thrive on energy alone.

Quebec's quest for political sovereignty with economic association with several what are now called "producing provinces," and its plans for maintaining a political federation but with economic sovereignty, is as close to catastrophe as we can perceive it.

The Senate does not bow when the House of Commons nods. The Senate continues to impress me with each sitting. What a pity we cannot find some way of communicating, as a body, with our people. The fact that we do not submit to the electorate is, in effect, our challenge at a time when no greater and more final challenge can befall us.

Could we not consider a coalition in our chambers? Certainly French and English senators work very well together in our committees and deliberations. Could not Conservative and Liberals, as well as others, consider a coalition in a situation where our country is imperiled from within? There is no enemy as such, just confused citizens who cannot reach us; nor can we seem to reach them. The void is, therefore, consumed by the media and those who manipulate it. In this regard, we revert to our precious whipping person, the CBC.

Certainly we do not want smokescreens and whitewash, but the national news could emanate from the same source with the only difference being language, similar to their excellent coverage of sporting events. It is not unheard of for English-speaking broadcasters to enter politics, and the same holds true for French-speaking broadcasters. Obviously the CRTC are oblivious to this phenomenon and cannot detect bias. This bias we can live with if it is for one or the other of the old-line parties, but when the media defects to the Péquistes it is contrary to the people's mandate. However, since this affected only French-speaking Quebec, it received very little sympathy from English-speaking Canada.

The accusations vis-à-vis the media commonly made during national election campaigns usually fade out shortly afterwards and, regrettably, the Péquistes are left to reap the benefits of this freedom of speech.

One cannot overlook the Péquiste determination to remove Pierre Trudeau from Ottawa, because he creates that bulwark, which is national government, whereby all citizens are represented in Ottawa as equals under our federal system. Minorities have been created in and by the provinces. This may seem like trivia to those who have never lived in a minority status, but let us not be too complacent when seeking the comforts and solace of our stature. Economic security may be included as a comfort—that is, as long as we have an economy.

Honourable senators, we from Quebec have no possible way to liaison with our provincial government. We are, in effect, classified as sellouts to Canada. This has given senators from Quebec the opportunity to dialogue directly with the people they so proudly represent. Pride and dignity compel us to vote "no".

Since 1976, there has not been a proposal from the Quebec government for the improvement and strengthening of our federation. But how many have there been from the other provinces? We know of some, but I suggest to honourable senators that we from Quebec who are on the "no" committees of our ridings would feel great comfort if we knew that some of you were with similar forces in your provinces. I say yes to a meaningful intervention by all the communication methods known to us, whereby the Senate of Canada adds to its raison d'être by being that bridge from regional to central government. There are as many imaginative as exciting approaches to this challenge of today. We have precious little to lose as senators, because there is rarely a task force, study group or organization that does not contemplate our demise.

Honourable senators from all across this land, open your hearts and minds so that every idea and sentiment be conveyed to Canadians as a whole, that they never find themselves in a position of being peddled by any legislature to any country offering the best deal. This is in effect what associate status would produce. Canada and its people in whole, or in part, are not for sale.

Hon. Ann Elizabeth Bell: Honourable senators, I would like to seize a few minutes this afternoon to take part in this debate on the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

I enjoyed tremendously Senator Wood's very clear summing-up of her feelings as a Quebecer and a Canadian this afternoon. I would like to tell her that in British Columbia something is being done that will perhaps make a little difference. Upon payment of $2 a telegram is sent from one's family to another family in Quebec. The families in Quebec are chosen by a committee from the telephone directories of that province, so that it is a person-to-person contact. It would be Mr. and Mrs. Jones of Salmon Arm, British Columbia, saying "Please vote 'No' in the referendum. We love you." That would be sent to Monsieur et Madame Leblanc in Trois-Rivières. I hope that will convey the genuine feelings of the people of British Columbia.

Honourable senators, I take this opportunity to thank Senator Grosart for the great job he did as Speaker. His was a very short term indeed, but, on the other hand, we can welcome the return of his vigorous contributions to the debates in the chamber, and that will make up for it.

It is a pleasure to see Senator Marchand in the Speaker's Chair. I know he will perform his duties with great flair and keep us well in hand.

I found Senator Rousseau's speech in moving the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne very affecting and touching. Her summing-up of Canada as not being jurisdictions or mere legislation, but a country of warmth, the motherland of all Canadians, was beautifully expressed.

Senator Hays, with his good common sense, showed us that we do not have to act as though we are neurotics and psychotics. We are a rich, grand country and we have so much to be thankful for. Let's get on with it! Good for Senator Hays. I do echo those sentiments.

I would like to make a quick run-through, if I may, of some of the points in the Speech from the Throne. It was a real basket of goodies. One of the things that we have all been discussing and looking forward to in this chamber is the legislation that will produce these beneficial results for all of Canada. One phrase that caught the attention of many of us is:

> Work must begin immediately to design . . . flexible, portable, and secure pensions . . .

The report of the Retirement Age Policies Committee, presented recently by Senator Croll, shows that flexible, portable pensions are the key to a happy retirement for Canadians. I do hope the federal government will get on with this as quickly as possible.

The Speech also says that "additional attention will be paid to the employment problems of the handicapped." I was delighted to see that in the Speech from the Throne. We do pretty well in that direction, and the building code standards are improving all the time. I am delighted to see that more emphasis will to be put on that by Canada.

The serious problem of violence against women will also be addressed. There have been some excellent studies done on this subject by the Advisory Council on the Status of Women and the federated groups that make up the National Council of Women. The background is there, so I am sure we can get on with solving that problem too.

The "freedom of information legislation", which all political parties endorse, I can hardly wait to see. It is not just the general public that needs free access to information; we in this chamber need freedom of information too. We cannot do our job properly unless we have the information we need.

Production, transportation, handling of prairie grain and port facilities will receive national priority. I should like to spend a few moments on port facilities, because in my part of the country this is of extreme importance. One misconception we seem to have, which I do hope we can remove, is that the oceans are barriers to our country. We have the Arctic Ocean, the Pacific Ocean and the Atlantic Ocean. We must try to get it through our heads that the oceans are our highways to commerce.

There are fifteen ports operated by the National Harbours Board in Canada. Seven of them are commission ports, under the 1964 act. This was rather a pilot project, to see if these ports could operate with local authority in their home communities. Representatives of the local area were on the boards; they made the decisions locally; they either sank or swam by their ability as good business heads running the ports, and they have been remarkably successful. The federal government has had Bill C-50 in the wings for several years now, and a great deal of effort has gone into that. It is designed to make some of our larger ports into a similar type of commission port operation.

Bill C-50 was introduced a year or two ago and it sort of went to sleep in the other place. I don't believe it got past first reading. At the time, I asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate if we could not have it transferred here. He thought this was an excellent idea and tried, but was not successful. I was beginning to feel a little desperate about this and the thought went through my mind to pick up the bill holus-bolus, change a few words and introduce it into this chamber as a private member's bill, so that it could go to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, for them to find any wrinkles or bugs there may be in it that had to be eradicated, modified or amended, call witnesses, do the serious detailed work and then send it to the other place. Then, of course, the government decided to call an election, so that idea had to be dropped.

In the very short tenure of office of the Conservative government, a member of Parliament from Vancouver introduced a private member's bill to the same effect, but only for the Port of Vancouver. However, I feel strongly that it is a national harbours policy that we need, and I think we should have this bill.

Let me tell you, honourable senators, a little about the Port of Vancouver. It is the largest port on the Pacific coast of both North and South America. Last year it handled 40 million tons of cargo. It is just ridiculous that the decisions, some of them day-to-day decisions, have to be made in Ottawa, although perhaps it would be painting too black a picture to say that if they need a new light bulb the decision has to be made here. The Port of Vancouver is losing a great deal of business to Seattle. There are some real horror stories in that respect. We must get on with this and give them the means and organization so that they can run their own business and make a profit for the country. We're a trading nation, we export, and this port must have the ability to make its own decisions.

Consider, for instance, something I heard the other day. If you are barging a load of chips, say, down the coast from Powell River or Ocean Falls, and you bring it into the Port of Vancouver and tie up alongside a deep-sea vessel, you don't come under any barging regulations; you come under the same regulations as an ocean-going vessel, and there might be 139 charges laid against you. Of course, people barging chips, pulp and so on simply won't put up with that. They would rather take the extra day and the cost, and go down to Seattle where they make their own rates and arrangements.

I assume all these regulations for deep-sea vessels that this poor barge outfit would have to put up with are made in Ottawa and simply superimposed uniformally on all the harbours of the National Harbours Board across Canada. Well, it's just not suitable. Policies made in Ottawa simply do not suit everybody, so let's have this bill and get on with it.

Roberts Bank is losing an opportunity. I should explain that it is administered by the Port of Vancouver. Let me say, for those who are not familiar with the area, that it is a long causeway south of Vancouver; it is a deep-water coal dock, and it has to be expanded. The National Harbours Board asked for the space to be quintupled a few years ago. Then the environment assessment people came along to make sure the environment would not be damaged by greatly enlarging the Port of Roberts Bank. Finally, Roberts Bank was given permission to triple its area.

The only thing now holding this up is a legal matter, because the Court of Appeal of British Columbia in, I think, a 1975 decision gave the Province of British Columbia jurisdiction over the Georgia Strait, where the coal dock at Roberts Bank sticks out from this long causeway. The federal government then decided to give notice of appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada with respect to jurisdiction over Georgia Strait, which is considered to be an inland water for the purposes of the British Columbia Court of Appeal decision. That is where the matter rests now. No action has been taken, although the federal government's notice has gone to the Supreme Court.

However, whatever the Supreme Court decides, if the federal government proceeds with this case, it will have to be a political decision anyway, regardless of what the Supreme Court decides, so let's get on with that too and get Roberts Bank expanded.

Certainly this is a way of spending money, but to my mind it is an investment with a tremendous return. All the coal from southeast British Columbia goes out that way, but they dare not produce more, although they have markets for more. Crows Nest Resources, which is also in southeast British Columbia, is not in production yet because it has not the facilities to ship, even though there is a demand for its product. This, of course, could be earning us all kinds of foreign exchange, providing employment and so on. In this way we spend some money, but we get a great return from it. We must get on with that.

I was encouraged to hear Senator Olson tell us of the progress at Ridley Island, Prince Rupert, because that will mean not only northeast coal coming through but also the grain shipments. I think they are forgoing something like $3 million a day in grain shipments because there are not the necessary facilities in Prince Rupert. An immediate start has to be made there, because it will take until 1984 before the port facilities are ready; these things cannot be done overnight.

I should like to reassure honourable senators that we in the west have not been disenfranchised. I hope you will be glad to hear that. There are two aspects to this rumour that we have been disenfranchised. One is that all the decisions are made by the executive—the cabinet—and so there is a usurpation of the role of Parliament. If we are realistic, I think we do see that the executive power is very strong in our country. Not only our country, but other western democracies have the same difficulty.

However, there is an unsatisfactory balance in the cabinet. Three-quarters of the members of our executive now come from two provinces, Ontario and Quebec. This is not a healthy balance for the distribution of attention and deciding whose problems are going to be tackled. I know the government has difficulty in solving this problem, because it wishes and wants to put elected members of its party into the cabinet, although it does not have to. There is no mention of that in the British North America Act. In fact, there is no mention of the cabinet at all.

● (1540)

The cabinet has been changed so much now that three-quarters of the ministers are from two provinces. If we had absolutely superb cabinet ministers, they could all come from Newfoundland for that matter. It would make no difference; they would still know what was going on across the country.

Senator Marshall: They should be from Newfoundland.

[Senator Bell.]

Senator Bell: Well, that is a suggestion.

Another reason we have an unsatisfactory balance is because Parliament has become so subservient to the cabinet. We cannot do too much about what goes on in the other place, but we can do something about what goes on here. So, I think a real, radical solution to the problem would be to try—and in using the word "radical" I use it to mean from the roots—responsible government. It is kind of like Christianity—how do we know it will not work if it has never been tried? I should like to see us try responsible government.

We must hold the executive accountable far more than we do now. We can do that in this chamber. We have done that in this chamber, and we do it now in this chamber. But we should do it more often. We will not defeat the government by doing so, and we will not be inhibited by the Election Expenses Act. We can put our recommendations into legislative form, present them in this chamber if they are not going to cost the taxpayers money, and if we pass them they can be dealt with in the other place.

Our committees can develop independent policies, and this would be of interest and helpful to the government. If the Senate had a standing committee on natural resources, the energy pricing problem, which is so difficult for the government now, could be studied by it with all the expertise that that committee would have built up over the years. That subject has definite provincial aspects, and is something the Senate should look into vis-à-vis the federal government and the provinces.

I singled out the pricing of oil, but we can concern ourselves with other areas of energy, such as the coal industry, which is of interest to those of us living in various parts of this country. As well, we could concern ourselves with the petrochemical industry. You cannot just pull out one block without disturbing other aspects of the whole resources question.

We have the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, and government policy respecting ports is something it feels keenly about. There is some provincial tie-in there too, as with the British Columbia Court of Appeal and the Strait of Georgia. Also of interest to that committee is the fact that some provinces want more control over broadcasting and communications. I am sure that if Senator Hammy McDonald were with us today, he would want a Standing Senate Committee on National Defence which could study the report of the Task Force on Review of Unification of the Canadian Forces. The Senate could do all of these things in an independent way.

Honourable senators, I should like to deal further with the Constitution, but I do not wish to take up more of your time. However, I would like to adopt Senator Lang's speech as my own. I concur in every word he said, and would add:

> Il y a une chose certaine. Il faut absolument que nous ayons un gouvernement fédéral suffisamment fort, mais pas trop fort.

Senator Leblanc, in his marvelous assessment, analyzed each of the exotic solutions that have been suggested to the constitutional problem. I urge all who were not present and able to listen to Senator Leblanc to read his speech. This reminds me of a quote from Petronium Arbiter of 2,000 years ago, which is as follows:

> —we tend to meet any new situation by reorganizing, and a wonderful method it can be for creating the illusion of progress while producing confusion.

In putting forward all these exotic solutions, nobody says who will do the Senate's work. None of these exotic solutions tells us that, as far as I can tell.

Senator Lang told us that there is suspicion among provincial premiers regarding the method of appointment to the Senate. This is one of the few things that are in the British North America Act. The Governor General summons senators, not the Governor in Council, and there is no "on the advice of." It is simply that the Governor General shall summon the senators.

An interesting way around this problem would be for the Governor General to have his own committee, made up of privy councillors and other distinguished persons, to help him choose senators. The Prime Minister could recommend persons, as could the provincial premiers, and these could be appointed to the Senate by the Governor General. That might get over some of the suspicion of the provincial premiers that we are too party-bound.

As to the referendum, I believe Senator Wood said it all, but I should like to add, from my vantage point of 3,000 miles away and across the mountains, that in every generation, and probably in most countries, demagogues seem to arise and prey on the prejudices and fears of the citizens for nefarious purposes. Senator Lamontagne, in his book Double Deal, certainly proved that the present Premier of Quebec has lied to the people of Quebec. Canadians are misinformed by the press—and I include the electronic media—and are so uninformed by their school systems that it is appalling.

Senator Murray spoke about this, and I would like to tell him that in British Columbia, where only .0004 per cent of the population is French-speaking, we have established French language schools. These schools are tremendously popular, not in the largely French-speaking areas like Maillardville but in the English-speaking areas. There is a tremendous demand for enrolment in the French language schools. This is an indication of how we in British Columbia feel about all of Canada.

I should also like to say that I am grateful for having had good teachers of Canadian history when I was at school. They knew the importance of our Constitution, the monarchy, and veneration of our national heroes and heroines—Marguerite de Bourgeois, Madame d'Youville, the Frontenac and Lemoyne families, and others. Bishop Remi de Roo of Victoria, a native Manitoban, told me the story of Madame d'Youville and the Grey Nuns who, it seems to me, might be called the first "non" ladies of Quebec.

When Madame d'Youville and her companions devoted themselves to the care of abandoned children and indigent people they were jeered and called "les sœurs grises". However, as they went about their charitable work they adopted that term of derision and it became one of respect, and their grey habit became a symbol of aid and comfort. In the same way, the "non" ladies of today have turned the epithet "Yvette" to their advantage, and made it a battle-cry in their campaign to have the referendum question answered by an emphatic "Non".

• (1550)

Canada is our country. It is the best country in the world, and the province of Quebec is a very important part of it. The monarchy and Quebec are two components that distinguish Canada from the rest of this hemisphere. We should remember this. We have so much going for us: let's not blow it.

On motion of Senator Petten, for Senator Lamontagne, debate ajourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 13, at 8 p.m.

REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A)

May 8, 1980

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to which the Supplementary Estimates (A) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1981, were referred, has in obedience to the order of reference of Tuesday, April 29, 1980, examined the said Supplementary Estimates (A) and reports as follows:

(1) The committee was authorized by the Senate as recorded in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of April 29, 1980 to examine and report upon the expenditures proposed by the Supplementary Estimates (A) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1981.

(2) In obedience to the foregoing, your committee examined the Supplementary Estimates (A) and heard evidence from the following officials of the Treasury Board: Mr. J. L. Manion, Secretary; Mr. L. J. O'Toole, Assistant Secretary, Program Branch; Mr. E. A. Radburn, Director, Estimates Division, Program Branch.

(3) These Supplementary Estimates (A) total $230 million. The budgetary expenditures total $209 million and the non-budgetary expenses, that is to say, loans, investments and advances amount to $21 million all of which represent funds for which Parliament is being asked to provide new authority. These Supplementaries are largely to deal with problems resulting from the disruption of the normal supply process and the legislative process by the two general elections during the past year.

(4) The three major items in these Supplementary Estimates (A) are:

(a) Energy, Mines and Resources—$192.5 million of which $180 million increases the limit in the petroleum compensation revolving fund and $12.5 million is a contribution to the Tidal Power Corporation for a demonstration project for low-head hydroelectric installation.

(b) Transport—$23 million of which $15.6 million is for advances for operating and capital purposes at Canadian airports and $7.4 million for construction of infrastructure for grain handling facilities.

(c) Canadian International Development Agency—$8 million for the purchase of shares of the InterAmerican Development Bank.

(5) Treasury Board supplied the committee with a list giving additional explanations for the $1 Votes included in Supplementary Estimates (A) which is attached as an appendix to this report.

(6) Several facets of the estimates came to the committee's attention. In particular, the committee considered the increase from $350 million dollars to $1 billion for insurance authority to promote the establishment, efficiency, or international competitiveness of Canadian industry. The $350 million limit was established in the 1979-80 estimates. The witnesses will provide the committee the reasons for this near tripling of the limit in such a short time period. The reasons for the removal of the $240 million ceiling on the authority limit for contracts with VIA Rail will also be provided by the witnesses. Additional information regarding the $100 million increase in the borrowing limit of Eldorado Nuclear will also be forthcoming from the witnesses.

(7) When questioned regarding the $7.4 million expenditure for grain handling facilities at the Port of Prince Rupert, British Columbia, the witnesses informed the committee that the expenditure was for preliminary work on the project. The complete project costs are as yet unknown, and subject to further negotiations.

(8) After questioning by the committee on the $4.3 million advances toward the payment of transportation accounts and other assistance for immigrants, the witnesses indicated that this expenditure was related to the recent immigration of Indo-Chinese refugees who were advanced transportation assistance by the government. Such assistance has apparently been available to immigrants from all over the world for some time. The committee will be provided by the witnesses with details of the operations of the program in general over a period of sufficient length to provide an understanding of its costs and operation.

(9) The committee noted its past concerns with the use of $1 Votes for legislative purposes, and its approval of the reduced use of this practice as evidenced by these estimates. However, the committee emphasized the potential for abuse of this mechanism and urges restraint in its use.

(10) The increases in provision of loan guarantees was also a subject of the committee's attention. The witnesses indicated that in general the default rate on government guaranteed loans was very low. The committee was assured in the matter of the provision of $4 million guarantees to Southern Ontario tobacco producers, that incentives did exist to ensure that those eligible for this program would be encouraged to seek alternative financial assistance before turning to the government guaranteed loans. The full terms and conditions applying to the loans are specified in the wording of this vote. Additional information regarding the administration of this program will be provided to the committee.

Respectfully submitted,

D. D. Everett,
Chairman.

Amendment of Provisions of Previous Appropriation Acts

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES—ELDORADO NUCLEAR LIMITED

Vote L107a—To authorize an increase of $100 million in the borrowing limit of the Corporation and to extend the purposes for which the borrowings may be used.

Explanation—Eldorado Nuclear Limited was authorized through Supplementary Estimates (B), 1977-78 to borrow up to $30 million from the private market by the issue and sale of shares for the purpose of building a refinery at Port Hope. This project was delayed and eventually cancelled.

The borrowing limit of $130 million (including the previous authority of $30 million that was not utilized) is required to cover new capital expenditures, including a refinery, miscellaneous other capital projects, debt repayment and for working capital purposes.

INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE

Vote 1a—To increase the insurance authority limit from $350 million to $1 billion.

Explanation—The purpose of the insurance authority is to promote the establishment, efficiency or international competitiveness of Canadian industry. This increase in the authority limit to $1 billion, originally proposed in the 1979-80 Main Estimates will ensure the availability of term debt to small and medium sized firms. The current limit of $350 million was authorized in the 1978-79 Main Estimates.

TRANSPORT

Vote 90a—To delete the authority limit of $240 million for contracts with VIA.

Explanation—Supplementary Estimates (D), 1976-77 established a ceiling of $240 million on contracts with VIA Rail Inc. for the provision of a rail passenger and other related services.

Because inflationary pressures and other circumstances have made the contractual ceiling unrealistic, it is proposed to delete the ceiling. The Main Estimates for 1980-81 include payments of $424.3 million to VIA Rail to meet the 1980-81 contracts.

This item was originally included in Supplementary Estimates (B), 1979-80.

CATEGORY B

Guaranteeing of Loans

AGRICULTURE

Vote 25a—To guarantee loans made by the private sector to certain Tobacco Producers.

Explanation—During the 1979 outbreak of Blue Mold disease some tobacco producers in southern Ontario sustained financial losses due to crop damage associated with this disease. As a result many of these producers will be required to borrow to finance their 1980 crop year. It is proposed to assist those producers, who could not otherwise secure financial assistance, by guaranteeing loans made by lenders to them.

This item was originally included in Supplementary Estimates (B), 1979-80.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

Vote 5a—To increase the guarantee limit for loans from $25 million to $60 million.

Explanation—The Minister presently has authority to guarantee up to $25 million of loans made to Indians by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Farm Credit Corporation and other approved lenders. The limit of $25 million was reached in December 1979 and the program is presently suspended.

The National Housing Act was amended to permit Indian Bands to be considered as non-profit corporations for the purposes of the Act. This enables a number of Indian bands to receive loans for the first time.

As a result of this amendment and the desire of the Government to proceed with this program as quickly as possible, it is proposed to increase the limit by a further $35 million. This is the first increase since the original authority was obtained through the 1972-73 Main Estimates.

INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE

Vote 6a—To guarantee loans of up to $150 million made by private institutions to Canadair Limited.

Explanation—Authority is requested to permit the Minister to guarantee bank loans of up to $150 million made to Canadair Limited to finance the development and production of Challenger aircraft and for other general obligations. This authority is required as soon as possible since any further delay in securing loans by the Corporation will result in delays in their production schedule.

This item was originally included in Supplementary Estimates (B), 1979-80.

A similar guarantee of $50 million to finance the production of the Lear Star was authorized in Supplementary Estimates (B), 1976-77.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Vote 1a—To deem Gervais Bellefontaine to have been honourably discharged from the Canadian Forces.

Explanation—It is proposed to deem Gervais Bellefontaine to have enlisted and to have served continuously in the Canadian Army between 10 January, 1944, and 28 December 1945, both dates inclusive, on which latter date he is deemed to have been honourably released from the Canadian Army.

The circumstances under which Mr. Bellefontaine was deemed "never to have been enlisted... or have served" have since been assessed by the Department as unfair. It is therefore, desirable that this matter be dealt with quickly since the case has been under consideration for several years. This item would restore his good name and would also qualify him for any benefits he would not otherwise be entitled to.

A similar case was dealt with under Supplementary Estimates (A), 1963-64.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

JOINT RESOLUTION OF THE SENATE AND THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE STATE OF TENNESSEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform you that I have received a Joint Resolution of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the State of Tennessee expressing appreciation to the Government and the people of Canada for their efforts in enabling six Americans to escape from Iran.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government) tabled:

Report on Vocational Rehabilitation for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1979, pursuant to section 8 of the Vocational Rehabilitation of Disabled Persons Act, Chapter V-7, R.S.C., 1970.

Capital Budget of the Farm Credit Corporation for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1981, pursuant to section 70(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1980-479, dated February 8, 1980, approving same.

Capital Budget of the National Capital Commission for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1980, pursuant to section 70(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1979-3560, dated December 20, 1979, approving same.

Document entitled "Canadian Position with Respect to Conventions and Recommendations adopted at the 61st, 62nd (Maritime) 63rd and 64th Sessions of the International Labour Conference, Geneva, June 1976, October 1976, June 1977, June 1978", issued by the Minister of Labour.

Copies of Notes exchanged between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States of America relating to the renewal of the Agreement on the North American Air Defence Command (NORAD). Done at Washington, May 12, 1980. Entered into force May 12, 1980.

Copies of Minutes of Meetings of Honourable Senators, authorized by resolution of the Senate of Canada on the 29th day of March, 1972, to act for and on behalf of the Senate during any period between sessions of Parliament or between Parliaments in all matters relating to the internal economy of the Senate, held on December 18, 1979 and February 20, 1980.

Report of the Postmaster General respecting Olympic coins for the period ending March 31, 1980, pursuant to sections 17(2) and 17(3) of the Olympic (1976) Act, as amended by Chapter 68, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76.

ENERGY

ALASKA HIGHWAY GAS PIPELINE—STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF STATE FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I wonder if I might have the indulgence of the house to give a report on the results of a meeting I had yesterday in Washington with officials of the United States. It would also give me an opportunity to respond more fully to the request made of me a few days ago by Senator Manning.

I suggest to the Leader of the Opposition that it will take me about five minutes to make the report. I shall be glad to do it, but it is up to the house to permit me.

Senator Flynn: If it takes only five minutes it will say nothing.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to take this opportunity to respond more fully to the request made a few days ago by Senator Manning for a report on the status of the Alaska Highway Gas Pipeline Project.

It is, I believe, very timely to do so now in the light of recent important developments in Canada and the round of talks I had on this question only yesterday in Washington. During my visit, I had discussions with Energy Secretary Duncan and his deputy, Mr. Sawhill, Senator Jackson and Senator Stevens, and with senior members of the Energy Committee staff of Congressman Dingell, who unfortunately was himself tied up all day with meetings of a Congressional conference committee.

The situation today, honourable senators, is that virtually every step that can be taken within our domain in Canada to enable the project to move forward—commencing with the scheduled start of prebuilding of the southern segments this year—has now been completed. Virtually everything that remains to be done depends on the satisfactory resolution of issues still outstanding in the United States.

You will recall that on April 30, the National Energy Board recommended that the government approve the export by Pan-Alberta of an additional 500 billion cubic feet through the eastern and western legs of the prebuild sections as a necessary means of establishing their economic and financial viability. To further reinforce the viability of this undertaking, the Board has also indicated that it is prepared to authorize the transmission through the eastern leg of an additional 450 billion cubic feet by ProGas and Consolidated.

As honourable senators are well aware, however, the prebuilding of the southern sections of the pipeline, initially for the export of additional volumes of Canadian gas, can only form the first stage of the system that is planned basically to transport Alaskan gas from Prudhoe Bay to the lower 48 states and to provide access to Canadian gas in the Mackenzie Delta.

Late last Friday, the Board issued a statement on the outcome of hearings which it held at my request to consider the financeability of the project in Canada in respect of the requirements it proposed to establish through modification of the present Condition 12 of Schedule III of the Northern Pipeline Act. The amended condition, which is still subject to approval by the Governor in Council, would oblige Foothills to demonstrate that financing has been obtained for the prebuild system and that it can be obtained for the remainder of the pipeline in Canada.

In its statement, the National Energy Board concluded that the evidence placed before it made it clear that certain important pre-conditions that must be satisfied to ensure the financeability of both the prebuild and the northern segments of the line in Canada still remained to be fulfilled. In almost every case, the satisfaction of those conditions depends on the favourable resolution of issues within the United States.

Let me take a few moments to outline those issues. In a companion decision, also issued on Friday, the National Energy Board agreed to meet the critical concern of Foothills that it be in a position to provide a full return to equity investors as soon as the mainline system has been completed in Canada and is ready to go into operation, regardless of whether the remainder of the pipeline in the United States is also operational. As one means of meeting that requirement, the Board agreed to permit Foothills to levy a full cost-of-service tariff as soon as it had been granted leave to open the pipeline in Canada. But it still remains for U.S. regulatory authorities to consider whether they will permit such a tariff to be tracked through to U.S. shippers and ultimately to their consumers.

A second problem relates to the "cap" which the U.S. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission recently decided should be imposed on the obligations of U.S. shippers to take or pay for Canadian gas. The commission proposed to establish a minimum return to Canadian producers of $856 million through a formula under which the amount of gas that shippers were required to take declined from the 85 per cent level to the extent to which the actual price of Canadian gas exceeded $3.45 per million BTUs. This decision appears to be based on the mistaken assumption that Canadian producers would not have to make extensive investments in order to bring the additional gas on stream. In fact, they have to make investments running into the hundreds of millions of dollars. In the event the U.S. decision is not modified, there is a risk that sufficient volumes of gas will not be available to meet requirements.

[Senator Olson.]

As I indicated earlier, the throughput of some 450 billion cubic feet of gas by ProGas and Consolidated is considered to be essential to the financing of the eastern leg of the prebuild in Saskatchewan and up to the border with the United States. To date, however, the import of that gas through the prebuild system has not been approved by U.S. authorities, nor have U.S. distributors yet agreed to the shipment of a part of the gas they have contracted for from ProGas through the eastern leg.

All of the issues I have outlined so far relate to the financeability of the mainline and the prebuild in Canada, but we in this country must also be assured, in keeping with the bilateral agreement and our own legislation, that the entire system from Prudhoe Bay to the lower 48 states can be financed and will be constructed expeditiously. Under clause 4(a) of the agreement, we will be looking to the United States government for the required assurances with respect to the timely completion of the system within its territory.

All of us recognize that the most critical element relates to the financing and construction of the pipeline and the gas conditioning plant in Alaska. Over the past several months, there have been intensive discussions involving the Department of Energy, the pipeline sponsors, the gas producers and the State of Alaska on this question. During my discussions in Washington, I was advised that the sponsors and the producers are ready to enter into an agreement covering the sharing of further design costs on the pipeline and the conditioning plant, all of this to cost some $500 million.

Such an undertaking would provide significant evidence of the commitment of both sides to the completion of the project and, as such, would be very welcome. But, as I emphasized in all of my talks with U.S. authorities yesterday, this undertaking by itself would not provide a reasonable basis for assurance that the project will move ahead to completion at the earliest possible date. In my view, such assurance can only be provided through a framework of agreements establishing, at least in general terms, the respective roles to be played by the sponsors, the producers—and possibly the State of Alaska—in the management and financing of actual construction of the pipeline and conditioning plant in Alaska.

I should tell honourable senators that I was encouraged by my discussions with members of the Administration and Congress yesterday. I found on all sides an intense commitment to the project and a sense of urgency about proceeding with it as rapidly as humanly possible. I think that as a result of our talks, there is a better appreciation in Washington of the formidable obstacles that we see remaining in the way of the undertaking from our perspective in Canada and a determination on their part to make every effort to overcome them.

Hon. Ernest C. Manning: Honourable senators, I thank the minister for the report he has given us. I am sure it is of great interest to us all. However, I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question.

The United States position, as I understand it up until at least the present time, has been to prohibit the companies engaged in the actual production of gas to be involved as partners in the financing and construction of the line. Is there any indication of a change in position on that point?

● (2010)

Senator Olson: The condition you have given in United States law is correct. There are a number of ways in which the United States can give us the additional assurances that we need, one of which may involve that, although for me to say this evening, categorically, that that is the most likely method would be perhaps misleading. I would not want to leave that impression.

What we think is more important—and we are talking about equity in this case—would be a financial commitment on the part of the producers to see that the line was finished. That is something which would encourage us greatly. As I said in my statement, they have made a commitment on the balance of the design, both for the line and the preconditioning plant. Unfortunately, beyond that there is no commitment. So that would be one route.

To answer your question very briefly, I am not holding up the change in the equity position of the line as being one. There are a couple of other ways that the U.S. government is examining in order to give us the commitments we need.

Senator Manning: Is the position of the U.S. government on government guarantees a firm position? I know they said they would not provide guarantees, but is there any indication of any softening in that position?

Senator Olson: At the moment, honourable senators, the fact is that they have not been asked. Whether there has been a softening or not—and I want to be very careful here, because I do not want to frustrate the negotiations that are going on—it seems to me that that is one of the options the United States government has—not necessarily to finance the present sponsors, but if we got a commitment from the United States government that the pipeline is going to be built one way or another, then I am not so sure that it would be necessary for us to look very far behind their having reached that conclusion.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: If the minister would take a supplementary question on his discussions with our American friends, may I ask whether there was any discussion on the question of the pricing of Canadian gas exports to the United States and are the Americans prepared to accept the Canadian pricing policy—which, in the minds of some, is tending to make Canadian gas non-competitive with some other energy sources in the United States and which could very seriously affect the market and, as a consequence, the financial viability of the proposed pipeline?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the agreement we announced some three or four weeks ago to move the price up based on our imported oil BTU equivalent—and, of course, we agreed that if it were not going to move more than 15 cents we would not increase our export price and, as well, that we would provide 90 days' notice—is something on which we have U.S. agreement. They have not asked that that agreement be modified or rescinded.

We recognize that there is a somewhat softer market for Canadian gas in the United States right now, and it is in the interests of the Canadian government and Canadian producers to take that into account when contemplating a change in the border price.

Honourable senators will recall that we refrained from moving it from $4.47 an mcf to $4.74, an increase of 27 cents an mcf, and the reason, of course, was that we took into account the softer market for gas in the U.S. Given that softening of the market, even at $4.47 we will not be selling the maximum volumes allowable under the export permits.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, continuing the discussion on pricing, it seems to me there are two sets of prices involved, the first of which is the price that may be paid for Canadian gas exported through the prebuild section—and I think that is the price to which Senator Buckwold was referring in particular.

I would like to know whether any understanding has been reached with the Government of the United States respecting the price that will be paid for gas exported through the prebuild. As I understand the Canadian position, we have to make sure that the price times the number of years times the volume of gas is sufficient to pay for that. Has that been nailed down in any way?

Senator Olson: That is one of the matters I mentioned in my opening statement, that there is some misunderstanding as to the "take-or-pay" provisions and the total volumes involved.

The briefest way I can reply to your question is to say that market conditions will have to be taken into account in this matter. We do not have an agreement, nor do we expect one, that they are going to buy the total volumes capable of being exported under the export permits at the maximum price. However, we do expect that the sponsors of the pipeline, as well as the producers, who have to invest a good deal of money to get that gas into delivery position, will have to take those things into account. We certainly do not want to be excluded if that availability is there for some other gas market in the United States. We have to make sure that that is happening. But to assume that we are going to sell the absolute top volume at the highest price all the time is an assumption we should not make.

● (2015)

Senator Roblin: Well, I quite appreciate that, honourable senators, and I certainly agree with my friend in that respect. But I merely observe that unless the price is sufficient to finance the construction and delivery of the gas, it probably will not be done. So it is necessary to have an assurance, as I am sure you will agree, that whatever price is arrived at is sufficient to make the financing of the project a viable thing.

Then I should like to refer to the second aspect of pricing which is the price that the American producers in Alaska will get for the gas when they deliver it through the entire system to the United States. Has the Government of the United States yet come to some policy conclusions as to the factors they will allow to be considered in the calculation of that price? Was that part of your discussion?

Senator Olson: We did not discuss what they do with the gas after they get it through the Canadian section of the pipeline, or how they deal with the price there on either a blended or other basis. What we do know, of course, is that there has been an announced price for the gas at Prudoe Bay and that has escalated somewhat. I am not sure where it is now, but I suppose it is somewhere about $1.80-plus. It started out at $1.45, I think. One of the major differences, I suppose, at the moment, is the cost of conditioning that gas—how much of the announced price the producers pay out and how much will be added on the consumer side when it gets down to the lower 48 states. That is one of the outstanding issues. I do not think there is too much outstanding with respect to the cost of that preconditioning, although that is not fully accepted by all the parties involved, but they have not made the decision as to the allocation of those costs. I did not discuss that specific matter with them.

Senator Roblin: I raise the point because, as I understand the policy of the government, they would like to know whether the entire pipeline is going to be built before they proceed with the prebuild section. While I appreciate that the point Senator Manning raised is extremely important—namely, what the various segments are going to do, what their contribution is, what they are going to get paid and their relationship to one another—the bottom line is what you are going to get for the gas when it comes out at the other end, because that is what makes the whole thing possible. Now it seems to me that we will not be able to make a decision on the prebuild ourselves until that vital question of the financeability of the mainline, because that is what it is, is answered.

Did the minister get any impression when he was down there as to the time element? We have now expressed our view to the United States and we have some further information, but what time factors are we looking at with respect to decision-making in this process? When will we know?

Senator Olson: That was one of the great problems of the United States, not only for the Department of Energy but for the entire government, because it remains a very high priority with the United States in their energy policy to connect this gas to their consumer requirements. It involves something between 11 and 12 per cent of the total reserves available to the United States. So that remains very, very high as far as priority is concerned. Talking about the timing, they would like us to keep up the momentum, including the prebuild and including what falls in behind that.

● (2020)

In my discussions with them there was no softening of their resolution to get this job done. It is putting the pieces together so that it can be done that is the problem.

[Senator Roblin.]

I suppose more specifically your question is: Did they give us any indication of when they could have all of these things done in the United States, have everything cleared up, all of the financeability. I think I have to tell you that we did not get a time schedule of those things.

Senator Roblin: Did the minister consider the possibility of using the question of Canadian supply and its proximate availability as an argument to urge our American friends to hurry up? Because it is all very well to proceed with these discussions, but unless there is a critical path drawn, if I may use that expression, as to the things that have to be done before you get to the final answer, you do not get any time factor worked into these things. I think it must be exceedingly difficult for the Canadian industry to work, if they have no idea of when decisions will ultimately be reached in this matter. I offer that suggestion to the minister as one method of helping the Americans come to a quick decision.

Senator Olson: I appreciate that. Perhaps the honourable senator has seen some of the headlines in the papers. "Canada Gives the U.S. Thirty Days," and so on.

I did not say it like that, but what I did draw to their attention, clearly, was that before we could issue a permit to begin construction of the prebuild we would need those things I described in my opening statement. If we are to make use of the 1980 construction year, that has to be coming within the next 30 to 45 days or so.

Senator Roblin: Or kiss it goodbye.

Senator Olson: No, I do not think we need to be that pessimistic about it. I am more optimistic than that. Where the really high risks come is in the fact that Foothills have told the United States government, Secretary Duncan and me, that, if they are unable to get a place where they can do that this year and therefore generate some cash flow in 1981 from what would go through at least in the western leg of the prebuild, they will start to wind it down. In other words, they will put it in a hold position at substantially lower cost. By the way, it is costing them over $4 million a month now to remain in a state of readiness.

I pointed out to them that there are some severe risks in winding down the momentum that has been generated up to this point, where we have done everything possible in Canada to expedite it. And it is not only to expedite it but it is to keep it on time.

Hon. George van Roggen: I have a further question to the minister on the same subject. The minister's last answer touched on some of the questions I had, but while it is well to say that the United States government has no softening in its determination to see this project through, it seems that the United States Federal Energy Regulatory Commission is not operating on the same wave length as the United States executive.

My reading of the decision of FERC only a week ago, which you touched on in your written statement a few minutes ago, Mr. Minister, on the limit by dollar value of the gas they would take through the prebuild was that it was tantamount to saying there would be no prebuild. That is what Foothills has said. If that is the case, did you detect in Washington a willingness on the part of the executive to overrule, if that is legally possible, the rulings of the regulatory agency? As an alternative, what is the minimum period of appeal that is possible to that ruling, and will that fit within the suggested 45-day time limit that we may be facing to get any decision in time to commence construction this year? If not, we shall be into 1981 and Foothills has said that it would then have to reconsider the entire project.

It would appear that the regulatory body in the United States is at odds with the United States administration, and I am wondering whether the minister can let us know what the appeal procedure is and whether it is legally possible to overrule that decision in time.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do not wish to comment on what is the legal procedure or how much time is involved if there are appeals from whatever decision the regulatory body in the United States may make. I shall merely comment on the preamble to the question which indicated that what was contained in my opening statement was tantamount to saying there would be no prebuild. I wish to say categorically that I believe there is time for the minimum essential conditions that we require to be given in time for the 1980 construction year.

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, is the minister satisfied that in the event that the United States does not comply with the schedule that will allow us to proceed in 1980, the steel pipe manufacturing and acquisition agreement which he announced at the beginning of May can be cancelled without any severe cost to Foothills or to the Canadian government?

Senator Olson: I suppose there could be an interpretation of what is "severe"; but there was, of course, a condition within the announcement that I made about the placing of the tenders or orders for the massive amount of steel. I believe that something like 1.4 million tons was conditional on their getting the necessary permits to proceed.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I have an additional question: Did the United States officials, with whom the minister met, ask him whether an agreement with the Province of British Columbia would be obtained in the required time frame? If so, what reply did the minister give?

Senator Olson: No, the question was not asked and I did not volunteer any information on that subject during my visit.

Senator Austin: Is the minister satisfied that such an agreement would be forthcoming within the required time frame?

Senator Olson: The honourable senator is radically changing the subject. However, the minister is hopeful that the matter can be negotiated to a satisfactory point where it meets the conditions of the Canada-U.S. agreement.

THE HONOURABLE DAVID A. CROLL

FELICITATIONS ON HONORARY DEGREE

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, perhaps at this point I might be permitted to draw your attention to a delightful event that occurred yesterday in the city of Fredericton, the capital of that beautiful and historic province of New Brunswick.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator McElman: St. Thomas University, which is a small but excellent centre of liberal arts education, bestowed upon our colleague, the Honourable David A. Croll, the degree of Doctor of Laws, honoris causa. In so doing they paid tribute not only to the role our colleague has played in developing within this country a social conscience that is unique in the Western World, but also to the role of the Senate of Canada in the public affairs of this nation.

● (2030)

I might simply add that it was a privilege and an honour for Senator Dan Riley, and our former and esteemed Speaker, Muriel Fergusson, and I to be present and to bask in the reflected honour that was paid to Senator Croll.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit at three o'clock in the afternoon tomorrow, Wednesday, May 14, 1980, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

BRITISH COLUMBIA

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING RE NATURAL RESOURCES, RAILWAYS AND PORT FACILITIES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Honourable the Leader of the Government in the Senate with regard to his mission of peace and conciliation to British Columbia over the weekend in respect of coal exports. I should like to ask him if the quotation attributed to him, namely, "There are some loose ends to tie up, but that hardly suggests negotiations are coming apart at the seams," is a correct statement of his views.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Well, honourable senators, that is a "loose" account of what I actually said.

Senator Roblin: As a supplementary, would the Leader of the Government care to give us a progress report on how those loose ends are coming along?

Senator Perrault: First of all, honourable senators, may I say how gratified and heartened I am to know that my absence was noted last week. Obviously the opposition believes that I may have a role to fill here, since I am told that they inquired about me during the Question Period last week, but the deputy leader, I understand, did superbly well.

Senator Macdonald: A much better job.

Senator Perrault: Obviously, then, I must not be away too often or stray too far afield.

As far as the "mission" to the west is concerned, it was a very successful week from the standpoint of all of Canada. May I inform honourable senators that among important announcements made on the coast was one stating that the grain handling facilities at Prince Rupert will go ahead. This is an announcement of great importance to all four western provinces and to all of Canada. May I say that the announcement was possible because of the outstanding efforts of Senator Argue and Senator Olson. The agreement to proceed would not have been achieved had it not been for their superb efforts. Together with the Minister of Transport and others, they deserve the commendation of all of us.

● (2035)

Honourable senators, just a few weeks ago the opposition predicted that the grain terminal would not be built at Prince Rupert. Our countless assurances to the contrary were dismissed. The fact of the matter is that this very important Canadian project is going to go ahead.

Other announcements were made on the west coast with respect to efforts to increase Canadian trade in the Pacific. Facilities are to be established to help to sell export products from all across the country through the important port of Vancouver.

As far as the coal project is concerned, again western ministers are playing a key role in efforts to achieve a working arrangement with British Columbia to bring into production northeast coal from that province—a development which could be of substantial importance to all Canadians. Negotiations are proceeding with the Government of British Columbia to make certain that if the project goes ahead, it will represent a productive investment of taxpayers' funds. The participation of the Government of Canada will make economic sense and it will be productive for the nation if the project does move ahead. The project has to be a good deal for Canada and a good deal for all Canadians before federal funds are invested in it.

There are, in northeastern British Columbia, some of the most important resources of metallurgical coal to be found in the entire world, and if Japan and other countries wish to purchase quantities of this coal at a fair price, then it may be possible to negotiate the "good deal" I referred to earlier.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I notice that among other statements attributable to him, is one in which the Leader of the Government wonders whether the price would be high enough to justify the investment. What is the policy of the government with respect to the matter? Does it expect the investment to be fully amortized by charges to the users of the line, or is there an element of subsidy contemplated in respect to the matter?

Senator Perrault: There may be some subsidy involved in establishing the infrastructure. Over the term of the proposed initial coal contract of 10 years, if prices and quantities are right, federal-provincial co-operative development could represent a very good investment for the entire nation, not only in terms of job creation but in improving our balance of payments situation and in terms of the money to accrue to Canada from large coal sales abroad.

As the honourable senator is aware because of his extensive background in business, a fair price for that coal must be negotiated. At a certain price level, it is anticipated that it could be an extremely good coal deal for Canada. It is not possible, and would not be good policy, to cite specific prices at this time.

Senator Roblin: Could my honourable friend give us any information as to the nature of the problem in respect of the agreement with the Province of British Columbia in these negotiations?

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator has been involved in many federal-provincial negotiations in the past. Negotiations are under way with respect to that portion of the project which may be properly allocated to federal resources—either loans or grants, whatever the route—and that portion of the project which should be the beneficiary of provincial financing. In the ordinary course of events, federal governments are responsible for maintaining and upgrading, under certain conditions, mainline railways through the crown-owned Canadian National Railways. It is reasonable to assume that the federal government would have certain responsibilities with respect to port development at Prince Rupert. There are other aspects of the infrastructure that may well justify the investment of federal funds.

Senator Roblin: I will try and restrict myself to one final supplementary. The Leader of the Government raised the involvement of the Canadian National Railways. We have been informed in previous discussions in this chamber and in Senate committees that it is not the policy of the government to expect Canadian National Railways to make good on any subsidies that might be required for matters of this kind. I want my honourable friend's assurance that that policy still remains and, if there is a subsidy element, Canadian National Railways will not be expected to provide it.

Senator Perrault: I appreciate that the honourable senator has posed that question once again in a different form. Subsidy is not involved. Tariffs would be established to recover the investment in upgrading the rail system in order to ship the coal and other products, including wheat, but there would be an initial amount required in terms of a capital investment by the CN to provide the proper track, ballast and associated facilities.

Senator Roblin: On a remunerative basis?

● (2040)

Senator Perrault: On a remunerative basis. That is part of the process of figuring what the cost of that coal is going to be when delivered to Japan. We are not in the business of subsidizing the Japanese steel industry. It has to be a good deal for Canada and a good deal, of course, from the standpoint of potential customers like Japan. We have been in a very productive negotiation. Despite reports which appeared in the press, there has not been a breakdown in negotiations with the Province of British Columbia. These negotiations are continuing. There were discussions again today on the subject with British Columbia cabinet ministers, and it is hopeful that this good Canadian project can be brought to development, but only if the price is right.

AGRICULTURE

DROUGHT IN PRAIRIE PROVINCES

Hon. Harry Hays: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board.

As all honourable senators know, we have had a terrible drought in western Canada which extends all the way from the Rocky Mountains straight through to Winnipeg. We have a water shortage for livestock and pastures are drying up, and I am wondering if the government has any plans to assist the farmers or the ranchers in this emergency?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board): I thank Senator Hays for giving me notice of the question. My reply is as follows:

The Government of Canada is well aware of the worry that exists among many prairie people about the possibility of drought conditions this spring and summer in western Canada, and wants to be fully prepared to take whatever action may be feasible and necessary to help deal with the situation.

I have been in touch in recent days with a good many grain and livestock producers in the west, and their concern about a lack of moisture is very real.

They say it is a bit too early yet to push the panic button, but they want to know that Ottawa is aware of the potential problem they are facing, and is prepared to deal with it—as much as that is humanly possible.

Similar worries plagued westerners in the very dry spring of 1977, and the federal government responded at that time by establishing a Drought Task Force, with headquarters in Regina, to monitor the situation very closely and to draw up contingency plans for federal action to alleviate drought impact. That task force still exists—it is a Government of Canada task force—under the chairmanship of a senior official in the federal Department of Agriculture. It has been meeting already to analyze the problem and to prepare for possible federal action.

In 1977 many prairie communities were faced with severe water shortages. Through DREE and PFRA, the Government of Canada moved quickly with a deep-well drilling program and on-farm well and dugout programs. The federal government also assisted in transporting livestock feed to feed short areas. There was also federal assistance to help transport water overland for both farm and community purposes.

We will be looking to the Drought Task Force to monitor the situation across the prairies on a day-by-day basis, and to assist in preparing the necessary plans for federal action.

The government—the Ministers of Agriculture, DREE and I, and our colleagues on the Treasury Board—will want to be ready to cope as much as possible with the problem if further days go by without appreciable rainfall to alleviate the situation.

I am sure all members of Parliament in both houses, and provincial governments in western Canada, will want to help deal effectively with what could be a very serious problem.

I should also mention that if general weather conditions result in a short crop across the prairies, the federal government's western grain stabilization plan and crop insurance will provide hundreds of millions of dollars of very necessary income.

I have great confidence in the good judgment and farming skill of prairie producers who have fought successfully against all manner of tough farming in the past, but if the rains fail and dry weather persists, the Government of Canada will have to stand ready to take whatever special action may be feasible and necessary to compensate for nature's failure.

INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE TO CHRYSLER CORPORATION

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. Could the minister give us some information on the arrangement with Chrysler that was announced over the weekend? Some of the details are not all that well known—at least not to me as yet. I have the impression that the guarantees to be provided by the Government of Canada will not become operative until 1982, so that there will be a two-year hiatus before the Canadian government guarantees come into effect. Is this correct, Mr. Minister?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Yes, essentially, that is correct. The commitments have been made, but the draw-down on those commitments will not begin until 1982. I should also advise the honourable senator that the draw-down on some of the other financing, especially in the United States for the international corporation, will begin earlier.

Senator Doody: I am not quite clear on that. It is obviously my fault. Is the Canadian Chrysler Corporation to be financed then from 1980 to 1982 by a draw-down, and is there to be American financing to look after the Canadian company's cash demands from 1980 to 1982, or is there no great demand for cash in the Canadian operation?

Senator Olson: Well, honourable senators, I think that Canadian Chrysler is integrated with the international corporation. I am prepared to give more specific details about that and about what we have received in exchange in terms of the timing. Indeed, it was agreed to by Chrysler as to when the draw-down on our loan guarantees will become operative. If the honourable senator would like me to give more detail, I will be happy to do so.

Senator Doody: Yes, honourable senators, I would be very pleased indeed. I do not pretend to have any great knowledge of this agreement since I have not seen it, but it does seem strange that we would—in light of the announced policy of government to discourage foreign investment—announce publicly at this point in time that we are going to ask the Americans to finance the Canadian operation during that two-year period—that hiatus. In the event that the Canadian guarantee is necessary, it would fall in place in 1982. There must be more to it than that. I must be oversimplifying it. Surely that cannot be correct.

Senator Olson: I think you are oversimplifying it when you suggest, at least by implication, that somebody else is going to bear the burden for Chrysler Canada. That was not part of the agreement. Indeed, as I understood it, from a number of people in the United States, one of the key factors in the whole package's coming together was the Canadian commitment to share proportionately—that is, the Canadian government's meeting proportionately what the Government of the United States is doing. I can advise the honourable senator that in addition Chrysler Canada has agreed that they must invest approximately $1 billion in Canada in the period from 1980 to 1985. Of this, $400 million and a specific project towards which the loan guarantee must be applied will be for the conversion and expansion of Chrysler's existing van plant to produce a new small fuel-efficient van wagon to be built exclusively in Canada. Chrysler will also spend more than $250 million to improve existing production facilities, and to build one of the new lines of front-wheel drive small cars to be introduced in 1983. More than $300 million will go towards improving several existing assembly and manufacturing operations.

The breakdown of the expenditure by year is as follows: in the current year, $62 million; 1981, $69 million; 1982, $236 million, which is when the drawdown on our guarantees begins; 1983, $469 million; 1984, $55 million; 1985, $91 million.

Senator Doody: I think the figures you gave were $62 million in 1980 and $69 million in 1981. How much of this capital will be made available from United States sources for investment with Chrysler Canada? Has this been reviewed by FIRA, and has it been accepted as foreign investment acceptable to Canada?

Senator Olson: I don't think there is any change anticipated in the equity position of Chrysler, and therefore FIRA is not involved in it. In reply to the other part of the question, the fact is that the figures I have just given on the staging of the investment in Canada, and also the anticipated dates of drawing down on the Canadian loan guarantees, have been agreed to by Chrysler. How they work it out for the viability of the entire company is a matter for them, and I really don't believe the comments made are justified from that point of view.

Senator Doody: I really wasn't making comments. I was simply asking a question. Whether or not Chrysler is happy is a matter of some indifference to me. I am more concerned with the investment picture and the amount of Canadian ownership of a rather vital part of Canadian industry. It appears to me that what we are looking at now is the result of the American ownership of a huge sector of the Canadian economy.

Be that as it may, I understand that Chrysler Corporation has undertaken to see that the Canadian labour content is to be at least nine per cent of Chrysler's North American work force, and it is to rise, I think, to 11 per cent over a period of a few years. In light of the fact that the auto industry appears to be looking at the concept of a world car, with components being made in various parts of the world, looking at labour costs, transportation costs and so on in different parts of the world, what are we looking at? The percentage figure does not mean all that much. Nine per cent of nothing is obviously very little. What exactly do we look at in return for the guarantees given in actual terms of concrete commitments for concrete jobs up to 1985, which the minister mentioned a few minutes ago?

Senator Olson: It is pretty clear that what we are looking at is, first of all, a commitment by the Canadian government respecting the proportionality of the amount of production, and indeed the market in Canada, vis-à-vis Canada and the United States put together. That is the commitment. In exchange for that Chrysler has given, as the honourable senator has pointed out, something in the nature of a proportionality of the benefits in terms of jobs that flow from that activity in Canada and the United States.

Senator Doody: Could the minister tell us what the penalties will be for Chrysler if they do not produce along the lines he has discussed? A little while ago we witnessed the Government of Canada, together with the Government of Ontario, rushing to outbid the State of Ohio, I think it was, to pump $60 million into Ford. That Ford plant has gone; the $60 million has gone, and we have nothing to show for it. However, Ford are still operating, and to my knowledge they have paid no penalty, nor are they called upon to pay any penalty, for what seems to me to be a default. If there was no penalty clause, there obviously was not a default. Is there some clause built into this agreement with Chrysler whereby they will be responsible to the people of Canada for some of this $200 million, or what have you?

Senator Olson: I think honourable senators have to recognize that this is an attempt to make viable again, or to restore, whatever you want to call it, a fairly large, in fact a very large, company and its activities in Canada. The government has recognized the difficulty of projecting with absolute precision the number of jobs and so on over the next six years, jobs that are largely dependent on economic and market conditions, particularly in the automotive industry, which, as everyone knows, is not as healthy as it has been at some times in the past.

I can go through this and spell out the exact number of jobs and so on in each one of those years. Of course there is some risk involved, but the risks in relation to the potential benefits are, we think, satisfactory. I should also say that by the time the drawdown on the loan guarantees that we have undertaken is indeed made, we will have an equal or greater amount of additional investment in Canada.

Senator Doody: The investment in Canada will be guaranteed by the Canadian government's $200 million note?

Senator Olson: No. The new investment in Canada will be, as I pointed out, $62 million in 1980, $69 million in 1981 and $236 million in 1982. If you add all that up you get way beyond $300 million, and the total offer of loan guarantees is $200 million. By the time we get to the end of that the new investment in Canada will be in the order of $1 billion, or about five times as much.

Senator Doody: It gets stranger and stranger. What, then, is the significance of the $200 million? Why is that so necessary if the company is willing to put in $62 million, $69 million and $236 million, or $350 million of its own money anyway? My impression, and that of a lot of people in Canada, was that if somebody did not give them some money tomorrow they were going to go bankrupt, that there would be an incredible number of people out of work if somebody didn't rush in tomorrow and pick up the payroll. I now understand that they don't really need this $200 million. That's in 1982 perhaps, but it's a sort of little comfort letter for the bank down the road. It sounds like Newfoundland's economic development program of thirty years ago, with great respect to the minister.

I'm used to going into the bank and signing a little note, getting my $50 loan and making a payment on something, but they expect me to put something up in return for that. Has Chrysler Corporation put up anything? The minister now tells us they are going to put $350 million in during the next three years. If so, what do they need our $200 million for? Or do they need it at all?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, it would take a little longer than I have tonight to review the entire—

Senator Asselin: You don't know the answer.

Senator Olson: If the honourable senator wants to get the whole load he can get it in about the next hour. If you have not followed the negotiations that went into determining what Canada's contribution is for, I am sorry. Obviously, you have not been reading the financial papers of the past few days.

• (2100)

Honourable senators, it is clear, at least to me, that several weeks ago the United States government gave a commitment to provide $1.4 billion in loans to the Chrysler Corporation, provided it could raise that much money outside of the United States government. The Canadian portion of $200 million is a vital part of that whole deal. In addition to that, a great deal of additional financing is going into the retooling, rebuilding and redesigning of the corporation in an attempt to make the Chrysler Corporation a viable economic entity again.

I did not think honourable senators wanted me to go through all of this tonight, but if they do, it is all here. It seems perfectly clear to me that the Canadian commitment of $200 million is proportional to the commitment of the United States. When we look at the proportionality of the production and market in Canada vis-à-vis the United States, it meets that proportionality.

If the requirement to find $1.4 billion in financing outside of the United States government had not been met, then, of course, some of the outstanding indebtedness would have been called by the bankers, financiers, or whoever they are. I do not see it is any great mystery.

Because of Canada's willingness to participate, along with all the other financing which they have found, the United States has agreed, now that their condition has been met, to commit the $1.4 billion. This makes available to the Chrysler Corporation something approaching, but not quite, $3 billion in financing that they did not have until the whole package was put together. It may be that you wish to belittle the $200 million, but from what I read in the papers during the past two or three days, it was a critical factor in the whole thing.

Senator Doody: Thank you, senator. Please do not misunderstand me. I was not belittling the $200 million. I am still aghast at the size of the sum. What I was trying to find out—and I am still not clear on it—is Canada's commitment or involvement on the refinancing package. Is this a real liability, a contingent liability, or is it a liability two years down the road? If the Chrysler Corporation disappears off the map before 1982 or 1983, do we still owe $200 million? Who is financing them in the meantime? Are the Canadian people behind this at all, or is it all being financed by the United States of America?

Perhaps the honourable senator could table the agreement so that we can have a look at it and then ask questions. I am sincerely asking these questions out of ignorance. It is a curious and strange arrangement.

Senator Olson: To repeat myself, there would be no drawdown on the Canadian undertaking until 1982. Presumably, if the other terms and conditions of the agreement that has been made with Chrysler have not been met, such as the investment that I went into, and so forth, then we would not be liable, but I will check that for you. I am sure that if the company went bankrupt between now and 1982 it would not be called on.

The honourable senator asks whether it is real. Certainly it is real, but there are always two sides to a deal. If one side of the deal is not kept, then I do not suppose there is an obligation for the other side of the deal to be kept.

Senator Doody: The honourable senator is getting to the point now. There are, obviously, two sides to a deal, and I do not know what the other side is. That is why I started the questioning with: What is the responsibility of the company in this regard? Is there a commitment on behalf of the company in this regard? I did not mention a draw-down first or last. I did not even dream there was cash available for the company to draw down. I was under the impression that it was a $200 million guarantee two years down the road, but if there is a draw-down, that is even more interesting. Is that a guarantee, then?

Perhaps the minister could table that agreement so that we can have a look at it and ask questions on it.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I have a reply here in anticipation of the question: Can the minister tell us specifically what commitments Chrysler has made with respect to jobs in Canada? I would be very happy to ask that it be appended or that it be taken as read so that the honourable senator can understand exactly what Chrysler's commitments are on their side of the agreement.

Senator Doody: I appreciate that very much.

I should like to add my voice of welcome to the government leader. I am glad to have him back in the house. His deputy gave just as much information as his colleague, but it took him only half as long.

Senator Olson: I think that is a very unfair comment. I say that because it is not my fault that the honourable senator is unable to understand plain English.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: I have a supplementary question to that asked by Senator Doody, and it is based on the fact that many consultants questioned the reliability and accuracy of the information supplied by Chrysler Corporation. The kindest thing that can be said about the profit projections and sales forecasts of the corporation in the last few years is that they were about as accurate as the Liberal budget, and that can hardly be taken as a compliment.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Don't get political.

Senator Phillips: Did the government engage any management consultants or marketing consultants to review the information supplied by the Chrysler Corporation?

Senator Olson: I think it would be fair to reply, honourable senators, that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, led by the very capable minister of that department, certainly must have carried out a great deal of consultation, at least within their department, in examining all of these requirements. I think I could give an undertaking to obtain some information on the examination that they did of these questions which he has raised.

Senator Phillips: A further supplementary question: Must the $200 million guaranteed by the Canadian government be raised or borrowed from Canadian financial institutions, and is there any limitation placed on the amount of interest that could be paid by the Chrysler Corporation?

Senator Olson: I cannot answer those questions specifically, but the undertaking begins in 1982. I suppose the interest rate level at that time is the one that will be employed. As far as the money is concerned, it will be advanced, I presume, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. It is an undertaking to honour a commitment given on a loan during the years which I previously mentioned.

Senator Phillips: The announcement says it will be borrowed from private financial institutions. Did I understand you correctly?

Senator Olson: I am sorry, that is correct. I will take that back. It is a loan guarantee, not a direct loan. You are right.

THE ECONOMY

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Jack Marshall: I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. In view of the fact that unemployment figures are increasing, and in view of the fact that there is a threat of their increasing much more—which was even admitted by the Minister of Finance—I wonder if the Minister of State for Economic Development could advise the house if the government has any contingency plans or any plans to introduce make-work programs over the next few months to help alleviate the threat of higher unemployment.

• (2110)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I cannot at this point go into the specifics of any such plans, particularly those which have not as yet been announced. As I have said several times previously, I am not going to make announcements for and on behalf of other ministers.

I shall make inquiries as to whether or not there are some announcements to be made soon.

INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE TO SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I should like to pose a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development. In refusing once again to provide funding at this time to the Sydney Steel Corporation, the Minister of Finance, yesterday, said that inadequate material has thus far been supplied by the Government of Nova Scotia and by Sysco to support any application for funding.

Would the minister now inform the Senate as to the basis on which his party made a firm commitment during the recent election campaign—a commitment repeated on numerous occasions—that, on their election, $50 million would be forthcoming to Sysco?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I shall make inquiries in that regard of the Minister of Finance, who I am sure is very familiar with all of the matters my honourable friend has raised. I shall draw to the attention of the Minister of Finance the matter which my honourable friend raises.

Senator Muir: May I humbly suggest that neither the honourable minister nor the government can have it both ways. When they committed themselves to support Sysco in the amount of $50 million, they must have had a plan. Now they say they cannot provide the $50 million because there is no plan.

I must assume, in the light of what the minister has said, and subject to any answer that might be forthcoming, that the Liberals did not promise support to the amount of $50 million on the basis of unassembled or even unconceived material.

Would the government now be willing to supply Sysco with a copy of the information which, in making that campaign promise, they obviously felt to be sufficiently adequate, so that Sysco can in turn re-submit it to the government by way of a new application?

That is a rather ridiculous suggestion to make, but every day we have the media reporting that one federal minister says one thing and the provincial government something else, with the result that total confusion prevails at the moment. Anything the minister can do to clarify the situation would be appreciated.

Senator Olson: I have already given my undertaking that I will make inquiries of the Minister of Finance, who is familiar with this situation. I don't think I can add anything more to the commitment I made in that regard a few minutes ago.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

RENEWAL OF NORAD AGREEMENT—REFERENCE TO PARLIAMENT

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I have a question of the government leader concerning the document he tabled earlier in the proceedings in relation to the one-year extension to NORAD coming as a result of the government's decision to refer the matter to a committee of the House of Commons. I might say, I am surprised that the powers that be have not thought of seeking the views of the Foreign Affairs Committee of this chamber which, under the distinguished chairmanship of Senator van Roggen, has been conducting very serious and exhaustive studies on a wide range of Canada-U.S. matters.

I note particularly in the letter from the United States government the expressed desire of that government that the agreement "may be re-negotiated in a full-fledged way within the 12-month period requested by the Canadian government."

Considering the popularity in this country of the NORAD Agreement, and considering the embattled position which the United States has before the world, can I ask whether the Government of Canada is giving sympathetic consideration to the proposition of the United States that this matter, rather than be subjected to a year's "ad hocery," may soon be put on the basis of a great deal more stability—a proposition which strikes me as being very reasonable.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I appreciate the honourable senator's comments. I shall take the question as notice and obtain further information from the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

ENERGY

TAXATION AND EXPENDITURE TO ACHIEVE SELF-SUFFICIENCY

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I wish to reply to a question asked by Senator Sherwood during Question Period on May 8 concerning whether the government is considering imposing a tax on energy companies.

As I indicated in my first response to his question, and as was also stated by the Minister of Finance last week, any such tax would be announced as part of a government budget statement. However, the Minister of Finance also went on to say that he has no such tax or revenue under consideration at this time.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO JAPAN

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I now have a reply to a question asked by Senator Asselin during Question Period on May 8 regarding the possible sale of a Candu nuclear reactor to Japan.

No final commitment has been made by the Japanese concerning purchase arrangements. Representatives of our government are meeting with Japanese officials this week for detailed discussions, and a further stage of the evaluation program is being fully investigated. This program will examine the appropriateness of the Candu technology to Japanese needs and the question of the effect of seismic activity on nuclear plants. When a decision is reached on this matter, I shall be most pleased to inform honourable senators.

HOUSING

ASSISTED HOME OWNERSHIP PROGRAM

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have with me this evening the reply to a question asked by Senator Sherwood on May 5 regarding the Assisted Home Ownership Program. As it is fairly lengthy, I would ask that it be placed on the record at this point.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

It appears there may be some misunderstanding about the manner in which housing units—AHOP or otherwise—are acquired by the Mortgage Insurance Fund. I mention this because it is not clear exactly what the honourable senator means by "quits" under the program. In any event, there are essentially three ways in which units are acquired: foreclosure, power of sale or voluntary transfers. Voluntary transfers are commonly known as Quit Claims.

In order to put the matter into its proper perspective, I should like to provide honourable senators with information on claims paid on all AHOP units acquired by the MIF, whether Quit Claimed or not.

From 1975 through 1979, the MIF acquired 6,395 AHOP units. Of these, 5,155 were acquired in 1979. During the first quarter of 1980—January through March—the MIF acquired 1,195 AHOP units. This produces a total of 8,130 claims paid from 1975 to the end of March 1980. Honourable senators can see from this figure that the number of claims paid in the first quarter of this year totals only about 14.7 per cent of claims since 1975, rather than the 25 per cent suggested by Senator Sherwood.

With declining interest rates and the recent extension of AHOP benefits, we can expect to see a decline in the rate of people who experience genuine hardship in meeting increased monthly payments when their mortgages roll over.

FINANCE

SOURCES OF PROJECTED FINANCIAL REQUIREMENTS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I now have a reply to a question posed by Senator Doody on May 1 last regarding the financing of the government's cash requirements for fiscal 1980-81. Again, it is rather lengthy, and I would ask that it be placed on the record at this point.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

The $11.7 billion figure refers to the government's domestic cash requirements for fiscal 1980-81. The government finances its domestic cash requirements through the issue of marketable bonds, Treasury bills and Canada Savings Bonds in Canada. The government does not borrow abroad to finance these cash requirements. The only time the government borrows abroad is to replenish official foreign exchange reserves which have been run down by foreign exchange transactions. Consequently, the government does not plan to raise any of this amount in foreign markets. Foreign exchange transactions do have an impact on the government's cash requirements and, consequently, can affect the debt program. However, foreign exchange transactions are not planned or anticipated.

In financing the cash requirement, the amount of cash raised through the issue of various types of securities in Canada varies from year to year and depends on prevailing economic and financial conditions. The actual debt programs for the past two fiscal years illustrate how the cash requirements have been met in the past.

Cash Requirements and Sources of Financing

($ millions)

	Fiscal 1978/79	Fiscal 1979/80
Cash Requirement
—Requirement excl. Foreign Exchange Transactions	10,939	10,403
—Foreign Exchange Transactions	(4,087)	221
Total	6,852	10,629

Sources of Funds		%		%
Treasury Bills	2,240	26	2,795	35
Marketable Bonds	5,302	60	6,403	81
CSBs	1,236	14	(1,255)	-16
Total	8,778	100	7,943	100
Increase in Cash Balances	1,926		(2,686)

In 1978-79, foreign exchange transactions substantially reduced the cash requirements and the $8.8 billion debt program resulted in a $1.9 billion addition to cash balances. In fiscal year 1979-80, foreign exchange transactions had almost no impact on cash requirements and these were financed by a run down in cash balances, which had been built up the previous year, and a $7.9 billion debt program. In 1979-80, a greater use was made of Treasury bills and marketable bonds than in 1978-79 as there were net redemptions of CSBs over the fiscal year.

In fiscal 1980-81 we do not plan to make much use of cash balances. Consequently, we plan to raise around $11.0 billion in the capital markets. Since the government has for some time been playing down the role of Canada Savings Bonds, we do not expect to raise much new money from this source. We have also been making more use of the Treasury bill market this year. Consequently, we expect that the proportion of the debt program met through the issue of Treasury bills will be larger than in the past two fiscal years and the proportion met through issue of marketable bonds will be closer to that in fiscal 1978-79.

The amount of government debt taken up by the Bank of Canada is determined by monetary policy considerations and is not affected by the government's cash requirements. The Bank of Canada currently has announced target ranges for the growth in the banking system which determines the increase in the Bank of Canada's assets and, hence the amount of Government of Canada debt which the Bank will absorb.

Senator Olson: There was then a supplementary question as to whether the officials of the Department of Finance had consulted with their counterparts in the provinces to try to co-ordinate the borrowing programs, and I would ask that the reply to that be treated in the same manner.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

At federal-provincial meetings officials of the Government of Canada and the provinces exchange an outline of their cash requirements for the coming years as well as a rough outline of how these requirements might be met. However, some of the provinces borrow both in Canada and abroad. Since market conditions vary considerably through time and there is a wide choice of sources, the provinces have some difficulty in providing specific plans. Furthermore, the provinces are quite independent in the implementation of their debt programs as the federal government has no jurisdiction in this area. Consequently, while there is an exchange of general information, there is no coordination of detailed borrowing plans. To a large extent the underwriters for the provinces and the federal government are the same, and these underwriters do provide some coordination in the timing and location of borrowing.

BOYCOTT OF 1980 OLYMPIC GAMES IN MOSCOW—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTER FROM PRIME MINISTER TO PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, over the past week I have been very busy and much of my labour has been an assiduous attempt to catch up on the questions raised by honourable senators over these recent days. I am this evening in a position to provide replies to eight of those questions, which I think constitutes a new Canadian record.

On April 16 last Senator Asselin asked if the recent letter from the Prime Minister to the President of the United States regarding the Canadian government's policy on matters related to measures taken against the Soviet Union after its invasion of Afghanistan, as well as measures taken against Iran, could be tabled in the house.

As the honourable senator is probably aware, a similar request was made in the House of Commons. The Speaker of that place ruled that since the Prime Minister only referred to the letter and did not actually quote from it, there was no obligation on him to table it.

IRAN—POSSIBLE NAVAL BLOCKADE BY UNITED STATES

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a question was asked by Senator Haidasz on April 16 on the subject of possible naval blockade of Iran by the United States. The question was:

> The government leader will know that in January, 104 countries represented at the United Nations voted to support sanctions against Iran. I should like to ask him whether the federal government has recently been asked to support the talked-about U.S. naval blockade of Iran?

Then there was this supplementary question:

> Can the Leader of the Government comment on the news that the U.S.S.R. has been amassing military forces on Iran's borders and conducting military manoeuvres there?

Honourable senators, while the Canadian government was asked to support economic and diplomatic sanctions against Iran, there has been no request for co-operation in non-peaceful measures such as a naval blockade. The Prime Minister has already indicated that Canada does not favour military action in present circumstances.

There has been some speculation that the Soviet Union is deploying increased forces in its territory north of Iran, but the government has seen no evidence which would clearly establish that this is the case.

VISIT TO CANADA OF U.S. SECRETARY OF STATE

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a rather lengthy reply of two-and-a-half pages to a question asked by Senator Macquarrie regarding the visit to Canada of the United States Secretary of State Vance. The question is as follows:

> Could the Leader of the Government indicate what points will be put forward by the Canadian government in discussions with Secretary Vance?

This is rather a full reply, honourable senators, and perhaps it could be incorporated in the printed record.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

The Secretary of State for External Affairs met with the U.S.A. Secretary of State April 23 to review a broad range of bilateral and multilateral matters. They had extensive discussions on east coast fisheries and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Honourable Mark MacGuigan, stressed to Mr. Vance the importance

Canada attaches to ratification of the East Coast Fisheries Treaty. The U.S.A. Secretary pledged that the Administration would continue to support the treaty fully and press for its approval by the Senate. The two men discussed transboundary environmental problems, particularly that of the transborder movement of air-borne pollutants (acid rain), and reviewed aspects of the economic and trading relationship between Canada and the U.S.A., including the financing of the Alaska gas pipeline.

On the multilateral side, Mr. Vance and Mr. MacGuigan discussed events in Iran and Afghanistan; the American secretary paid credit to Canada for its action in aiding American diplomats in Tehran, and expressed gratification for Canada's support on sanctions and boycotting the Olympics. The two leaders also discussed the Middle East situation, including the Palestinian autonomy negotiations, and they reviewed events in Southern Africa. With the Prime Minister, Mr. Vance also discussed these matters as well as the Economic Summit to be held in Venice in June.

The two foreign ministers discussed the Law of the Sea negotiations and acknowledged that they were not able to agree on the difficult question of mineral exploitation of the sea bed. The Secretary of State for External Affairs noted that our national interests appear to be in collision over nickel mining from the seabed.

Mr. Vance and Mr. MacGuigan also signed a protocol amending the Canada-U.S.A. Nuclear Co-operation Agreement.

It was a very good meeting with the representative of our great neighbour and ally. It was with regret that we learned of the resignation of Secretary Vance but we are confident that his successor, Mr. Muskie, will continue to pursue the harmonization of relations between our two countries.

JOINT REVIEW COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): There was a question asked by Senator Asselin on April 29 concerning the Joint Review Committee on Foreign Affairs. I regret he is not in the chamber at the present time, but these questions must be dealt with because of the time. Senator Asselin asked:

> During the last session the government proposed the establishment of a joint Senate-Commons committee to review Canada's foreign policy as well as its foreign aid policy. Does the government or the Secretary of State for External Affairs intend to present those proposals during this session?

The answer is no.

Question: Does that mean that the government will not conduct a foreign policy review?

Answer: As stated on April 16 by the Prime Minister in another place, the government sees no need for an extensive and fundamental review of foreign (or defence) policy. However, specific aspects of Canadian foreign policy are always open to review. For example, as the honourable senator will be aware, on April 17 the Prime Minister announced that a Parliamentary Task Force will be struck to examine north-south relations.

Question: Does the government consider that the documents (Discussion Papers), especially that on foreign aid policy, prepared for use in the foreign policy review initiated by the previous government, would make a useful contribution to the work of the Parliamentary Task Force on North-South Relations?

Answer: That is for the Task Force to decide when the papers are made public.

Question: Will they be made public?

Answer: Yes.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER—AGREEMENT BETWEEN GOVERNMENT OF CANADA AND FÉDÉRATION DES FRANCOPHONES HORS QUÉBEC

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): On May 1 Senator Murray asked a question as to what the government's position is with respect to the agreement ratified by the previous government to set up a joint commission with the Fédération des francophones hors Québec.

The answer is that the government is committed to the development of francophone communities outside of Quebec, and intends to set up appropriate consultative mechanisms between the Government of Canada and the Fédération des francophones hors Québec. This matter was discussed at a recent meeting with the Fédération. Suitable consultation procedures are being examined and an announcement will be made shortly.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO ARGENTINA

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): A question was asked by Senator Macquarrie on May 5 regarding the sale of the Candu reactors to Argentina.

Canada's nuclear co-operation with Argentina is currently limited to the supply of one Candu 600 reactor (Embalse) under a contract originally concluded in December, 1973, between AECL and Argentina's National Atomic Energy Commission (CNEA). The Embalse reactor is being provided under the Canada-Argentina nuclear co-operation agreement of January, 1976, and the associated Argentina-IAEA safeguards agreement which fully meet the requirements of Canada's December, 1974, safeguards policy. Recent references in the press to contract negotiations between AECL and CNEA deal with the renegotiation of the December, 1973, contract, not the negotiation of a new contract for the sale of a second Candu reactor.

Any new contract for nuclear co-operation between Canada and Argentina can only be implemented if Argentina meets the requirements of Canada's December, 1976, safeguards policy, i.e. Argentina will have to make a binding commitment to non-proliferation and accept international safeguards on all of its peaceful nuclear activities. This has been the policy position of the Canadian government since December, 1976, and there has been no lowering of the safeguards requirements under that policy.

PUBLIC SERVICE

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): I have a rather long reply to important questions posed by Senator Muir on May 7 regarding the Auditor General's findings on civil service efficiency. Because of the length of this reply, honourable senators, I propose that it be incorporated in today's proceedings.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The questions and answers follow:)

In view of the Auditor General's findings on civil service efficiency:

What remedial action, if any, is being taken to ensure that the situation improves?

Does the government propose to establish efficiency norms for the public service that are comparable to those in the private sector and see to it that these are enforced?

What, if anything, is being done to improve personnel management and productivity?

Since it was the Auditor General's opinion that the work being done by 50,000 clerical regulatory federal civil servants could be done by 38,000, does the government anticipate reducing the size of the federal bureaucracy? If so, how and when?

A great deal of rhetoric has surfaced through the media and in discussions around this issue. The flavour of the public discussion is of a fashion different than the facts reported by the Auditor General. The Comptroller General and officials of the Treasury Board Secretariat met with the Auditor General and his senior staff to get a better appreciation of the significance of this issue. We were interested particularly in the validity of the work measurement studies, the extent to which the results could be extrapolated to a larger segment of the public service, and of course to understand if this particular work signalled the need for redirection of the government's strategies for improving management practices in the public service.

The Facts

1. To begin with, the tests were simply the application of the methods-time-motion (MTM) technique to determine the levels of efficiency in 10 individual units of the Clerical and Regulatory (CR) 1-4 category in ten different departments. In total, 160 public servants were surveyed. These techniques are widely accepted. The techniques say nothing about why efficiencies are what they are, nor do they suggest ways for improvement. The tests simply provide an understanding of what level of efficiency is being achieved in these 10 units given the tasks performed.

2. Although the units to be surveyed were selected jointly with departments with a view to identifying groups that were typical of departmental CR activities, there is no statistical basis for implying that the situation is similar for the 28,500 CR 1-4's employed by the ten departments. Furthermore, no statistical inference can be made for the total CR group (50,000) on the basis of the results without assuming as did the Auditor General "if the results are typical of the occupation group".

3. With respect to other occupational groups in government—secretaries, general labour, etc.—no statement can be made based on the facts of the Auditor General's survey.

Therefore, it is not appropriate, based on the Auditor General's survey, to suggest that a reduction from 50,000 to 38,000 be made by the government in the size of the federal Clerical and Regulatory group.

The results of the ten clerical groups surveyed are an indication of symptoms of the problem only. They are not an indication of the causes. His report, I believe, is intended to re-emphasize that the issue needs to be considered in relation to the total aspect of good human resource management. This is exactly what we as a government are doing.

A number of initiatives recently placed under the responsibility of the President of the Treasury Board, have been launched by the government to change the overall environment associated with resource management and to improve management practices and controls generally. These include the establishment of the Office of the Comptroller General which is moving forward at a good pace with the execution of its mandate, as well as consideration of the recommendations contained in the Lambert Commission's report including the restructuring of the expenditure management process for all of government. In addition the recommendations of the D'Avignon Commission on personnel management practices are under very active consideration at this moment. These initiatives are designed to redress the core problems correctly identified by the work of the Auditor General over the past three to five years.

It must be realized that the impact of the initiatives launched by the government will not work their way through the system instantaneously; nor can all the initiatives be brought to fruition in a short time span. The costs and risks of doing so would be exorbitant. Meanwhile, departments can introduce efficiency improvement and measurement programs where it is cost effective to do so.

An acceptable level of efficiency for the kinds of work under discussion here will be determined when all the improvements identified by the government, by the Office of the Comptroller General in its IMPAC surveys and by the Auditor General, have been made.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

TASK FORCE ON REVIEW OF UNIFICATION OF THE CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Marshall on May 8 regarding the Task Force on Review of Unification of the Canadian Armed Forces. Senator Marshall asked whether the Minister of National Defence plans to reject the proposal for a distinctive uniform from the Task Force on Review of Unification of the Canadian Forces. If not, Senator Marshall asked if the Minister of National Defence would review the report, report to the Senate on the problems identified in the report, and refer the report to a committee of the Senate.

The answer is that the Minister of National Defence plans to have officials from his department review the report. They will be asked to look at the implications of the Task Force proposals, with a particular reference to the cost factor. The Minister of National Defence does not intend to make specific comments on the Task Force's report until he has received this review, at which time he will be pleased to provide the same material to the Senate as will be provided to the House of Commons and the public.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, May 8, consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's Speech at the opening of the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament, and the motion of Senator Rousseau, seconded by Senator Hays, for an Address in reply thereto.

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne: Honourable senators, first of all I would like to thank all honourable senators for their co-operation in allowing me to start my speech before ten o'clock.

I would also like to pay tribute to Senator Grosart for the distinguished way in which he discharged his functions although he did not remain Speaker of the Senate long enough to wear out his patience.

I also want to pay tribute to the Honourable Jean Marchand, our new Speaker, and reaffirm the friendship that has bound us for 40 years during which we often fought together for Quebecers.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

I congratulate very warmly our colleagues who recently assumed important ministerial responsibilities, as well as Senator Rousseau and Senator Hays for the quality of their speeches in initiating this debate.

For the Quebecer that I am, the most important part of the Speech from the Throne was undoubtedly the one dealing with the referendum. So that is what my speech will be about.

That referendum will be held in a week. Like many others, I deplore that the Parti Québécois did not have the courage of its convictions and did not ask a clear and honest question on independence. Only such a question would have enabled Quebecers to decide in all lucidity their collective future. Unfortunately, the Pequists did not want to trust the judgment of Quebecers whose qualities and virtues they praise. Not only did they not trust the people of Quebec but I think they systematically tried to mislead them.

The white paper, which was largely financed by Quebec taxpayers, is nothing more as a whole than a document of lying propaganda. In the criticism I made of it I noted at least 30 serious mistakes dealing with the past and the present of this country. I will point out only two of them very rapidly to illustrate what I mean.

First, a very important omission—there is no mention anywhere in the white paper of the equalization payments the federal government pays every year and unconditionally to the Government of Quebec. Yet those payments since 1957 total over $12 billion. Thus the PQ government decided to hide from Quebecers that substantial and original benefit of Canadian federalism.

My second illustration is found in the white paper. It says, and I quote:

> Thus in the case of taxation the new arrangements meant only a partial return to the 1930 situation.

What is the truth? Before the war, the Quebec government did not receive anything at all from personal income tax. Today, it gets over 60 per cent of that, mainly as the result of the gradual withdrawal of the federal government from the tax field, and thanks as well to the equalization payments and tax points transferred to Quebec under the opting-out formula. So, zero per cent in 1939, and 60 per cent now. This is what the white paper dares describe as "a partial return to the 1939 situation"! I still wonder why the Quebec government decided to feed these lies to Quebecers when it also asks them, and rightly so, to reflect seriously upon their collective destiny. I also wonder why the media have not systematically culled these untruths.

In view of such omissions and deceits, it is not surprising that some Quebecers are reluctant to renew their ties with federalism. But that is not all. The PQ government has played down and concealed its true objective in the referendum question in such a way that many Quebecers apparently are inclined to vote YES although they are opposed to sovereignty-association and are truly federalists. One could understand such a confusion on the part of ordinary citizens not having sources of information to help them see through the Quebec government propaganda.

However, this confusion is absolutely incomprehensible on the part of certain political scientists who have closely followed the referendum debate. I will restrict myself to one example.

Professor Léon Dion claims to be a federalist in the book he has just published but says he will vote YES in the referendum, thus giving the Government of Quebec a mandate to negotiate separation. He states:

> When I first started my soul-searching in light of the beige paper, I thought that if it were withdrawn and replaced by a document more in line with the report of the Task Force on Canadian Unity, I could be persuaded to vote NO: in fact, as a federalist I could not see why, in the ordinary course of events, I should endorse a non-federalist sovereignty-association project.

Since the beige paper of the Quebec Liberal Party has not been withdrawn Professor Dion will vote for separation. It is extremely unfortunate in my view that such intellectuals cannot see to what extent the PQ have downgraded what could be a historical meeting.

In the course of my statement, I intend to illustrate how the referendum question itself is basically a distortion of the PQ project which, when submitted to close analysis, as it is in the white paper, is bad for Quebecers, and in many ways, worse than the status quo.

● (2140)

First of all, there is something which is mentioned in the referendum question but which the PQ supporters fail to propose, at least for now, and that is pure and simple sovereignty. The preamble of the question reads, and I quote:

> This agreement would enable Quebec to acquire the exclusive power to make its laws, levy its taxes and establish relations abroad—in other words, sovereignty.

Let us see what would happen to these three elements of pure and simple sovereignty in light of the white paper. First, there is the exclusive power that Quebec would have to make its laws. According to the white paper:

> Sovereignty is inseparable from association.

Therefore, what the Péquistes are really proposing is a sovereignty impaired from the start, for it would be shackled by an association whose range would cover all such strategic sectors as economic policy, including currency, external and internal management of the common market and capital movements. The PQ project also provides for an association which might include other areas such as transport and cyclical policy.

Furthermore, there are propositions in the white paper for a common citizenship, with a common passport and the free movement of people, which covers the full field of demographic policy. This really means that in all these strategic sectors, contrary to the wording of the referendum question, Quebec would not have the exclusive power to make its laws. It could even be said that with the proposed association there is no sovereignty.

Secondly, there is the exclusive power Quebec will have to establish its relations abroad, something which is also mentioned in the referendum question. What does the white paper say about that? It says, and I quote:

> Quebec will continue to be bound by the treaties to which Canada is now a signatory.

There is also a proposal for harmonizing the defence sector. This really means that from the start the PQ project sacrifices its exclusive power to establish relations abroad.

● (2150)

Finally, there is the exclusive power that Quebec would have to collect taxes, which is also mentioned in the referendum question. But what would such fiscal sovereignty mean along with a monetary union? PQ supporters themselves reply to this question in their brochure entitled "How independence will come about":

> If we try too soon to share a common currency, this may hinder dangerously our fiscal and budgetary freedom in Quebec.

Yet, these same people now propose not only a common currency from the very beginning, but they even agree to Quebec being a minority partner within the monetary union. They admit themselves that Quebec would let another country dictate not only its monetary policy, but also its fiscal policy.

However, this is not the only important comment to be made concerning this so-called fiscal sovereignty. Something just as fundamental, in my opinion, must be emphasized. Indeed, such a sovereignty would be considerably lessened. PQ supporters are strangely silent on this point. They even call terrorists those who dare raise it. Yes, Quebecers have a right to know what would be the approximate cost of sovereignty-association, or in other words separation, especially, since René Lévesque suggests that his government will not cut the services and the amounts now provided by the federal government to Quebec, once the taxes paid to Ottawa by Quebecers have been recovered. He even says that these expenditures could be increased.

According to the best calculations that I could make in consultation with experts of Statistics Canada and the Department of Finance on the basis of the most recent figures, I estimate the cost of separation for Quebecers at about $3 billion a year at the present time, or $2,000 per family, and this after Quebec has fully recovered the taxes now paid to Ottawa. This estimation is based on the provincial economic accounts, which the Quebec government accepts as valid, but it also includes some necessary adjustments to allow for the net difference between federal expenditures and taxes in Quebec.

This huge financial gap of $2,000 per family a year, which would undoubtedly keep increasing, would mean much higher oil prices, higher taxes and a larger public debt since the Parti Québécois has undertaken not to cut existing services. Yet, as Marcel Bélanger, one of the ablest fiscal experts of Quebec, has shown, the tax burden of Quebecers is already 26 per cent heavier than that of Ontario residents. Why is the Parti Québécois government hiding these facts from the population? Why are the union leaders not telling these facts to the Quebec workers who will have to bear a very large share of the heavy burden of this lessened sovereignty?

In other words, the referendum question basically distorts the Parti Québécois plan. It refers to a full and complete sovereignty, but the white paper describes a sovereignty which is weakened, mutilated, lessened and impossible to dissociate from association. Actually, under the Parti Québécois plan, Quebecers would have to bear the substantial cost of separation without enjoying true sovereignty. But this is only the first fraud.

Second, the referendum question also refers to an association between equals, but no such equality is proposed in effect under the PQ plan. The white paper stresses equality but goes on to say:

> This does not mean, however, that in everyday practice everything will be subject to a double veto.

Then, it is one of two things: either the veto rule applies, and a deadlock is always threatening, as can be seen right now, within the Economic Community, or Quebec finds itself in everyday practice in a minority situation that would leave it without effective control.

The white paper adds, and I should like to stress that quote:

> ... in international trade and money matters, the search for parity should be no obstacle to the progress of the union.

Therefore, again under the PQ plan, in the strategic areas of trade and money, the equality principle would be sacrificed to "the progress of the union". The white paper specifies that the representation of the two partners within the monetary authority would be proportional, to quote once more, "to the relative size of each economy". Therefore, it is a control over the money supply, the interest rate structure, the value of the dollar abroad, and in the final analysis, public debt financing and the government deficit policies that would in this way escape Quebec. The same would apply to the external and internal management of the common markets. In that area also the white paper states that, "the search for parity should be no obstacle to the progress of the union".

Moreover, the white paper states generally:

> The fundamental legal equality of the partners does not rule out some flexibility in the manner in which the community will function.

But, my question is this: what use is legal equality if, in the name of "some flexibility", it is replaced in everyday practice by the rule of Canadian preponderance and Quebec's dependence?

Finally, it would be normal that the first chairman of the court of justice be an English-speaking Canadian. He would have a deciding vote within that court which would render final decisions on "the interpretation and implementation of the treaty of association". From the start, therefore, the court could escape Quebec's control.

In sum, the referendum question refers to association between equals, but the PQ plan as put forward in the white paper proposes no such equality in practice. Quite the opposite, the plan includes a union within which the Canadian voice would be preponderant, Quebec's voice being a minority one in the vital sectors of common life. Here again the referendum question fundamentally distorts the PQ plan as put forward in the white paper. This is a second fraud.

Thirdly, the referendum question does not refer to separation but the PQ project hints at it without formally stating it. That is undoubtedly the greatest deception behind the referendum question. In fact, with the sovereignty-association formula, there would be two different countries, with their respective national anthem and flag, the smaller one being Quebec which would remain dependent on the bigger one by the very fact that it would keep an exacting umbilical cord. So with their new project the Péquistes have ceased to be independentists. They no longer are true sovereignists either. They have abandoned in practice the principle of equality. They no longer talk of a one-year budget as in 1973 in order not to scare the electorate with the tremendous cost of separation. Yet, the Péquistes remain what they have always been, separatists, but they are careful enough not to say it to the Quebec people who are firmly opposed to separation as all polls indicate.

What must we infer from that? First that the Government of Quebec is calling on the most noble feelings of the people but also resorting to the least admissible propaganda tactics in order to deceive Quebecers and try to win the referendum. Then there is the fact that the true PQ project, when one studies it closely, is bad for Quebecers; if implemented Quebec would no longer be sovereign nor be an equal partner in this association but it would be a separate state and would therefore pay the price for it. Considered as a whole, and even before other compromises can be worked out during eventual negotiations, this PQ project is worse for Quebecers than the present so-called status quo. It retains most of the disadvantages of federalism while losing its advantages. Besides, how can the Government of Quebec which blames the anglophones for all past and present evils suffered by Quebecers entrust strategic sectors of our collective destiny to these very same anglophones whose preponderence would henceforth be sanctioned in a treaty? As for me, I remain deeply convinced that federalism with the interplay of alliances that can be built within politic parties, and between regions, constitutes a much better guarantee in those sectors of our collective future than the institutionalization of a minority dependence status promised by the association formula proposed by the Péquistes. In fact, it is probably the first time in history that a people is invited to shrink into itself and surrender in the name of national pride.

Nonetheless, a good many Quebecers who are opposed to sovereignty-association and to the separation it implies seem to be determined to vote YES in the referendum to trigger a constitutional reaction which would lead to a renewed federalism. Those federalists are dangerously wrong because by doing so they will give the Government of Quebec a mandate, not to negotiate just anything but to negotiate sovereignty-association, the separation of Quebec and the break-up of Canada. In this regard at least, the referendum question is clear even if it is a fraud.

Furthermore, Mr. René Lévesque and his colleagues have solemnly undertaken to make separation a reality and to break the federal link. Consequently, with a YES vote in the referendum, PQ members in accepting to negotiate a renewed federalism would not only fulfil their referendum mandate but they would also, and this is more serious, I think, disregard the ideology they have been preaching for 13 years. How could they accept to disavow themselves to the point that they would contribute to improve the structure they promised to destroy? Under those circumstances, Mr. René Lévesque would be a very poor negotiator for a renewed federalism, as the experience of the last few years has demonstrated, because he would not even believe in what he would agree to negotiate.

Then again, what would be the reaction of the other parts of Canada towards sovereignty-association? The answer is already well known: all premiers as well as the Prime Minister of Canada said very clearly and repeatedly that they would refuse, and it is strictly their right, to negotiate an association which would imply the separation of Quebec, the break-up of Canada and the destruction of the government and of the Parliament of Canada. Only a few days ago, the whole legislature in Ontario said unanimously NO to sovereignty-association.

By saying NO the leaders of the other provinces would not risk losing the advantages which are offered to their respective population under the present economic union. In that regard, René Lévesque locks his own yoke and limits his own negotiating power from the start when he states in the white paper, and I quote again:

Sovereignty is inseparable from association.

Therefore, as I have already said, there is no sovereignty without association. That is why the rest of Canada has nothing to lose by saying NO to the association proposed by the Péquistes, because that would be maintaining federalism.

That is also why, contrary to what some supporters of a renewed federalism think, a YES to the referendum would inevitably lead to a deadlock rather than new hope for the Constitution. René Lévesque could not, would not discuss anything other than sovereignty-association, while the rest of Canada would refuse to negotiate it. And so, Canada, including Quebec, would find itself once more with the constitutional status quo, which the vast majority of Canadians no longer want.

One must therefore conclude that sovereignty-association, as proposed by the Péquistes, is a bad plan for Quebecers, which can neither be negotiated nor achieved under present circumstances and which can only lead Canadians to a dead end. In other words, only a NO can lead to hope and new federalism, only a NO can be positive, because all political parties, federal as well as provincial, with the one exception of the Péquiste in Quebec, have agreed to interpret it as a YES to renewed federalism.

As for me, contrary to René Lévesque, I firmly believe in the future renewal of Canadian federalism. That conviction I base, first, on my personal experience during the 1950s and 1960s, at which time I participated directly in important changes, such as the equalization payments and the opting out formula, from which the provinces have greatly benefited. I also base it on our history since 1867. Canadian federalism has never, in fact, stood petrified in the status quo. On the contrary, it has undergone a continuing evolution, always renewing itself and thus showing a much greater flexibility than any other federal system in the world. This adaptability allowed it to adjust to the aspirations and needs of the Canadian people and of its main components, especially at the turning points in our history. For this reason, I am convinced our federalism will once again renew itself at this other turning point we have now reached.

As for us, honourable senators, we must seize this opportunity to proclaim our faith in a new federalism. However, as Canadian parliamentarians who have gained some experience of the human condition and who as such can place ourselves beyond partisan squabbles, we must do more. We must start as soon as possible to define in concrete terms what we mean by this new federalism. We must attempt to reach this definition not from the standpoint of elitist ideologies, of personal preferences, or of the craving for power demonstrated by governments, both federal and provincial, but rather from the standpoint of the needs and aspirations of the Canadian people in the face of the great challenges of the year 2000.

This undertaking which I propose could be carried out in two stages. The first, which would begin immediately, would be restricted to comparative and critical study of the reports and documents already published and could focus on a few basic points such as the most effective way of enabling the provinces to have a real and preliminary impact on federal policies that directly affect their constitutional jurisdiction. This first stage, of a preliminary nature, should be completed early this fall and could be entrusted with a sub-committee of the Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

The second stage, which should deal with the overall reform of federalism, should be entrusted with a special committee of the Senate. Pursued with dispatch, it could be completed in the spring of 1981. Such a schedule is realistic because it is unlikely that serious negotiations among governments could be undertaken before then, since there will be a provincial election in Quebec probably in the fall of this year, or in the summer of next year.

Finally, honourable senators, I want to remind all Canadians that in the past we have not had to fight to gain our independence and preserve the integrity of this vast and beautiful country, like so many other nations have. That may have been unfortunate because our national identity and cohesion have no doubt suffered. Today we have the unique opportunity to prove ourselves worthy of our country, to improve it so that it will be an even better haven for our freedom, our equality, our prosperity and the development of our cultures. This opportunity, we must not, we cannot miss it.

On motion of Senator Riel, debate adjourned.

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A) ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, presented on Thursday, May 8, on supplementary estimates (A) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1981.

Hon. Irvine A. Barrow, for Honourable Douglas D. Everett, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, moved that the report be adopted.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

BANNING OF GLASS CONTAINERS FOR CARBONATED DRINKS—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION—MOTION STANDS

On the Notice of Motion of Honourable Edgar Fournier:

That there be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, notes, minutes of meetings and other communications between the Minister and officials of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs during the year 1979, relating to the banning of certain glass containers of carbonated drinks

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the documents requested by Senator Fournier are confidential internal papers between the minister and his officials. I would therefore ask the honourable senator to withdraw his motion.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: As Senator Fournier is not present, I suggest that the motion stand.

Motion stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 14, 1980

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE SENATE

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, on April 24 when I accepted the assignment to co-ordinate committees I suggested I would report to the Senate. Because that assignment and the committee that I drew together are entirely unofficial and not covered by the rules, may I have leave to report now?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Lafond: On May 6 we held a meeting of committee chairmen, the whips and key staff members. We set no rules but agreed on some guidelines, which I would like to sketch out briefly. We reviewed the inadequacies of space available for Senate committee meetings, a situation also deplored recently in the Hales and the Yalden reports. We offered some suggestions, which may or may not be acted upon, but I do not think I should say what they were at this point because they were unofficial.

We agreed that in the present circumstances no more than two committees should hold public meetings simultaneously, and these would be in rooms 256-S and 356-S. The other rooms we have been using are entirely inadequate for public meetings with interpretation and press coverage. Until such time as there is relief, we do not believe that much more can be done.

We also reviewed the manning of committees from both the membership and the staff aspects, and agreed that at any time, under present circumstances, no more than three committees could sit simultaneously, and not more than one committee could sit while the Senate is sitting.

As to time periods for committee sittings, we agreed on the following:

(1) that every effort would continue to be made to avoid committee sittings on Wednesday mornings, although the period could be used if pressing situations arose;

(2) that the Senate, of course, retains its privilege of withholding or granting leave for one committee to sit while the Senate is sitting. However, when business is pressing, we feel that every effort should be made to adjourn the Senate at or around four o'clock on Wednesday afternoons so as to allow two additional committees to sit at that time or shortly thereafter for a period of two hours or more until 6.30 or 6.45;

(3) we see it as inevitable that committees will have to sit on both Tuesday mornings and Tuesday afternoons. Every effort will be made, however, not to make Tuesday morning the permanent assignment of one or two committees. Rather, we shall try to rotate this period in such a fashion that no one committee would be pressed to use that period more than one week out of every four.

Tuesday afternoon and Thursday morning would allow for two committees to hold public meetings, and for another committee to sit either in camera or in private session. This provides for exceptions in the case of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration and the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, which have less space and staff requirements.

Honourable senators, this is the situation as it is at the moment with the amount of committee work that we have now. It may not be the same thing in July or October, at which time I would hope to gather the group together again to improve or bend the guidelines to suit our requirements.

This, of course, leaves little space or time for special committees. At this time we feel that every effort should be made to do without special committees, and in that respect I shall have a specific motion to make a little bit later on this day in our order of business. If it became absolutely necessary for one or more special committees to be constituted, this should be done in the knowledge that such committees may very well be required to sit on Mondays and Fridays.

The usual priorities will have to be respected, and we shall try rigidly to do so, the first being legislation before the Senate, the next being legislation coming before the Senate, and then inquiries or investigations.

Special provision, of course, will have to be made from time to time when public delegations in Ottawa on other business have to meet a committee of the Senate.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, I should like to make a very short comment on the report Senator Lafond has presented. I don't propose to debate the report, but I feel that the proposed guidelines should work satisfactorily, particularly since we are in some kind of a bind at the present time so far as space for committee meetings is concerned. Hopefully, in the not too distant future there may be more space available. Until such time, guidelines, intelligently administered—and I would expect this from my good friend Senator Lafond—will see us through.

• (1410)

As chairman of one of the standing committees of the Senate, I look forward to being able to work within these guidelines, having regard to the work we have before us and that which comes to us from time to time. The speed with which we administer our responsibility more or less determines when the subject matter will be finally disposed of by Parliament. So I think intelligent direction is necessary. I think this unofficial committee has started in the right direction, and I can assure its chairman that he will receive every co-operation from the standing committee of which I am chairman.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government) tabled:

Report of the Department of Fisheries and the Environment for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1979, pursuant to section 7 of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans Act, Part I, and section 7 of the Department of the Environment Act, Part III, Chapter 13, Statutes of Canada, 1978-79.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Paul C. Lafond, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the membership of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs be increased to twenty-eight members and that rule 67(1)(g) be suspended in relation thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, I should like to give a brief explanation of this motion. For the past couple of years, the late Senator Hammy McDonald and I have been proposing that the Senate, with its knowledge and expertise of national defence, should look into questions on this subject. From conversations I have had with many senators, I feel that there is now sufficient interest in the Senate to study the matter. In keeping with the recommendation I made earlier regarding the Senate's trying to avoid appointing special committees, it has been suggested that this should be studied by the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which are normally assigned questions on national defence. The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs would then appoint a subcommittee to take up the subject.

• (1415)

As things stand now, there are a number of senators who have the expertise, knowledge and interest and who, additionally, have served in senior ranks in our armed services and who are not members of the Foreign Affairs Committee. By way of experiment, my motion is that for the balance of the present session the membership of the committee on Foreign Affairs be increased so as to provide an opportunity to those senators with the necessary expertise and interest to participate fully in the exploration of this question. The committee membership would be increased on an absolutely non-partisan basis. We have expertise in this area on both sides of the house.

[Senator Hayden.]

Senator Choquette: Might I ask what the proposed increase is to be?

Senator Lafond: The motion requests that it be increased to 28 members, but that is an arbitrary figure. I assume that the whips, in consultation, will decide, depending on the interest that is manifested, on the actual number by which the membership will be increased.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order to clear up any ambiguity that may exist. Unfortunately, I did not get an opportunity to discuss this with Senator Lafond.

The motion, as I heard it, requests that rule 67(1)(g) be suspended "in relation thereto," not making it clear what the antecedent of "thereto" is. It could easily be the committee itself. I assume it is only with respect to the number of members on the committee and that in fact it is the number of members that is the antecedent of "thereto."

Senator Lafond: You are quite correct.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MAKE STUDY

Hon. George van Roggen, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs be authorized to hear evidence on and to consider matters relating to national defence.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

PRICE OF DOMESTIC OIL—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. In view of the fact that Canadians are anxious to know what the new energy pricing agreement will be, would the minister care to report to this house on the talks held yesterday between the Honourable Marc Lalonde and the Minister of Energy for the Province of Alberta?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have not had a direct report from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on those talks. I am sure, however, that all honourable senators are encouraged by the tone of the comments made to the press at the conclusion of the meeting. If there is anything within the context of those talks that can be reported, I shall be very glad to do so. But I should caution my friend opposite as to the position his party took while the negotiations were going on during their term in office, that being a series of expressions of hope and all the rest of it, and that is all.

Senator Flynn: Hope springs eternal.

Senator Olson: Even when I was on the other side of the house I understood why the answers came in that tone, if I may put it that way. So I would not expect that we would come in with a lot of hard information as to what was put on the table until the end of the talks, at which time I am sure all honourable senators will get full and complete information.

Senator Perrault: Progress is being made.

Senator Asselin: The minister will no doubt recall that when he was on this side he was pressing the government as to what the energy pricing agreement would be, and I think we have a duty to do likewise.

• (1420)

I would like to know how close Mr. Lalonde came during yesterday's talks to getting Alberta to accept the lower price that your government promised to Canadians during the last campaign.

Senator Olson: All I can report at this time, honourable senators, is that it was my impression that progress was made.

Senator Asselin: I have a supplementary question. The current energy pricing agreement lapses on July 1. Is it your expectation, Mr. Minister, to have another agreement in place before the existing one expires?

Senator Olson: That is the hope and objective of the talks going on, but I believe that if the honourable senator has listened carefully to the media reports he will understand that there are some indications that both sides think it may take a little longer. But certainly the hope is that we may have a new satisfactory agreement, that is satisfactory to Alberta and to Canada, in place before the deadline.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: Since this is an extremely important question and the minister, of course, is always answering as skillfully as he has since the beginning of the session, without saying anything, he implied that progress would be made but I believe it is in the interest of Canadians to know where the discussions stand at this time. Could the minister assure the house that, at the very beginning of next week, he will have made a ministerial statement to inform us of all the discussions and the hopes his government has at this time of concluding that oil pricing agreement.

[English]

Senator Olson: I will give the honourable senator an undertaking that I shall report to this house as much as is appropriate to report from time to time during the course of the conversations.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: In view of the fact that Mr. Lalonde stated to the newspapers that there would not be any other meetings with the Alberta Minister of Energy before the beginning of June and considering also that the present agreement expires at the end of June, can the minister assure us that before June 1 he will be making a ministerial statement to indicate the position of the Government of Canada with respect to the negotiations and the steps the government intends to take if it cannot reach an agreement with the Government of Alberta? I am talking about the agreement that was discussed or foreseen during the last election campaign when they were saying to Canadians they would certainly have a much lower price for oil than the one the Conservative government had promised.

[English]

Senator Olson: Well, honourable senators, all I can do is reaffirm what I said based on the undertaking I gave in answer to the last question. If there are some important substantive matters that can be reported, matters related to the discussions going on, I shall try to bring them in by June 1.

Insofar as the latter part of the question is concerned, I might as well say now that I am not going to get caught in a position where we start trying to answer hypothetical questions. What my friend is asking is "What if this doesn't happen?" or, "What if that doesn't happen?". My experienced competent friend, the Leader of the Opposition, knows that cabinet really ought not to try to answer hypothetical questions.

• (1425)

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: You knew what you wanted during the last election campaign.

[English]

You knew what you were talking about, I hope.

Senator Olson: Yes, and I also remember that my honourable friends opposite, when they were on this side, made every effort to make sure that they did not say things they did not want to say.

Senator Flynn: We were coming to an agreement because we knew where we were going, but you don't.

Senator Perrault: You are living in the past.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that may be right, but there were words like "imminent," "soon," and so on, where, if you were to try to follow those discussions, you would really have to change the definition of those words.

Senator Flynn: We never needed that with you, because they never meant anything.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: I have a supplementary. I am sorry, but this is important. Could the minister give us his assurance that Canadians will not be disappointed to have voted for the Liberal Party and that the price set by this government will be lower than the one the Conservative government had obtained?

[English]

Senator Olson: I know of no time in Canadian history where Canadians were disappointed for very long that they had voted Liberal.

Senator Asselin: Touché!

Senator Flynn: Shame on you!

VISITORS IN THE GALLERY

SENIOR CHORUS OF LISTOWEL DISTRICT SECONDARY SCHOOL

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I hope you will forgive me for interrupting the Question Period for a moment, but I should like to bring to your attention the presence in the south gallery of the Senior Chorus of Listowel District Secondary School with their conductor Mr. Laurie Rowbotham.

We were treated to an absolutely magnificent concert at noon in the rotunda of the Centre Block of the Parliament Buildings. For you who were unfortunate enough to miss it, I do hope this group will come back to see us again.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

ENERGY

QUEBEC AND MARITIMES PIPELINE

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. Last night he gave us a lengthy, if rather uninformative, report on his discussions with the American government on the development of the Alaska Gas Pipeline. Would the minister make the same kind of statement, being a bit more informative, with regard to the reversible pipeline promised for the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I could give a brief report on that matter now, but if Senator Phillips wants more detail with respect to the present status of that promised pipeline, that would require my making some inquiries of the National Energy Board and others. I would be happy to come back as soon as possible, perhaps even at the next sitting of the house, with a more detailed and, therefore, perhaps more accurate report.

Senator Phillips: I notice the minister mentioned he would have to go to the National Energy Board. I know that he is responsible for the Alaska Gas Pipeline, but which minister is responsible for the development of the pipeline for the Atlantic provinces?

Senator Olson: My responsibility as minister for the northern gas pipeline is confined to that line. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is responsible within the cabinet for all of the other activities of the National Energy Board and I shall direct my inquiry to him.

[Senator Asselin.]

As the honourable senator knows, there is an application pending there and I am not quite sure just off the top of my head what stage that is at at the moment.

PRICE OF DOMESTIC OIL—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Lowell Murray: I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development which is supplementary to those already put to him by Senator Asselin. In view of the fact that the agreement expires at the end of June, can the minister explain why the negotiations between the federal government and Alberta will not resume until some unspecified date in June? It seems to indicate a rather relaxed and casual attitude to the deadline that is facing us.

● (1430)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I would not agree that it is a relaxed attitude. I would not wish to speculate about this, but it is just possible that one side or the other, or both sides, put some significant proposals on the table, if we want to call it that, and I expect that it might take some time for their officials to make an assessment of what they mean in the totality of what benefits, and so on, are involved. I would not regard taking a few days to make an assessment of the proposals from one side or the other to be a relaxed attitude. As I said, I am only speculating. I have already said to Senator Asselin that hopefully before the first of June, I shall report to this house everything that can appropriately be said without frustrating or jeopardizing the negotiations in any way. I would not come to the conclusion reached by Senator Murray that it is relaxed.

Senator Murray: I take it, then, that the minister is sufficiently confident with the progress of the negotiations that the government excludes any possibility of recourse to the Petroleum Administration Act?

Senator Olson: I don't think that the honourable senator can justifiably put that interpretation on it. So far as I am concerned, negotiations come first; and when we negotiate, we do so in good faith, on the assumption that the negotiations are going to proceed and succeed.

Senator Asselin: We shall see.

Hon. David Walker: Does the minister expect that the lion will lie down with the lamb or that the lamb will lie down with the lion?

Senator Olson: I am not sure that one can categorize the situation as being parallel with the lamb and lion analogy, so I shall not comment on that.

Senator Frith: If the lamb lies down with the lion, the lamb would not get much sleep.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

STATEMENT TO PRESS BY CANADIAN AMBASSADOR TO UNITED NATIONS

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, when the veterinarians are through, I have a highly sensitive question for the Leader of the Government. Everyone will agree that we are the two to deal with such sensitivities.

My question is one that I raise with some reluctance and after a good deal of careful consideration, entertaining as I do a long-standing appreciation for the quality and competence of our foreign service officers. My question is based on a Canadian Press report from the United Nations, dated May 7, referring to a press conference held by Ambassador Michel Dupuy, our new ambassador to the United Nations. In particular my reference is to one paragraph, and I quote:

> Questions about what happened to the foreign policy review heralded by the former Progressive Conservative government were put to rest when Dupuy said the "experiment had expired." The Liberals were back to the Liberal policies which Dupuy said were sound.

From the point of view of ratiocination and logic, that would imply that coming back would be from something that was unsound.

Believing that intrusion in domestic partisan politics is antithetical to the proper discharge of a diplomat's duty, I should like to ask if the government has been made aware of these comments by Ambassador Dupuy; if the government regards such utterances as inappropriate to his office; and if inquiries may be instigated as to the actual comments of His Excellency and the ramifications therefrom, at this highly sensitive era in international affairs when Canadian unity before the world is perhaps more valuable than ever before.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I know that Senator Macquarrie would be the last one to make a rash judgment on the basis of a fragmentary news report. I have not had the opportunity of studying the text of the statement attributed to the Ambassador to the United Nations. The question will be taken as notice and a reply will be forthcoming shortly.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

WAR PENSIONS, COMPENSATION AND ALLOWANCES

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government concerning Bill C-28, which was introduced during the last session when the previous government was in power. That bill would, by effect, have allowed a greater number of widows of disabled veterans to qualify for the widow's pension. Had that bill passed on April 1, approximately 1,300 widows and orphans would have been in receipt of that pension which ordinarily would not have been received.

I was astounded to learn that the bill has not been reintroduced by the present government, and perhaps the leader could explain why that is so. Such a bill would allow pensions to be paid to many widows of World War I veterans who ordinarily would not be able to receive it.

● (1435)

Senator Perrault: While I am not in possession of the precise details in respect of this matter, I would assure the honourable senator of the abiding concern of this government for widows and orphans in this country.

Senator Marshall: Many of these women are widows of First World War veterans. According to the disability list some 1,000 of these veterans are dying each year. That bill was not introduced last April, and between April and the present time many of those veterans have died with the result that their widows will be left in a bad situation. Rather than take the matter lightly, therefore, I would ask the Leader of the Government to get an answer as quickly as possible, and report to the Senate.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the question will be taken as notice and details provided; but certainly it is not the policy of the government to work any hardship on these unfortunate people.

THE CABINET

Hon. John Morrow Godfrey: Honourable senators, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Economic Development, and it concerns freedom of information and open government.

In this house, on April 22, in reply to certain questions by members of the opposition with regard to a request for the names of people on committees, the minister said:

> —the composition of cabinet committees and indeed the assignment of work within them was not considered public information.

The Leader of the Government in the Senate said:

> —I can only say that the information which he has requested is not available and has never been made available by any Government of Canada; nor will it be made available on this occasion.

There is a report in the Toronto Star of last week that I would like to quote from. It said:

> —the cabinet committee on economic development was in Victoria yesterday to build up some advance interest in Trudeau's visit and grab some useful publicity for the government.
> Trudeau even had his own press secretary, Patrick Gossage, accompany the eight-person travelling Liberal commercial show to make sure the ministers got enough publicity to be noted—

My question is: Is the minister prepared to share with this house the information which he was obviously prepared to share with the Government of British Columbia and the press of British Columbia, and tell us the names of the members of that committee and the name of the chairman?

Senator Asselin: Touché.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Yes, honourable senators. I can give the names of the eight federal cabinet ministers who were in Victoria. There were, I believe, 14 cabinet ministers from the British Columbia government as well. We were all in a cabinet room. It was a meeting concerning economic development. That is what we went for, and that is what we achieved.

I think I told you some time ago that I am the Chairman of the Committee on Economic Development. That is no secret. However, just to make sure that we understand this, the eight ministers that went are not all members of the Cabinet Committee on Economic Development. If a change of policy comes along I will be very happy to bring in any other names, but I think that Senator Godfrey and the authors of the questions that were asked the other day should realize that the full cabinet takes responsibility for all the decisions taken by the committee. There are some problems associated with it.

Senator Flynn: What else is new?

Senator Olson: There are some problems associated with it. The membership changes from time to time. We could have a debate over a number of other factors that are involved. It just seems to me that they ought be satisfied that the government—that is, each one of the ministers here and in the other place—will take full responsibility for whatever any committee does.

Senator Flynn: There is nothing new.

Senator Olson: There is nothing new.

Senator Roblin: I should like to express my sincere thanks to Senator Godfrey for re-introducing a matter which concerned me on a previous occasion. I dare say that we will eventually winkle out of the minister the names of the people he now declines to reveal. I would be interested in hearing from him his rationale for his coyness.

Had we but world enough, and time.

This coyness, lady, were no crime.

I should like him to justify to this house the attitude he took on a previous occasion because, to my mind, it seems absurd that, by bits and pieces, he will dribble out the information through the press and other media without taking this body into his confidence.

Senator Olson: Senator Roblin knows very well that there is one very hard, traditional and basic reason for all of this, and it has never been different for federal or provincial cabinets, and that basic reason is that the full cabinet takes responsibility for everything. That is cabinet solidarity. I have heard members of the party opposite make 20-minute speeches when they discover one little chink in that solidarity, or what appears to be a division in respect of a cabinet decision.

To give effect to that, it is obvious that you must have complete confidence that what is said and done in cabinet is done in camera so that when decisions are made the cabinet speaks with one voice in support of those decisions. Therefore, the position is that you do not discuss the membership of the committees and who may have been on opposing sides in a discussion. You do not even discuss the content of the agenda.

[Senator Asselin.]

Senator Perrault: That is right.

Senator Olson: My honourable friend knows that very well. What he is trying to do—and he may succeed—is to have further freedom of information. However, there is one area in which I think we must remain firm, and that is that the government speaks with one voice—cabinet solidarity. I should like the members opposite to consider the significance of trying to chip away at that. Perhaps we can learn to live with a different structure, but no government in the past has.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, there are two different questions at issue here. One is the issue concerning the names of the members of the committee, and the other concerns cabinet solidarity which is another matter altogether. I, for one, was making no suggestion that we should know what takes place within the cabinet circle, or that cabinet solidarity should be breached in any way. My request was for quite a different style of information. I remain completely unconvinced as to the reasons why that should not, rationally, be made available.

If I recall correctly, the honourable gentleman who sat in my friend's chair before gave us the names of the personnel on his economic committee, and I did not see cabinet solidarity come crashing to the ground. It seems to me that the information could well be made available. If it is possible to make part of it available in Vancouver, why is it not possible to make it available here?

Senator Olson: My honourable friend makes a lot of noise in his fury, but we are not so naive that we do not know what the next question is going to be. He has asked for the names of the members of the committees. The next question will be: How does that accommodate regional distribution? What my friend is doing is trying to get a foot in the door or the camel's nose in the tent. I understand that, but I would not like him to assume we are so naive that we are going to go down that road.

Senator Roblin: The minister's position is indeed unusual because he finds it quite possible to give the information openly in Vancouver where apparently it suits his purpose, but quite impossible to give the information here when it does not suit his purpose.

Senator Olson: That is an unfair comment.

Senator Roblin: It has the merit of being true.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the fact is that the members of the federal cabinet who went to British Columbia went there to discuss economic matters. However, the honourable senator does not know, unless he comes by his information in some clandestine way, the total membership of the Cabinet Committee on Economic Development. That information has not been given in Vancouver or anywhere else.

Senator Roblin: Part of it has, so why do we not have the whole?

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: I should like to direct a question, for purposes of clarification, to the Minister of State for Economic Development. In his opening answer he stated that the eight ministers who attended the meeting in British Columbia were not all members of the committee. That is a very vague and indefinite statement, and I should like some clarification of it. Does he mean that not all of those eight ministers were members of the committee; or does he mean that all eight were members of the committee but that there are others who were not present?

Senator Perrault: Yes.

Senator Donahoe: Since the minister was prepared to give us some information about the positions held by these persons, perhaps he would clarify it and tell us which interpretation we should place on his remarks.

Senator Olson: I think what the honourable senator is doing now is exactly what gives weight to the argument I just made. Now he wants to clear up one matter so he can go down this road until he finds out the names of the members of the committee. As soon as we get through with the Economic Development Committee, we will start on some other committees.

Senator Flynn: Why not?

Senator Olson: Because there are some problems related to what can or might be done by a clever opposition such as we have here.

Senator Flynn: Sure.

Senator Olson: We are not prepared to do that. The cabinet takes full responsibility for what all the cabinet committees do, and that is as far as I go.

Senator Asselin: Are you so afraid of us?

Senator Flynn: Would the minister say whether Senator Perrault is a member of that committee, or was he an adopted member when he was in Vancouver?

Senator Olson: He is a very valuable member of cabinet.

Senator Donahoe: My question was directed in the interests of having accuracy in the responses being made by the minister.

Senator Perrault: He is doing very well.

THE CONSTITUTION

AMENDMENT IN CANADA

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government. In the other place on May 9, Mr. Bill Yurko, the member for Edmonton East, rose under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and proposed a motion which received unanimous acceptance. That motion was to the following effect:

> That the Parliament of Canada submit an address to Her Majesty the Queen, that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a bill to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom to provide for the amendment in Canada of the Constitution of Canada.

I would ask the Leader of the Government whether the Leader of the Opposition has raised with him the possibility that the opposition party in this chamber will be presenting the same resolution here for discussion.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as yet, there appears to be no initiative in that direction.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I would have preferred to hear the Leader of the Government reply in some other way to that kind of question, because it supposes that every time I discuss something with him, any member on his side may question him about our private conversations. That is exactly what this question amounts to. I think it is totally unacceptable to have that kind of question put to the Leader of the Government, and I think he should give the honourable senator a reply which is appropriate under the circumstances.

Senator Perrault: May I clarify that by saying that there have been no initiatives from any member of the opposition in that direction. I should add that I do not reveal the contents of any conversations I have with the distinguished Leader of the Opposition.

• (1450)

Senator Austin: I should like to add that I have had no discussion with Senator Perrault at any time about any business discussed between the Leader of the Opposition and Senator Perrault as Leader of the Government.

Senator Flynn: You should have before putting the question today.

Senator Austin: But you have just said, Senator Flynn, that that would be in derogation of the sense of confidence in which you two speak. How else can I get such information except to address the question to the Leader of the Government, as you are not in a position in this chamber to answer such questions?

Senator Perrault: It should be noted, however, that both leaders of the principal political parties in Canada have stated that there should be widespread consultation with the provinces before that initiative is carried beyond its present point. I would think that there is general agreement on that approach.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: I have a supplementary question to that asked by Senator Austin. Could the Leader of the Government tell this chamber why Senator Austin feels that initiative must come from this side? Does Senator Austin feel that the government members are incapable of producing their own initiative?

Senator Perrault: There is no implication of that kind. We have the utmost respect for the traditions of this chamber, and we look forward to the honourable senator's continuing initiatives in his usual vigorous fashion.

GRAIN

TWO-PRICE WHEAT

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. We have had the chaff; now we will get some of the wheat.

Senator Asselin: It's about time.

Senator Buckwold: Members of the Senate are aware of the two-price system for grain, by which there is a different price for domestic wheat as against export wheat. A matter of some concern is the burden that is being borne by Canadian wheat producers now because of a change in circumstances from when this plan was originally introduced, when it was very helpful to western farmers. I have in front of me a document from the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool dated May 9, in which they say that the Canadian farmer has recently been subsidizing the Canadian consumer to the tune of almost $1 a bushel for domestic wheat under the two-price system. My question to the minister is this: Are steps being taken to alleviate this situation, and would he have some comment on the subject as a whole?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): As Senator Buckwold has said, when the two-price system was first brought in many years ago the idea of the system at that time basically was to give western wheat producers a reasonable and fair price for wheat sold for domestic consumption in Canada, because at that time international prices for wheat were particularly low. Since that time events have changed. The price for domestic wheat has been fixed for some time at a ceiling of $5 a bushel; export prices have for a number of months been very considerably above $5 a bushel.

It is true that in many months during recent times the subsidy was, in fact, being borne by the western producers. It has been calculated that in many weeks in the past year western producers were contributing about $1 million per week to the consumers of this country by carrying this subsidy themselves. I think everybody will agree that this situation should not be allowed to continue, that the western producers should not be singled out as the people who bear any particular subsidy to the consumer.

Senator Flynn: With oil prices is it the same?

Senator Argue: In recent days the export price has been going down, so that, while at one time the producer may have borne a subsidy in excess of $1 a bushel, yesterday's export price of some $202.86 per ton means a subsidy by the producers, as of that day, of some 52 cents a bushel.

The intention of the government, I believe, is to remove this burden from western producers, so that soon they will no longer be required to bear that burden. The present two-price system, if we pass Bill S-6 in all its technicalities, will end on June 30. Exactly what will be put in its place is under discussion, and as soon as I am able to make an announcement as to the policy that will take its place I shall be glad to do so. In the meantime, I can assure Senator Buckwold and members of the Senate that a very definite move will be made to remove this subsidy burden from western producers.

[Senator Perrault.]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question, honourable senators. I take it that the remedial legislation the minister is talking about is Bill S-6 in the Senate. Is that the one we are talking about that abolishes this two-price system for wheat?

Senator Argue: Not really. Bill S-6, as I understand it, is a very technical bill. I believe that back in December 1978 the government of the day discontinued the payment of the subsidy from the federal treasury for the two-price wheat system. However, while they removed the subsidy, the law still required that the subsidy be paid. As I understand it, the passage of Bill S-6 will simply remove the legal obligation of the government to make that subsidy payment. In the meantime, for many months the former Liberal administration and the former Conservative administration were not paying the subsidy. My information is, as I am sure the record will show, that this bill is in precisely the same terms as a bill that was introduced by the Conservative administration. After this bill is passed it will be necessary to put in place a new policy which is not provided for by Bill S-6; it will have to be provided in some other way.

Senator Roblin: I have been wondering why Bill S-6 was not being proceeded with. I agree with the minister's statement as to its origin, but I am wondering why it is not being proceeded with, and why it is necessary to wait for the new policy before this bill is dealt with.

Senator Argue: It is not necessary to wait for the new policy. I was hoping that I would be able to accomplish a new policy at a time necessary to move second reading of Bill S-6. I am not certain that I have been that successful in terms of time. My intention is to move second reading of Bill S-6 tomorrow.

Senator Roblin: Tomorrow?

Senator Argue: Tomorrow.

AIRLINES

APPLICATION OF EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS TO EXTEND SERVICES

Hon. Jack Marshall: I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In view of the fact that reports indicate that CP Air will be inaugurating flights between Halifax and Toronto in July, leaving the impression that the appeal by EPA has been denied or turned down, could the Leader of the Government tell us what action his government is taking? I know he cannot give me the information now, but perhaps he could try to provide the information tomorrow, because of the imminence of this matter and its importance to the economy of the region.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that question will be taken as notice.

Whether or not an official appeal has yet been received will be determined.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

FEDERAL AID FOR CONSTRUCTION OF TRADE AND CONVENTION CENTRES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I have a question I should like to address to the Leader of the Government having to do with federal funding for trade centres and convention centres. I notice that the government has decided to make a grant of $17 million for a trade centre in Vancouver. What policy does the government intend to follow with respect to requests for federal assistance for convention centres in several other parts of the country? I think that Ottawa, Toronto, Montreal, Victoria, Edmonton and Halifax are among the applicants.

• (1500)

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, of course there is widespread interest in the possibility of establishing trade and convention facilities in a number of cities across the country. I would remind honourable senators that the Vancouver Trade and Convention Centre was officially announced—indeed, there was a signing ceremony—in May of 1979. That ceremony was presided over by the Honourable Jack Horner, well known to parliamentarians on both sides of the chamber.

Senator Flynn: That brings back memories.

Senator Perrault: Mr. Horner gave that commitment in the name of the Government of Canada. In that sense, the Vancouver Trade and Convention Centre pre-dated many other applications from across the country. Indeed, I think it predated all of them. That is one of the reasons the commitment was kept.

The matter is now under active study by the government, but no announcement is yet available for presentation to the chamber.

Senator Roblin: I thank my honourable friend for stating that the matter is still under consideration. In that case, I should like to remind him that the application from the City of Ottawa was also made on a previous occasion to the present administration in another guise, and at that time it was assured by the government that some assistance would be forthcoming. I would appreciate it if my honourable friend would investigate that statement and, if it is correct, to let us know what the intention now is with respect to the City of Ottawa.

While I am on my feet, may I suggest that, if a policy with respect to convention centres is being considered by which federal funds will be made available to various cities across the country, the City of Winnipeg not be overlooked. It is perfectly true that that city built and paid for its centre with provincial and municipal funds, but in terms of any consideration of equity I think the City of Winnipeg should be included on the list being considered in this respect, and I would ask my honourable friend that that be done.

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator is, of course, aware that the federal government extended aid to establishing the Calgary Convention Centre. So, there has been federal money invested in certain centres across the country from time to time.

The Vancouver Trade and Convention Centre, in line with the government's policy to attempt to trigger productive private investment, will result in over $250 million in private investment. The trade centre itself will be the heart of a new complex, designed ultimately to increase Canadian trade with Pacific rim countries. Private sector benefits and the number of jobs created make the project a very attractive one. That is not to say that there are not other areas in Canada equally deserving, or where a similar centre might trigger the same kind of private sector activity.

As far as the City of Ottawa is concerned, I am not totally cognizant of the details of that application, and I think it rather risky for me to comment on that matter.

Senator Roblin: I can assure my honourable friend that almost all of these cities can provide very convincing economic justification for the investment which they have made, or which they propose to make. I am interested to have the precedent in Calgary as well as in Vancouver.

I urge my honourable friend not to hold it against the City of Winnipeg because they elected two Liberal members to the present Government of Canada when he considers this.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I wish to point out that the Liberal Party of Canada, in recognition of the incredible convention centre merits of Winnipeg, is scheduling its national convention in the Winnipeg Convention Centre. That is the same centre which was financed with the funds which he has just described in such glowing terms. This is the first step in a western resurgence of the party, and it will have its beginnings at the Winnipeg Convention Centre.

Senator Roblin: I just warn my honourable friend not to count on that.

Senator Perrault: The convention centre?

Senator Roblin: The Liberal Party resurgence.

INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE TO CHRYSLER CORPORATION

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. While reading yesterday's Hansard, I noticed that the United States guaranteed $1.4 billion to the Chrysler Corporation, and that Canada guaranteed $200 million. Canada has approximately 10 per cent of the work force, which, on a ratio basis, would require our contribution or guarantee to be $160 million. Can he tell us why we are required to make a higher contribution?

The second part of my question deals with the announcement made this morning by the Chrysler Corporation regarding rebates of $200 to $1,000 per car for American purchasers. These rebates do not apply in Canada. Can he tell us why, after being required to make a higher ratio contribution, Canadians do not get the same benefits as Americans?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the one factor that the honourable senator has brought up is not the only one that went into the consideration or calculation of the proportionality. There are other things, such as the proportionality of production, shares of the market, and so forth, that were calculated by the Minister for Industry, Trade and Commerce. I shall ask him to give us a more precise reply.

With respect to the second part of the question—whether Chrysler Corporation, or indeed any other company, chooses to use various selling mechanisms—of course, rebates are only one of the mechanisms they use from time to time in different parts of the country. I do not really think I should comment on that. I am sure that is not a decision that is made with respect to what has been involved in the loan guarantees. That is a decision that Chrysler made to try to maximize the sales of and returns on its cars.

Senator Phillips: Was the possibility of a rebate discussed during the loan negotiations? Could the honourable minister find that out for me, please.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Yes, I can try to find that out. I would doubt that many of the mechanisms, such as rebates, level of advertising, method of advertising, and so forth, were discussed in great detail. That is all part of the selling structure.

Honourable senators, I should like to reply to a question asked by Senator Phillips yesterday concerning the verification of figures supplied by Chrysler Canada during the discussion of government aid to the corporation.

As I indicated in a preliminary answer to the honourable senator, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce conducted a rigorous evaluation of the material within the department, and also engaged the services of consultants to examine various aspects of the Chrysler information. Additionally, a considerable amount of evaluative information was provided by United States Treasury officials, who conducted a thorough evaluation of the United States company's economic position, and who also engaged the services of outside consultants in conducting the evaluation. In brief, I can assure honourable senators that a very careful study was made of the information provided by Chrysler Canada.

ASSISTANCE TO SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I should like to reply to a question asked by Senator Muir during Question Period on May 13 concerning the basis on which the government decided to offer $50 million of assistance to the Sydney Steel Corporation. First of all, however, I should like to reiterate that the government's position is that we are fully prepared to discuss with the province and the corporation suitable joint arrangements that would place Sysco in a viable economic position, and we are now awaiting proposals of that nature.

Discussions on aid to Sysco have extended over a considerable period of time. Since 1977 the Government of Canada, through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, and the Government of Nova Scotia, have provided joint funding in the amount of $27 million for projects relating to capital work and equipment at Sysco, as well as for business planning studies. During this phase, federal assistance of $50 million was offered in order that Sydney Steel could complete a 10-year contract for supply of steel billets to Tree Island Steel in British Columbia. Unfortunately, the company did not complete the contract, and it is now necessary to examine other alternatives for the long-term future viability of the company. This is the nature of the information that we are hoping to receive in the near future.

ASSISTANCE TO CHRYSLER CORPORATION

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Finally, honourable senators, I should like to reply to a question asked by Senator Doody during the Question Period yesterday regarding our commitment to Chrysler Canada Limited.

• (1510)

A crucial point to keep in mind in this question is that the $200 million in the loan guarantees we are providing cannot be drawn down until fiscal year 1982-83 at the earliest and thus the federal government is not at risk during the early stages of Chrysler's recovery, when in fact the most difficult challenges face the company. One of the crucial stages for recovery of the company will be in the coming year, when market reaction to introduction of the new line of front-wheel drive cars will be evaluated. Once this stage has been passed successfully by the company, the risk to Canada is greatly decreased.

On the other hand, the loan guarantees provided by the United States government, in the amount of up to $1.5 billion, are available to Chrysler immediately, and therefore the risk to our United States counterparts is considerably greater. By contrast, we have tied our assistance to Chrysler Canada to the timing of substantial additional investment in this country. In brief, then, should the company fail during the period leading up to fiscal year 1982-83, we have no financial obligation of any sort.

Those are questions that were asked only yesterday, and I expect the Leader of the Opposition would want to move a round of applause for our coming back so quickly with the answers, and indeed I think it almost completes answering all the outstanding questions that I have taken as notice.

JUSTICE

OIL CORPORATIONS—INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED PRICE FIXING

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on April 16 the Honourable Senator

Flynn asked for a progress report on the investigation into alleged price fixing by the oil corporations. As the honourable senator knows, the investigation is under way. The Director of Investigation and Research is awaiting the reports of the lawyers assigned to review the evidence. I am sure honourable senators agree that it would be wise to let the director complete his work as it will be his decision that will guide the disposition of the inquiry.

I am sure honourable senators would agree as well that it would be inappropriate to comment in the meantime.

INCOME TAX

UNINCORPORATED BUSINESSES—DEDUCTION OF SALARIES PAID TO SPOUSES

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Bielish on April 15. The senator asked if the government intended to permit the deduction of salaries paid to spouses on farms and in other unincorporated businesses as business expenses.

As honourable senators are aware, the Minister of Finance announced the introduction of this measure in his economic statement on April 21 last, which is heartening news for all.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. Royce Frith, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

> That the name of the Honourable Senator Marchand be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Benidickson on the list of senators serving on the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate resumed from yesterday, consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's Speech at the opening of the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament, and the motion of Senator Rousseau, seconded by Senator Hays, for an Address in reply thereto.

Hon. Maurice Riel: Honourable senators, to be true to the tradition of our chamber, and to follow my own personal feelings, I wish first of all to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on your appointment as Speaker of the Senate. Considering that you have been a fiery fighter all your life, you will probably need to force upon yourself a more philosophical and moderate disposition of character to assume the role of patient listener of the daily speeches of senators without ever taking any part in their discussions. By remaining above our debates, you will dominate them as you have dominated all situations all your life because of your intellectual stamina which gives those rare few who possess it a sense of proportion.

I also congratulate Senator Yvette Rousseau—and I stress the name "Yvette"—the mover of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, and her seconder, Senator Hays. Both of them dealt eloquently with the most critical aspects of the present Canadian situation; Senator Rousseau, when she dealt with Canadian unity and Quebec, and Senator Hays, when he dealt with energy and the west. I hope that their speeches will be distributed throughout the country because they contain much to reflect upon while giving us hope for the future, for we must not look to the future without hope.

For us Canadians, and especially for those of us from Quebec, the future at this time does not seem very clear. Why? Probably because the future must be built day in and day out and because at some time in the past all of us here and Canadians everywhere have failed to contribute towards building the future of our country. It is indeed frustrating to have come to a point where we must recognize that, in my own province, a large part of the population has decided that there can be no common future for Quebec and the other provinces within a united Canada. After 100 years, we Canadians have not succeeded, in my opinion, in creating a Canadian dream in which all Canadians may share, and we have not developed in our country a national consciousness and a shared sense of a common nationhood.

We French Canadians have grown up in the nostalgia of our Catholic and French mission in North America, and those other Canadians, who were called in my time the "Superior Race," the "Canada Firsters," certainly did not have any time to lose to include us in the "manifest destiny" that they foresaw for our country and for themselves and with which we obviously did not have much to do. Moreover, it must be said that for a long time we wanted no part of it. We have survived without them, and they have developed without us.

This created the "two solitudes," which became the title to a well-known novel. Consciously or not, an economic apartheid was practised against French Canadians. As for us, our education and frame of mind prevented us from entering the field of business which forms the basis of any civilization and any culture. Indeed, it is a historic fact that only the rich nations, at the time of their wealth, have produced the culture which ranked them among the builders in civilization. I can for an illustration think of Renaissance Italy, Spain, the Netherlands, France during its great century, England at the time of Elizabeth or during the 18th century.

In this period of doubts and jolts that plague aging civilizations, new forces begin to ferment and shake social or ethnic groups which had been until then withdrawn within themselves. In Quebec, these factors include, but are not limited to, the following:

(1) the wave of post-war immigrants who chose the English language, thus imperilling the already shaky balance of power between the two nations in Montreal;

(2) the push of the Quiet Revolution for the vertical integration from the bottom to the top of French Canadians within major corporations, and the establishment by the Quebec government of public organizations to develop our natural resources under French Canadian executives and managerial staffs;

(3) the decline in the sixties of the Catholic Church as the prime mover of our day-to-day life and education;

(4) the emergence of labour unions as an organized force and pressure group;

(5) the abrupt decrease of the birth rate among French Canadians;

(6) the development of means, old and new, of communication and the taking over of their effective control by a progressively separatist-minded intelligentsia;

(7) the consequent drift towards leftist political activism of many labour leaders.

Then came the foundation of a separatist party known as the P.Q., or péquiste party, headed by mass communication specialists. This was followed in turn by the formation in November 1976 of a government in Quebec by that party, such government self-described as a social democrat government with the publicly declared goal of obtaining the separation of Quebec from the rest of Canada. This series of events is now reaching its peak with the referendum to be held in Quebec on May 20.

Nothing is completely true and nothing is completely false in life and especially in politics. Nothing is completely good and nothing completely bad. There is even an expression to the effect that today's heresy is tomorrow's truth. Provided, of course, that we do not kill the patient.

Despite the errors, the ostracisms and all the adverse conditions which in the past have overwhelmed the small francophone community in North America, we cannot but acknowledge the fact that we have survived, that our language has survived and that it is our political system which has made this possible, that the autonomy enjoyed by the provinces has been beneficial to Quebec, that our fathers and predecessors, fine Normans that they were, used it sensibly and cleverly to preserve our language, our rights and our traditions. Also, we cannot but acknowledge that it is as a result of our own and sole efforts that we have survived after having been abandoned on the shores of the St. Lawrence in the wake of a war between two European powers.

But, upon reflection, which one of us wants to go to another country? Where have the people who left Quebec gone to in the past ten years or even in the past hundred years? To Cuba, Haiti, Martinique, China, Poland, Russia or even France? All our Quebec emigrants, 100 per cent of them I should think, have invariably gone to the United States and will continue to do so. An emigrant, you see, is looking for a country where he will possibly improve his lot, and nowhere else in the world is the average standard of living as good as in Canada and in Quebec. The only other place in the world where the standard of living is just as good as ours and which is likely to tempt us at times is the United States.

That is why I say to you all, my fellow citizens of Quebec, that the future of Quebec lies nowhere else but in North America and it is a part of Canada's future: Canadian solidarity is to Quebec the guarantee of its economic and political stability. The oil crisis of the past few years gives testimony to this every day!

Quebecers, let us not drift away from those that are close to us, from what has been our best chance of success, from what is known best to us, only to jump into the unknown. There is a proverb that says:

The devil you know is better than the devil you don't.

We were saved by our forefathers' judgment and perception, but also by their prudence. We have a sacred heritage to transmit to our descendants, so let us not forget that we are but a link between two generations. We have a duty to leave our children a larger and better rather than a diminished inheritance. We are the heirs of everything that is best in western civilization. We received from the Roman Catholic Church the religious teachings that still support us, even though we forget it too often, and at the same time the Church gave us the tradition of Greek classicism and the Latin genius. France gave us a lively and gay spirit, a gracious language to which we have kept the accent of the 16th and 17th centuries and the idiom of the old provinces of France, but nonetheless the language of Bossuet and Molière, the civilization of the Grand Siècle and the Code civil. We are also the beneficiaries of the English political and administrative system, imposed upon England by our Norman ancestors after 1066, but of course refined by the English over the centuries, and which finally evolved into our parliamentary system.

Finally, we have grown on the shores of the St. Lawrence, where we conquered the forest, tilled the land, shaped the environment while being shaped by it, and so becoming an integral part of the North-American continent that witnessed the most fabulous industrial revolution and economic success in the world.

That is where we came from. This is what we belong to. These are our traditions. This is our heritage.

On these foundations we have built in the past and must build in the future. These are solid materials that were proven through centuries of both effort and toil, joy and the fulfillment of duty well done. This is all we have, but if we use them fully and wisely, taking full advantage of our brain power, we shall have a full share in the design, the building and the achievement of the great "Canadian Destiny" in North America: we shall build for ourselves in continuity.

This is why we must never abandon any part of our heritage. Let us keep what our forefathers gave us, what we ourselves have acquired on our own, and let us in turn do our bit. Each generation of French Canadians and Canadians must go forward. Our duty is to build, not to destroy. The work of centuries of patience can be wiped out in a single day of folly.

Canada is a country in course of construction. We must not give up and leave the site at a time when we take an active part in the management of the work. To abandon any part of our heritage would be an irreparable loss. Language, tradition, rights are a monument that will resist the worst storms. What has been so solidly established over three centuries is not exchangeable, it is not negotiable, and indeed we are not sellers. We distrust trumpery, by nature we go always for something solid.

I will not relinquish my language. I will not relinquish my North American position. I will not relinquish my administrative system or any of my foundations, because in there lie my country's identity, my environment and my way of life. And what is it that would replace those serious and proven features I know so well and that have served us so well until now?

Are we, Quebecers, going to cut ourselves off from the mainstream of North America, give up its spirit and its way of life, which we have shared up to now? Because separation from Canada is separation from North America. In order to go where, to join what? Only to go adrift in the Atlantic, try to join Cuba, the West Indies and what not? Castro, Mao, Lenin, Karl Marx—our tradition is not there. Our economic, industrial, labour traditions are North American. Social democracy as referred to in Quebec and proposed by Mr. Lévesque and associates? Our tradition is not there. Why look for a foreign model, when the North American one has been good to us? It is our best model, and it is unsurpassed in the world.

Canada not only links the Canadian provinces together, it also links Quebec to North America. Our Canadian solidarity, as embodied in our Confederation with its headquarters in Ottawa, integrates us into the strongest economic system in the world, while leaving us with the widest administrative, cultural and economic autonomy. I find it strange that the leaders of so-called international unions—that is, American unions headquartered in the United States—should endorse Quebec separation from the rest of Canada, and therefore from North America, because on the one hand, by joining the international unions they seek the American trade unionist and economic umbrella and, on the other hand, by supporting the YES they are trying to take us out of the North American mainstream.

Here I am, honourable senators, participating in the Quebec referendum debate, which I pray God not to let degenerate into those fratricidal struggles that Honoré Mercier was already urging Canadians to stop 100 years ago, In Honoré Mercier's sentence, the word "Canadians" meant "Quebecers", because, at that time we in Quebec were just calling ourselves Canadians. We considered ourselves as the only real Canadians and we reserved that name for ourselves. Later, I think it must have been with the teachings of Father Groulx, we called ourselves French Canadians. Now, according to the vocabulary of the day, we call ourselves Québécois. I say this only to shed light on an historical semantic question, and in passing.

Coming back to our fratricidal struggles, about which the old radio and TV serial "Séraphin" talked so much, I hope that all participants in the referendum debate will manage to keep their sense of proportion and that the media will not add to the dispute so that our present non-shooting war of secession—to pastiche an expression of Alain Peyrefitte in the "Mal français"—will not degenerate into worse, deeper and endless conflicts. Conflicts and division do not spell progress or success.

I, for one, want to express my choice and give the reasons for it. I think that I am only doing my duty as a citizen and a parliamentarian by trying to bring an unbiased opinion based on clear and positive considerations in the midst of the present confusion. During a recent trip in the south of France, in a small old village of Provence, I noted a Latin sentence above the window of a tumbledown house: Post tenebras, lux—which means "After darkness, light"—with the date 1571. I have been told that those words were written there during the wars of religion, that it is a message of hope. I wish each one of us in Quebec had that attitude, and that after this time of turmoil we would return to a climate of fraternity among "gens du pays". I wish to quote Péguy, a poet dear to our Speaker:

La foi que j'aime le mieux, dit Dieu, c'est l'espérance.

Let us follow Montaigne's philosophy: let us keep our sense of proportion. So let us consider with a cool head the separation mandate sought by the present Quebec government, elected by a minority of 41 per cent of the popular vote, which was as everyone knows, a vote of protest against a government rather than an ideological vote. We must remember those two facts. Am I ready to give a blank cheque to a group whose only admitted goal is to cut Quebec off from the rest of Canada? But who will benefit from this separation, I wonder?

What good would separation do for education in Quebec? What good would separation do for farmers, workers, teachers, firefighters, civil servants and labour leaders in Quebec? What good would separation do for businessmen, industrialists, the unemployed in Quebec? What good would separation do for engineers, doctors and other professionals or trades?

I am not convinced that separation would bring anything more to any one group of Quebecers. Quite the contrary, I think everyone's standard of living would be lowered. When you do not progress, you regress.

If the Parti Québécois really has devised sure ways of improving the lot of Quebecers, to bring them a so far unknown happiness, a standard of living they have not yet reached, and can assure them that by voting YES they will come out ahead, why did they not put that clearly in a charter like the French language charter? Is it not because they cannot do it? Surely that is the reason. They know that with separation, Quebecers will find themselves in a position to exchange at best four quarters for a dollar, not more and more probably less. It is impossible for the Parti Québécois to guarantee Quebecers a higher or even as high a standard of living after it separates than before. So one must conclude that the referendum is a pointless, divisive and costly exercise, the ultimate manifestation of a dream and a temptation.

Our traditional position has always been that previous governments of Quebec have always steadfastly and constantly maintained its autonomy and reacted most energetically against any proposition or situation they considered an attempt upon our traditions, language and rights.

That autonomist position has been adhered to since 1867 up until the P.Q. took over. The P.Q. government elected the position of total refusal and of the point of no-return. Such a position is not only contrary to our tradition up until and including the Quiet Revolution, as evidenced by the fact that two former premiers of Quebec, Messrs. Lesage and Bourassa, have joined the NO side, this position is also contrary to any common sense. In politics, as in business, people do not start off by placing themselves in a position of no-return; they keep room to manoeuver. In short, what the P.Q. is doing is turning its doctrine into a dogma—it is setting itself up as a church and proclaiming, ex cathedra, "Without me there is no hope of salvation." They are the only ones to have the whole truth, like the Ayatollah. There is absolutely no room in their minds for the smallest possible margin of error, or even manoeuver. Yet they did not for a single moment wonder whether they could be wrong, as an English statesman suggested to his opponents:

> I beseech you in the bowels of Christ, think it possible you may be mistaken.

As past experience teaches us, dogmatism breeds fanaticism. You know as well as I do the saying attributed to André Gide:

> Souvent la foi nuit à la bonne foi.

Autonomy, YES; separation, NO—such has always been the traditional doctrine of Quebec. That is our tradition. But the present P.Q. government wants us to break with tradition.

Autonomy as a doctrine has never been restricted to any one party in Quebec. It has been defended and promoted continuously by all political parties of the province. It has also been maintained in the other provinces of Canada.

The P.Q. government has not drawn up a charter for the economic future of Quebec. The P.Q. government, which would give us a new political system, has not put out a charter on that political system. The P.Q. government, which has been in power for three years and a half, which has spent half its time promoting separation in Quebec, and elsewhere in the world, the P.Q. government, which professes to save Quebecers, is not even aware that the number one problem in Quebec is the dreadful drop in the birth rate of Quebecers.

The greatest resource of a people is its population.

Now, we have survived as a people thanks to one simple recipe: we had large families. It may be pointless to say that from 60,000 that we were when France ceded Canada to England, through the Treaty of Paris in 1763, we have grown into almost 6 million, excluding the two to three million, at the very least, in the United States and the other Canadian provinces. Our population multiplied tenfold in every century. There were 60,000 of us in 1760, 600,000 in 1860 and 6 million in 1967. Imagine: if the population of France had multiplied at that rate, in 1960 General de Gaulle would have been the leader of two billion Frenchmen!

Suddenly, we are now faced with the brutal reality: in the last 25 years, our birth rate gradually fell from the highest rank among the provinces in Canada to the lowest. Not only is our population not growing, not only is it not stationary, but it is receding.

The public enemy in Quebec is the low birth rate. The P.Q. Government should have addressed itself to that problem since it took over, instead of spending its time peddling around its own dreams. The economy of a country is above all its population, quantitatively and qualitatively. If we were 20 million French Canadians in Quebec, we would have a large domestic market, our sheer volume would affect to a greater extent the affairs of Canada and North America.

There is talk about increasing our population with an influx of francophone or potential francophone immigrants. But if we have to set up a mass immigration scheme to replace the children we are not bearing or that we will not have borne to follow in our footsteps, one may easily realize the large number of incoming foreigners that this will represent, with the implied problems of integration. Either we integrate them to be our successors by limiting their number to a percentage that we can integrate or assimilate, or we allow them to come in very large numbers and then run the risk of being assimilated by these newcomers who may do to us the very same thing we did to our native people. So all the sacrifices made by our forefathers to preserve the French heritage, to protect our cultural heritage, our traditions, our efforts—all that will become part of the folklore of a minority group. We should think about that.

In its issue No. 396 of April 21-27, 1980, the Paris weekly Le Point describes the tragic situation caused by the fall in the birth rate in Quebec, which has been the most pronounced in the whole of Canada. What is most alarming is that the aging population will not be replaced and that there will even not be enough people to contribute to our pension fund. Le Point says that "experts have figured out that the pension scheme deficit will reach $36 billion in 2025," and it goes on to say that "Already the educational structures are feeling the impact. Schools are emptying, others risk being closed."

Historian Pierre Chaunu expressed the same view a year or two ago in a radio interview, which was never repeated, of course. Essentially, he said:

> You cannot consider establishing an independent state with a diminishing population. That is deluding oneself.

That is borne out in history. Economic historian René Sédillot wrote in his Survol de l'Histoire du Monde at page 265, that population supremacy equals economic supremacy. That same historian also wrote in that same book, dealing with 19th century France:

> D'où vient que la France a perdu son hégémonie? Sa régression tient au recul de sa natalité, aux discordes qui troublent sa politique intérieure, aux fautes qui grèvent sa politique extérieure.

Those are words to meditate.

We could have given and can still give progressive and increased allowances to Quebecers with three or more children, special assistance for education, for housing, and proportionate maternity allowances. Instead of driving out a number of our fellow citizens, who had been in Quebec for a long time, some for generations, with the French language legislation—because to speak our language we had to stop others from speaking theirs—instead of stopping Italian or other immigrants from teaching their children English, we could have in a positive way given concrete incentives to those who would have learned French in a given time. There is no doubt that the mothers of our immigrants and others would have been pleased to rush over and collect these bonuses and would have taught their children French. But that was not done and yet, when you compare that to what each immigrant is costing us, that would have been a relatively minor, but, I believe, very efficient expenditure.

We have precedents for that. One hundred years ago Honoré Mercier passed legislation in Quebec—the ten-children legislation—providing that the Province of Quebec would give 100 arpents to ever head of family with ten children.

We cannot force people to have big families but we can encourage them to do so with serious incentives, and really help them bring up their children. Indeed, the reason most cited by young couples for not having children is the lack of financial means. I appreciate that the present Government of Quebec does not have any propensity to help the "Yvettes" but they should realize that without the "Yvettes" we are going to be short of people the day we need them. Because what is a nation which does not reproduce itself? It is a nation doomed to extinction.

Also, I never believed that by prohibiting the teaching of English to the children of immigrants we could stop them from learning English, as the repeal of the Edict of Nantes in France in 1685 drove away the Protestants from France but did not result in many of them changing religion.

We should know, and should have known for a long time, that to try and regulate religion, races and languages by legislation is a chimerical endeavour. People always find a way around such legislation or else its implementation can result in persecution and possibly in effects that are entirely unexpected and contrary to those that are sought. For the good such legislation can bring there is an enormous danger that its implementation will lead to racism or bigotry.

Montesquieu says in L'Esprit des Lois:

> Lorsqu'on veut changer les mœurs et les manières, il ne faut pas les changer par des lois.

An American reporter put in this way:

> No noble crusade is simple, once it gets started into law.

I seem to ramble on, honourable senators. I am just expressing out loud thoughts that come to my mind. In short, I am in my own way weighing the pros and cons while considering the referendum issue. To those who would be tempted to say that I am dealing with various matters that are not all connected with the present issue, I would reply that everything I am saying belongs to the same spirit.

I should like to tell you a brief story. In 1917, the member of Parliament for Laprairie, where I was born, Roch Lanctôt, my grandmother's cousin, was speaking in the House of Commons against conscription. He threw in some remarks about the notorious Regulation 17 that prohibited the teaching of French in the Public School System of Ontario. Called to order by the then Speaker, who told him that those matters were not related and that his remarks should be relevant, he replied: "It is all the same!" Because the spirit was the same. Allow me, honourable senators, to borrow the reply of that man from my part of the country.

Coming back to our situation, I see that the present Government of Quebec, which advocates separation, has not made a charter for the economic future of Quebec. Also, it has not made a charter for the political future of Quebec, nor has it made a charter for the demographic future of Quebec; that is to say, in simple words, a family charter for Quebec.

Soon after being elected in November 1976, they drafted in no time a charter of the French language, brandishing the flag of victory as if they were the saviours of the language. But by the time they came into office, the French language had long been saved in Quebec. For 300 years others had fought and won that victory.

They want to take credit for it, jumping on the bandwagon and talking their heads off. We had not been waiting for them to save the language, but now the Péquistes are trying to capitalize on it. We had not been waiting for them to establish a department of cultural affairs, to open a Maison du Québec in Paris—for which my good friend, Georges Lapalme, now forgotten, must be given credit—and to promote the aggiornamento of the French culture and language, and to establish new trade contacts of our own.

Nobody waited for them to prepare and launch the program of the Quiet Revolution which they abandoned to promote social democracy.

Others such as Roger Lemelin, Gabrielle Roy, Antonine Maillet, Grignon, Panneton, Brother Marie-Victorin and so many more did not wait for them to make our writers renowned in the world's French community.

Nor had we been waiting for them to give our country and province famous men in every field, such as Alphonse Desjardins, founder of the caisses populaires; Bombardier, inventor of the snowmobile; the Vachons from Beauce, who bake cakes by the ton; Jean-Louis Lévesque, who regrouped many of our medium-sized industries into a large Quebec organization; General Jacques Dextraze, a war hero, a distinguished officer and former commander-in-chief of the Canadian Armed Forces. We gave to various Quebec governments and to the government in Ottawa as well, under various Prime Ministers, a Roland Giroux, to whom many appealed for financial advice. It is fitting to mention Paul Desmarais, who built the largest Canadian financial empire since the last war; Michel Bélanger, President of the National Bank, who has set up a great financial institution, with true Quebec components, which is holding its own on the national level. Those are only a few examples of Quebecers who have done well, and there are many others. I could mention the Steinberg brothers who did not have to separate or wait for a referendum to develop their chain of supermarkets and shopping centres. All those people did not have to separate to reach success in business.

We did not have to separate to create Hydro-Quebec or to have the Bourassa government decide to start the James Bay project and to erect some of the largest hydro-electric complexes in the world under the leadership and management of such competent people as Robert Boyd, one of us. But we did need Americans to finance them.

As we are entering the post-industrial period of which the favoured Canadian territory is the west, why would people, claiming they want to help us, cut us off from the closest and most accessible areas of development for our competent Quebecers: Alberta gas and oil, Saskatchewan gas and uranium, the Beaufort Sea, the Arctic Islands, Newfoundland and what have you—obviously including all the developments that the tapping of these resources entails?

At a time when our technical abilities are sought after all across Canada as were those of Dr. Gilles Cloutier, whom I met in Edmonton and whom the Alberta government found at the Hydro-Quebec Research Institute to make him Director General of the Alberta Research Council; at a time when our Canadair planes built in Montreal are sold in every country around the globe to fight forest fires; at a time when our Quebec engineers are taking part in high technology projects in western Canada, in which they are doing as good a job as those from large American firms; at a time when these engineers are exporting their abilities, their technology and our products to Africa, Asia and South America with the help of the federal government and of our Canadian banking system, we would be pulling the rug from under their feet if we were to vote for separation in the referendum. Without our opportunities for national and international competition, not only would we be deprived of the benefits we are entitled to with the expected spin-off for our population, but our people would be forced into exile as they were in the past, resulting in a drain, which could be fatal, of our more active and progressive talents.

After having missed out on the 19th century industrial revolution because of our historical withdrawal within ourselves at that time, we would now be prevented from taking part in the 20th century post-industrial revolution by closing off to the outside world. This would be suicide.

If you take the trouble to check the list of the 350 or so Quebec leaders and industrialists who have been selected as men of the month by the Chambre de Commerce de Montréal since 1950, you will realize that they did not wait for the P.Q. government, the referendum question or the separation to be successful in business, with benefits for all in Quebec. Our farmers did not wait either for separation or a referendum to set up the Coopérative fédérée, the Coopérative de lait de Granby, or the Catholic Farmers' Union of Quebec—which has become since the Union des producteurs agricoles—nor did our workers wait for the referendum question or the separation—our Speaker is aware of this—to set up labour organizations such as the Confédération des travailleurs catholiques du Canada, which has since become the Confederation of National Trade Unions.

The federal government did not wait for the P.Q., the referendum or separation to create Radio-Canada, which has saved and given a chance to most of media and show people in Quebec, the same people who today most actively advocate and spearhead separation. That is called biting the hand that feeds you. It is a fact, on the other hand, that Radio-Canada appears sometimes eager to let them bite its hand—volenti non fit injuria.

Senator Denis: Right on!

Senator Riel: You agree with me, senator?

Senator Denis: Sure.

Senator Riel: As lawyers will say, in Quebec, volenti non fit injuria.

Senator Asselin: You are preaching to the converted.

Senator Riel: We agree.

No, those people are inclined to forget. The members of the P.Q. forget that before them there were generations of great French Canadian political leaders: Papineau, Lafontaine, Cartier, Mercier, Laurier, Bourassa, St-Laurent, Duplessis, to name a few of our most illustrious departed. They forget that the province existed before them and that it will not end with them, that French Canadians survived before them and will survive after them.

Of course, theoretically everything can be justified—the Corsican, Breton or Occitan separatist movements in France, the Catalan or Basque separatist movements in Spain and even the Scotch or Welsh separatist movements in Great Britain. I imagine that almost all countries of the world have seeds of local separatism.

Separatism is an emotional feeling, not a political system. Whatever may be our inclination towards separatism in Quebec, we do not know what system it conceals but in the present case we can suspect. What surprise would a victory of the YES at the referendum hold? What would be the fate of people under social democracy coupled with separation? It is a complete mystery. Instead of listening to the voice of the highest common dividing factor, instead of listening to false prophets, to manipulators of public opinion and mass media, let us listen to the voice of tradition, the voice of continuity, and also to the call from the future of Quebec, the call of realism and reason. Let us keep our options open, let us stay federalists. We need a crusade to expand our presence in the business world; they want to force upon us a social-democratic system. We need opportunities; we are offered ideologies. We need bigger families; the "Yvettes" are laughed at.

Indeed, we are taught by experience and by the study of world history that men do not find their happiness in constitutions or systems; rather, human beings make their own happiness, their success or their failure, and also the success or failure of the system under which they live. The institution of marriage does not by itself ensure the success or failure of a conjugal union, its success or failure is determined by the qualities and failings of both parties.

Of course a time comes when it is necessary to revise constitutions. In England, this is done quietly, continuously, because their constitution is not written. In France, 22 constitutions were made over 200 years, through coups or revolutions or replacement of regime. The United States has an amending procedure which is long but which works, the basis of the constitution remaining unchanged.

In Canada, particularly as we have never been able, so far, to devise a mechanism for amending the Constitution which is acceptable to Quebec, some imaginative and adventurous minds found the referendum device. I do not believe very much in its legality; in fact, I do not believe in its legality at all, but once it is done it will be a precedent which each province will be able to use. I do not know whether it constitutes a right to self-determination; once again, I do not believe so, but it is going to be very tempting for everyone in the future, so much more so that now the other provinces have developed their own reasons of confrontation with the federal government, reasons that are deep and serious. We can imagine the mess in which we would find ourselves in such circumstances.

In my opinion, no long-term solution will derive from meetings of first ministers of the country and provinces since these meetings give rise to constant personality and regional conflicts and since they might have, in the future, to be submitted to provincial and national referendums. Until now it seems to me that most of these meetings have produced only protracted wranglings. We seem to be living a continuing constitutional guerilla war.

This, of course, cannot go on. The patient can have just so many heart attacks!

Canada is at a crossroads. The prairies speak of alienation; the Pacific coast speaks of alienation; the maritimes and the Atlantic coast speak of alienation; Quebec speaks of alienation. We are going through an era of divisions, of clamors, of conflicts, all of which are inflamed and exaggerated by the media and used by various lobbies. The gospel says that any house divided against itself will perish.

I believe that the people are tired of confrontation, polarization and delays in developing our natural resources and that they want peaceful times to enjoy the good living that our country can and does provide for all its citizens. I think that everyone wants to see an end to this.

Personally, I would not be against the use of the device of a constituent assembly to arrive at a new Constitution. It would be up to the federal government to take the necessary measures to convene and hold such an assembly, to which the delegates of each of the electoral ridings of the country would be elected by absolute majority after two ballots—I think that would be best—and where representatives of the native population would be invited. The Americans held a Constituent Assembly from 1776 to 1783, and the Catholic Church convened general synods or councils from time to time through the centuries. For example, Vatican Council II, under Pope John XXIII, which lasted two years, and the Council of Trente we talked so much about in college, which sat eighteen years from 1545 to 1563, and which, according to Websters:

> —undertook Catholic reform, and defined Catholic doctrines.

Such a constituent assembly could, in my humble opinion, give us a truly Canadian home-made Constitution drafted by fellow Canadians and tailored to our times and situation. The research suggestions and the task forces alluded to yesterday by Senator Lamontagne could provide very serious working material for such an assembly. I am sure that common sense would eventually prevail. We might even decide to keep the present Constitution! In any case, I suggest that it should contain a mechanism for revision every ten years, just as in the case of the Bank Act, and also a provision creating an intergovernmental arbitration body, which would be empowered to bring about temporary solutions and decisions, or even final ones, depending on the case, with regard to disputes between the central government and the provinces or even between the provinces themselves. As a matter of fact, such an arbitration system based on that of the United Nations could, I think, be established and made to work immediately without our having to wait for the convening of a constituent assembly.

You all know as well as I do that there is no such thing as an infallible system in politics. You cannot buy solutions to social or political issues at the drugstore like aspirin. Politics is not an exact science like mathematics. It may even not be a science at all, but rather an art and, even at that, an approximate and inaccurate art. Perhaps that is why politics is said to be the art of the possible. Daydreamers will never be satisfied, but reasonable people know all too well that no one can spontaneously provide a country with happiness simply by inserting a clause in a document called a constitution or a contract.

By the way, the term "contract" makes me wonder what Mr. Lévesque wants, a constitution or a contract? Is he contemplating a limited term association commitment or a commitment forever?

Paul Valéry wrote this sentence after World War I:

> Nous autres civilisations, nous savons maintenant que nous sommes mortelles.

If civilizations pass away, how could constitutions and systems possibly avoid the same fate? This is why reality must always remain the measure of our thoughts, govern our feelings and guide our judgment.

Having used earlier the words "to keep our sense of proportion," I believe it is best explained in the light of the above sentence. But "to keep our sense of proportion" should not preclude the use of "our sense of humour" to lighten the tensions that may and do arise in relations between Canadians.

The French Canadians' mocking wink and cunning smile are our own typical traits, just as the British composure and gift of understatement are part of our Anglo-Saxon countrymen's character. This also is part of our heritage and way of life.

It is to keep all that, in addition to all the reasons I have given earlier in my balance of inconveniences, that I shall give a NO vote to the referendum. Because, I too, want to help save our heritage, our traditions, our language, our rights. I want to see again on Quebecers' faces, after the current storm, the smile that seems to have vanished now for some time.

On motion of Senator Guay, debate adjourned.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

BANNING OF GLASS CONTAINERS FOR CARBONATED DRINKS—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Edgar Fournier, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, April 22, 1980, moved:

> That there be laid before this house copies of all correspondence, notes, minutes of meetings and other communications between the Minister and officials of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs during the year 1979, relating to the banning of certain glass containers of carbonated drinks.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as I stated yesterday—unfortunately the Honourable Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche) was absent from the chamber at the time—the documents requested by the honourable senator are confidential, internal papers between the minister and his officials. I therefore ask the honourable senator whether he wishes to withdraw his motion.

Hon. Edgar Fournier: Honourable senators, it appears to me that everything becomes confidential with this government. I cannot accept the Leader of the Government's request that I withdraw my motion, and I shall explain my reason in a few words.

As the motion stands, the minister will have to take the matter into his own hands and bear the responsibility and the bad publicity involved. For six months I have tried to get a reasonable answer to the banning from the market of 1.5 litre glass containers. After several letters to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and getting the runaround, I reached the conclusion that the only way to get results was to have the department table all the documents.

[Senator Riel.]

As I get increasingly deeper into this affair, I am convinced more than ever that someone is covering up or hiding the facts to protect his own interest in this blunder of the years, a blunder that has ruined many small bottlers, costing them over $200 million and causing a layoff of approximately 1,800 people across the country.

However, I wish to thank the minister for his intention to do something to remedy the situation, and I shall delay further comment until he has announced his plans publicly. I may then withdraw my motion. In the meantime, I would like the motion to stand. I would advise the minister that the blackbirds who advised the former minister are still in the nest.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker (Hon. David A. Croll): Shall the motion stand?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I should like to speak briefly to the motion. I want to assure honourable senators that there is no effort by the government to—using the words of the honourable senator—"cover up" information which should be made available to the public.

I suggest that there is ample parliamentary precedent for the response which has been elicited from the Honourable André Ouellet, Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I quote as follows from Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, Fourth Edition, at page 249, section IX, headed "Motions for Papers Refused":

> Occasions may arise when the government will feel constrained to refuse certain papers on the ground that their production would be inconvenient or injurious to the public interests. A high authority writes on this point: "Considerations of public policy, and a due regard to the interests of the state, occasionally demand that information sought for by members of the legislature should be withheld, at the discretion and upon the general responsibility of ministers. This principle is systematically recognized in all parliamentary transactions; were it otherwise, it would be impossible to carry on the government with safety and honour". Consequently, there are frequent cases in which the ministers refuse information, especially at some stage of an investigation or negotiation; and in such instances the house will always acquiesce when sufficient reasons are given for the refusal. On this account, members will sometimes consent to withdraw their motions; or in case only a part of the information sought for can be brought down, they will agree to such alterations as the minister may show to be advisable in the public interests. Sometimes the government may be obliged to withhold all information at the time, or they may be able to put the house in possession of only a part of the correspondence.

• (1630)

The next sentence is rather important, and it is as follows:

> If the government objects to the production of documents on the ground that they are of a confidential nature, it is not unusual to insist on their being furnished, except under peculiar or imperative circumstances, on the ground that it would be wholly without precedent to produce them.

The quotation from Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, 4th Edition, continues on page 251:

> As to "confidential documents" passing between officers of a department, Mr. Speaker Peel observes: "They are not necessarily laid on the table of the house, especially if the minister declares that they are of a confidential character."

This is, in effect, what has been done by the minister in the other place. The passage continues:

> He adds: "that if a minister stated in his place that a document was of that class, the house should take his word, and he was not bound to lay it on the table.

The precedents support the action of the minister.

I should like now to read from Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fifth Edition, page 138—and this has been the subject of some investigation by the government—as follows:

> To enable Members of Parliament to secure factual information about the operations of Government to carry out their parliamentary duties and to make public as much factual information as possible, consistent with effective administration, the protection of the security of the state, rights to privacy and other such matters, government papers, documents and consultant reports should be produced on Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers unless falling within the categories outlined below, in which case an exemption is to be claimed from production.

And there follows, under subsection (2):

> (n) Papers that are private or confidential and not of a public or official character.
> (o) Internal departmental memoranda.

These reasons have been provided for the suggestion of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs that he is not prepared to provide the confidential internal papers between his officials and himself. That is why the honourable senator was requested to withdraw the motion.

Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): Honourable senators, I believe the next move is up to the minister. I did not say I would not withdraw the motion; I said I would withdraw it after the minister announces he is going to remedy the situation. Until that time I will not withdraw my motion because for the last six months I have had considerable difficulty in trying to obtain information.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would seek permission from the chamber to table an order in council which has just been made available to me.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Perrault tabled:

> Copies of Order in Council P.C. 1980-1274, dated May 9, 1980, appointing Dr. Joseph Clifford McIsaac and the Honourable Léon Balcer Commissioners to inquire into the adequacy of the annual variations of sessional allowances payable to members of the Senate and House of Commons and other allowances payable to them, pursuant to section 34(7) of the Senate and House of Commons Act, as amended, Chapter 44, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before moving the adjournment I should like to outline our plan for business for the rest of this week and next week. We will sit tomorrow at 2 o'clock, and again on Friday at 11 o'clock in the hope of having royal assent at about 12.45.

As honourable senators are aware, we will sit on Friday because of the anticipated receipt of the supply bill from the House of Commons. A vote will take place in the other place tomorrow evening. I mentioned this to honourable senators some two weeks ago.

Before I go on to the business for next week, I would respectfully request that honourable senators make every effort to attend on Friday for consideration of the supply bill and for royal assent.

We do not anticipate receiving any legislation from the other place next week. That was verified by their officials today. Therefore, the plan is to not sit next week. Of course, this comment applies only to the Senate and not to any Senate committees which may wish to convene next week.

In summary, therefore, the Senate will not sit next week. Monday is Victoria Day and Tuesday is referendum day. Since we do not expect any business from the other place next week, and subject to the approval of honourable senators, the plan is as I have outlined above. Are there any questions concerning this plan before I move the adjournment?

Senator Flynn: I understand that the appropriation bill will be very simple. It will contain nothing other than the appropriation itself.

Senator Frith: That is my understanding. The tentative support for our having royal assent at 12.45 on Friday is, I understand, based on that understanding which the Leader of the Opposition and I have shared for the past week.

Senator Neiman: I should like to direct a question to the Deputy Leader of the Government. We are aware that the President of Mexico is to be here on the Monday following the week we shall not be sitting. Is the deputy leader aware of any plans for an address to both houses by the President of Mexico? We may have to alter our plans accordingly.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I thank Senator Neiman for drawing that to my attention. I am pleased to share with honourable senators what I know about the president's visit.

Plans are under way to have a joint session but they are not firm as yet. If the plans go ahead, a joint session will be addressed by the President of Mexico on Monday, May 26, at 11 o'clock. I would suggest to honourable senators, if they have their calendars with them, that they do not put Monday, May 26, at 11 a.m. in ink, but that they put it in firm pencil. There is a good chance that those plans will go ahead.

If I may be permitted to say so, honourable senators, the attendance at the address by His Excellency the Prime Minister of Japan was, in the opinion of some of us, less than satisfactory. Perhaps we should keep that in mind and try to turn out in numbers for the joint address by the President of Mexico. I do not say that in criticism of anyone but rather with a view to perhaps learning from experience.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

ENERGY

QUEBEC AND MARITIMES PIPELINE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I wish to seek permission of the Senate to read a statement respecting the Quebec and Maritimes Pipeline, often called the Q and M Pipeline.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, what I should like to read is a partial response to a question asked by Senator Phillips during the Question Period on May 14 concerning the status of the proposed natural gas pipeline to Quebec and the maritimes. I am pleased to be able to inform the house that this morning the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced that the National Energy Board has recommended, and the government has approved, that the natural gas system be extended beyond Montreal to Quebec City.

It remains the government's preferred option, as stated in the Speech from the Throne, to extend the line to the maritime provinces. However, the National Energy Board has denied for the moment the application of the Trans-Quebec and Maritime Pipeline Company to extend the pipeline to the maritime provinces, citing two reasons:

First, the board found that Q and M has not done sufficient environmental work, and we hope that this will be completed as rapidly as possible in order to meet our environmental standards.

Secondly, the board also found that the Q and M application does not adequately consider potential offshore developments, a point that has also been raised by the Province of New Brunswick.

As a result of recent exploration activity, there is a real possibility that the Atlantic region could be self-sufficient in both oil and gas from the potential discoveries at Hibernia and Sable Island. We must therefore choose the most efficient means of assuring energy sources for Atlantic Canada, and we intend to do so with the agreement of the provinces.

We are determined that there be no lessening of our drive to convert Atlantic Canada from oil dependency. Although there will be a pause as we examine the effect of the new offshore developments, we are determined that this pause will be as brief as possible and to this end we are looking at ways in which the exploration at Hibernia and Sable Island can be accelerated. We are also asking Q and M to continue to press ahead with the work required for their application so that it can be considered by the National Energy Board as soon as possible.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

In Quebec the construction and extension of the natural gas distribution network will be of major benefit to consumers in the province and to the whole Quebec economy. The National Energy Board has estimated capital and operating costs of this system at over $1 billion, not including the investment that will be made in conversion from oil to gas facilities. The total employment impact of the project is estimated at 30,500 person-years of work, with the extension to Quebec City getting under way next year, the extension to the Eastern Townships in the 1982-83 period, and to Lac St-Jean in 1983-84.

By 1985 this system would be capable of delivering about 69.5 billion cubic feet of natural gas to the Quebec market, rising to 136.5 billion cubic feet by 1990. The board's estimate is that this will mean a net displacement of fuel oil in the Quebec market of 27,000 barrels a day by 1985, and 52,000 barrels a day by 1990.

I am pleased to note also that the national objective of substitution of oil by other forms of energy is being advanced in British Columbia. My counterpart in that province, Mr. McClelland, recently anounced that public hearings will be held on all aspects of the proposed extension of the natural gas system to Vancouver Island. If approved, this project could as early as 1983 provide natural gas service to a potential market of 450,000 people, about 18 per cent of the British Columbia population.

I have a table showing the distribution of economic benefits in connection with this project, and I would ask that it be placed in Hansard because I think it would be useful to honourable senators in understanding the statement I have just completed.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The table follows:)

QUEBEC NATURAL GAS PIPELINE EXTENSION

Total length, mainline and laterals: (from St-Lazare)			1535 kilometres
Capital cost: ($1979)	Transmission	1980-84	$300 milion
	Distribution	1980-90	$580 million
Start-up:	Quebec City		1981
	Eastern Townships		1982-83
	Lac St-Jean		1983-84
			1985	1990
NEB forecast of expansion sales: (billions of cubic feet)			69.5	136.5
NEB forecast of fuel oil displaced: (thousands of barrels per day)			27	52
Total project manpower requirements:			16,411 person-years
Direct Quebec manpower requirements:			15,645 person-years
Total employment impact[1]:			30,500 person-years
Direct expenditures in Quebec[2] ($1979):			$ 687 million
Total project expenditures[2] ($1979):			$1,016 million

[1] Direct employment plus employment generated by the project in manufacturing, mining, construction and service industries.

[2] NEB estimates of capital and operating costs (excluding taxes) for transmission and distribution systems. Excludes conversion costs and fuel gas costs.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might be permitted to make some observations on the announcement I have just heard.

I want to congratulate the minister for choosing this as the forum for conveying to us the news about this pipeline. In doing so he shows a greater respect for our parliamentary institutions than has been shown by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who saw fit to make the announcement outside Parliament altogether, and in another province. Of course, we have come to expect that from that minister. When he had an announcement to make about the Chrysler deal, that also was made outside of Parliament. When there was an announcement about the calling of the Pacific Rim Conference, that again was not made to Parliament but outside of Parliament.

Even while congratulating the minister, however, I find it difficult to feel that he has properly described the pipeline, since he talked about it as being the Quebec and Maritimes Pipeline, but then proceeded in no uncertain terms to say that no section of this pipeline will extend into the maritimes.

He also talked about the work benefits that are to flow from the pipeline, indicating the thousands of man-hours that are to be provided. He said he was going to tell us about the distribution of these, but none of them are going to wind up in the maritime provinces under this dispensation.

Under a previous government we had been given to understand that this pipeline would be built, that it would be built into the maritimes—not only that but that the plant for the conversion of oil into liquid fuel would be placed at a maritime point. That was the promise of our government, and it was a promise that was concurred in by those who form the present government.

Senator Olson: Do you want us to do it without the environmental studies? If you do, say so. That is all that is holding up the project.

Senator Perrault: You want to ride roughshod over the environment?

Senator Donahoe: I suspect that there are already enough environmental studies to justify the production.

I have learned from the minister's statement today that the government is pressing to relieve the energy and oil dependency situation in the Atlantic region with great vigour. In my view it is pressing ahead by the simple expedient of saying, "If you fellows are lucky enough to get a supply of oil from Hibernia or from Sable Island in the course of time—and we don't know whether you will or not—then you will have solved your oil dependency problem."

We in our region are still dependent upon offshore oil to the extent of about 70 per cent of our energy needs. We had great hopes from this pipeline. I can remember the previous administration saying, "Not only will we build the pipeline, not only will we place the conversion station in your area, thereby creating employment, but we will subsidize and assist in the conversion from oil to gas." This amounts to a total repudiation of the needs and the demands of the maritime region when it is coupled with the fact that we recently had a statement made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, on behalf of the Minister of Finance, that there would be no more money forthcoming for the support program to keep down the price of generating electricity by offshore oil unless this government was able to squeeze additional funds out of the Province of Alberta.

Consequently, when a statement of that kind is followed by an announcement of this kind, we in the maritimes feel that we have been taken down the garden path. If I were the Prime Minister, perhaps I would say that we are being "diddled".

Senator Perrault: May I ask whether this is a speech, a formal oration, or whether the honourable senator is coming to a question?

Senator Asselin: He is replying to a statement.

Senator Donahoe: The minister asked for permission to make a statement to this chamber; we listened to it, and I am endeavouring to make a mild comment in reply.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: It is a full-fledged speech.

Senator Donahoe: Perhaps I have sufficiently made my point and made it clear how this announcement will be received in the maritimes and in my own province of Nova Scotia. Could the minister give us any real assurance that the Atlantic sites are still being considered for the conversion plant, and that matters such as Atlantic energy, security and employment problems will be taken into account when the decision is made as to where the terminal will be located? Is it already a foregone conclusion that all of the benefits are to go into the province of Quebec?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that is the most astounding statement I have ever heard. What the honourable senator is suggesting is that we run roughshod over the findings of the National Energy Board respecting environmental considerations. We are a responsible government, one that does not do that type of thing.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Olson: I have already said in my original statement to this chamber that we are pressing forward, but we are not going to run over the regulatory body whose business it is to hear the necessary evidence concerning environmental and other considerations.

The honourable senator is also asking us to run roughshod over the considerations that were presented by the provinces concerning offshore development. We are not holding back in that regard, but representations were made by the province from which the honourable senator comes, and from other maritime provinces, that these things should be taken into account. We are going to allow that process to take place.

This government is fully behind the completion of that line for obvious reasons—gas substitution for oil dependency, and so on. As far as the other details are concerned, I do not mention them in my statement because, of course, the senator is right in the fact that the line will not cover the distance envisaged. The statement that this government is not committed to the pipeline is absolutely incorrect. We are going to follow the rules and regulations that have been set up by the people who have concern for development in that part of Canada, as well as the environmental matters.

Senator Murray: Why did you make that commitment during the election campaign?

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: May I thank the Minister of State for Economic Development for his prompt reply to my question. I agree with a great deal of what Senator Donahoe has just stated. I would refer to the minister's two reasons for not building or extending the pipeline into the maritimes now, namely, environmental and possible offshore developments. I would point out that not one situation has changed in either the environment or the offshore developments since that promise was made during the election campaign. The Hibernia development was there when that was made. That was the very reason the Liberals emphasized the word "reversible." If Hibernia or other offshore developments occurred, they said they could bring the oil back to western Canada. You are now shirking your election promise. There is no other way to describe it.

Senator Olson: I don't accept that at all.

Senator Asselin: You ought to be ashamed.

Senator Perrault: Don't get political.

Senator Phillips: I would never do that, senator. I am rather intrigued that a pipeline in western Canada comes under the economic development portfolio, but the one in the Atlantic provinces comes under the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Senator Olson: I didn't say that.

Senator Phillips: That was your statement to the house yesterday, and I can see the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources exhibiting the same interest as the Minister of State for Economic Development. However, I would feel much happier if the Minister of State for Economic Development were responsible for the development of that line, because I know that we would then have it pushed to the limit, and then we would have the capability to develop these lines.

Some Hon. Senators: Question, question!

Senator Phillips: My question is very simple. Would you ask the Prime Minister to give you the authority to handle that pipeline and remove it from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources?

Senator Olson: No, I will not ask the Prime Minister to do that, because it is being handled now by a very capable minister.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

NATIONAL FINANCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO SIT DURING ADJOURNMENTS OF THE SENATE

Hon. William J. Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): May we have an explanation, please?

Hon. Allister Grosart: May I ask the mover of the motion if the intention is that for the balance of the session this committee will have power to sit at any time when the Senate is adjourned, or is there a limitation to the provision that the Senate is now asked to give?

Senator Petten: The chairman of the committee is not in the chamber, but it is my understanding—and I hope I am correct, because it is unwise to assume anything within these precincts—that the committee wishes to hold a meeting next week.

• (1420)

Senator Grosart: Then I would suggest that there be an amendment to the motion to limit it to that, because surely it is unprecedented in this place to give any committee the right to sit at any time when the Senate is adjourned. It is something I have never heard of in this place.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): I think it may be a reasonable request, to delineate more exactly the purpose of the meeting.

Hon. John Morrow Godfrey: I would challenge what Senator Grosart has just said. I personally sat for several months on the Special Committee of the Senate on the Constitution when the Senate was not sitting. I think committees should be encouraged to sit when the Senate is not in session. Rather than try to discourage them, I think every committee should have blanket permission to do that.

Senator Grosart: If that is the wish of the Senate, then my objection is not well taken. I merely say that it does not seem to be within the traditions and rules of this place that any committee should be allowed to sit at any time, because obviously individual senators have a stake in any such suggestion.

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, I do not think we are creating a precedent. As Senator Godfrey has said, this has happened on many other occasions.

Senator Grosart: No.

Senator Petten: I beg to differ. It certainly has.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Could the honourable senator give us an indication of why the meeting is being held? What is the purpose of the meeting?

Senator Grosart: I think probably I can help. I believe it is connected, of course, with the importance of the passage of supply.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, May 16, 1980, at 11:00 in the forenoon.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

RECONSTITUTION OF SUBCOMMITTEE ON OFF-TRACK BETTING

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. About a year and a half or two years ago the then Minister of Agriculture for Canada requested a committee of the Senate to make an in-depth study of off-track betting. A subcommittee was then formed under the distinguished chairmanship of Senator Buckwold and the work was started, but it was interrupted because of certain political events that took place. I am wondering if the Leader of the Government would inquire of the Minister of Agriculture if it is still his wish to have that study made, and if the subcommittee of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on off-track betting will be reconstituted.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, let me say at the outset that I appreciated having notice of this question given to my office this morning. I do not have a definite and final answer as to the view of the minister with respect to the possibility of the Senate assisting his thinking by reconstituting the Subcommittee on Off-track Betting.

Senator Flynn: Very well said.

Senator Perrault: That is a personal view, so I wouldn't bet on it. The minister has indicated that he is examining and pursuing various initiatives that would assist the industry and which are within the present legislative mandate governing pari-mutuel betting. Whether or not these initiatives are such that they will make unnecessary the reconstitution of that subcommittee is yet to be determined. In the ultimate, that would be a matter for the Senate to decide.

Senator McElman: All bets are off.

ENERGY

ATLANTIC REGION—LOCATION OF LIQUEFIED NATURAL GAS TERMINAL

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, my question is for the Minister of State for Economic Development. Can the minister tell us whether or not a decision has been taken on the location of the liquefied natural gas terminal currently being proposed by Petro-Canada for a site in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or Quebec.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I shall have to take the question as notice.

DOMESTIC OIL PRICING—IMPACT OF INCREASE IN PRICE OF OIL IMPORTED FROM SAUDI-ARABIA

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I should like to pose a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development. It may be that I shall not get as good an answer as I should get, but I would ask the minister whether he can provide this chamber with a calculation of the impact on the deficit in the Oil Import Compensation Program of the increase of $2 per barrel in the price of Saudi-Arabian oil announced yesterday.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): If the honourable senator is asking, as I think he is, for a fairly detailed projection of the economic and financial consequences of that per-barrel increase, I shall have to take the question as notice. Certainly, in general terms, it is a fact that the compensation payments become a heavier burden on the federal treasury every time the international price of oil goes up.

Senator Muir: A supplementary: Is it the expectation of the honourable minister and his government that this increase will set off another wave of increases by the OPEC nations? Is he willing to suggest that that might or might not happen?

Senator Olson: You are asking for an opinion rather than fact, and I should be very careful about—

Senator Muir: I have great respect for your opinion.

Senator Olson: I am grateful for that. My opinion—and, indeed, my hope—is that it will not happen. The honourable senator will realize that Saudi-Arabia has for several months maintained a price lower than the so-called world price or, indeed, the average price of the other OPEC countries. We certainly hope that this latest increase does not promote or trigger increases by other members of OPEC. If it does, it means that they would increase their prices proportionately.

We should acknowledge that the Government of Saudi-Arabia has made a sincere attempt, at all of the OPEC meetings, to keep the price from increasing too rapidly. If they are now catching up, if that is the right term, to the per-barrel price charged by the other members of OPEC, then that is one circumstance. We would certainly be concerned if it did trigger a further round of increases. I do not think there is justification for the other oil exporting countries to increase their prices. Speaking from memory, Saudi-Arabia has had the lowest price of any of the OPEC countries to date.

Senator Muir: A further supplementary: I thank the honourable minister for his reply, but in his initial statement today he was, along with those of us from the Atlantic provinces, crying verbally about the difficulties with which we are confronted. Given the fact that Atlantic Canada is 70 per cent dependent on foreign oil for its energy needs, as was suggested by Senator Donahoe, could the minister tell us whether the government is now prepared to reconsider the rather callous statements made last week in Halifax by the Honourable Marc Lalonde, and offer to the Atlantic provinces the same subsidization as had been proposed by the previous government?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do not want to comment specifically on that, but I do wish to reiterate that the government is fully committed to extending the natural gas line as far and as rapidly as possible into the maritimes so that there is a massive substitution available. The BTU value of the gas that is available to go into that line would, it is my belief, be substantially less than the comparable BTU value of the imported oil. So we certainly want to do that. I think my statement clearly indicated that that still is the view of the government.

With respect to an additional compensating program in the meantime, I would have to take that as notice. However, I should like to point out that were there to be a total substitution into the maritime provinces of natural gas which is in plentiful supply within Canada, then even on an interim basis, like a reversible basis for electricity generation and as far into the other domestic market as possible, that would make significant change in the costs not only for the people who are directly affected but also in terms of the national budget. I say without equivocation that we are completely committed to that. But we must take into account the legal requirements to hear detailed evidence before the National Energy Board and either accept or reject their recommendations. We do not really have the right to modify those recommendations. There would then also be the other consideration of the provinces.

I hope all of that can be cleared up so that we can get on with extending that line from coast to coast.

Senator Muir: With all due deference to the honourable senator, would he bear with me a moment more? Despite what the honourable gentleman has said today regarding the construction of this pipeline, could he say, if it were to start tomorrow, how long it would take to construct that pipeline? And in the interim period of years, how long would the consumers and those who have their electricity supplied by gas and oil and so on have to suffer without subsidization with ever-increasing and continuing high prices?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, again I am getting into dangerous ground in trying to rely on memory for comments that have been made. I believe I have been told more than once that within the space of less than two years the entire line from Montreal to Halifax could be installed. It takes a little longer to put on the distribution, but perhaps most of that could be done within two years, too, from the time that the necessary permits were issued by the National Energy Board. It is one program that could be done expeditiously. We have in Canada probably the highest level of technology in the world in building these kinds of pipelines and we have all of the rest of the material and skilled labour to do it. I think, as I said before, that it could be substantially less than two years if a maximum effort were applied there, even if the Alaska Pipeline were going on at the same time, because I seem to recall that one of the principals of the Alberta Gas Trunk Line, a company involved as sponsors in both projects, indicated to me that it could be built in two years or less even if the Alaska Pipeline were in process. Since that is not underway perhaps it could be expedited and done even more quickly.

NEWFOUNDLAND—LOWER CHURCHILL RIVER

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. Was he a participant in the discussions yesterday between the Minister of Mines and Energy for Newfoundland and the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources? Was the subject of the alternative source of energy that would be provided by the Lower Churchill raised? What is the government's position on funding for that project?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I can say that, no, I was not a participant in those discussions.

QUEBEC AND MARITIMES PIPELINE

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Minister of State for Economic Development a question arising out of the announcement he made earlier. Is the extension of the gas pipeline from Montreal to Quebec reversible? Moreover, could he tell us when the environmental studies on that section of the pipeline were completed? Would he also table the environmental studies in this chamber?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): You are asking for evidence, I think, that was placed before the National Energy Board with respect to the environmental considerations. I will have to check to find out whether or not I can put that material before you. I expect that the hearings were publicly held and that the information ought therefore to be available, but I am not sure of all of the implications of the question concerning details of why the National Energy Board decided that the environmental studies were insufficient, inadequate or incomplete. I am not sure of that so I will make some inquiries to see if I can obtain more information in that respect.

Senator Phillips: I also asked if the extension to the pipeline was reversible.

Senator Olson: I will make that inquiry as well.

NEWFOUNDLAND—ENERGY POLICY OF FORMER FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I should like to put a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Yesterday during discussions between the Newfoundland Minister of Mines and Energy and the very conciliatory federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources—the diplomatic, tactful and quiet gentleman responsible for that ministry—the matter of the letter from the previous Prime Minister to the Premier of Newfoundland was raised. The federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is quoted as saying that the letter has "no meaning whatsoever. It has no other effect than in being a letter."

Am I and the people of Canada and the various provincial governments of Canada, and perhaps even the governments of the world, to assume from that, or to take from it, that this is indeed the policy of the Government of Canada, that letters of commitment from Prime Ministers have no other effect than that of being letters; they are not, in effect, commitments?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not have copies of the letters referred to, but may I suggest that the new government feels under no obligation to keep all of the multitudinous campaign promises made by the previous government in its failing efforts to seek another mandate from the Canadian people.

If a number of letters were written by the previous government, I hope the honourable senator is not suggesting that everything in those letters, all of the grandiose promises and pledges, must be implemented by this new government.

In saying that, I would certainly reserve ultimate judgment on the question of offshore resource ownership in Newfoundland until I see the relevant correspondence.

Senator Doody: Since the honourable gentleman will reserve comment, perhaps he could spare us the little lecture, because, in effect, this was not one of a series of multitudinous election promises. This was a commitment quite a while before that election was called. It was a letter dealing exclusively with the matter of offshore jurisdiction in the Newfoundland area and it recognized the legitimate aspirations of the people of Newfoundland in that direction. It had nothing at all to do with election promises. The honourable minister is obviously getting the two parties confused. We were never that desperate to get into power.

Senator Hays: This is the Question Period. Stop making a speech.

Senator Doody: I am correcting some of the comments that your honourable colleague has seen fit to lecture me on, and I would respectfully ask the honourable senator, please, to contain himself for just a moment.

Senator Hays: You are making a speech.

Senator Doody: Is that not allowed in the Senate?

Senator Hays: This is the Question Period.

Senator Doody: I am asking a question.

Senator Hays: Then ask your question. Don't make a speech.

Senator Doody: Thank you very much. You are very courteous, sir. What I am saying, indeed, is that if the honourable senator needs copies of that correspondence, I can get copies of it for him. What I am asking is whether this is to be the policy of the Government of Canada now in terms of commitments made by Prime Ministers, or is this just a specific item dealing with that specific commitment?

Senator Perrault: The general policy of this new government has been to review the commitments made by the previous government, to review its many commitments made across the country and to determine which of those has validity, which of them are in the interests of the regions of Canada and which are in the national interest, and certainly not to dismiss all of them out of hand because some of them happen to have been originated by the previous Conservative government. We will select from among them the sound proposals. May I say that some of the proposals have been quite unsound.

Senator Doody: I have a further supplementary. Since it is obvious that that commitment is not going to be honoured, can the Leader of the Government inform the Senate as to when the Government of Canada intends to bring a reference before the Supreme Court to resolve that problem on the east coast, particularly as it relates to Newfoundland's aspirations?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, may I reiterate that the word "unsound" was not employed by me with respect to the matter under question. I stated that I would review the correspondence, and indeed I will take the question as notice to obtain further information on that subject. With regard to the referral to the Supreme Court of Canada, that question must also be taken as notice.

NEWFOUNDLAND—LOWER CHURCHILL RIVER

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, my question is for the Minister of State for Economic Development. Since he stated earlier that he was not a party to the discussions between the energy ministers of Newfoundland and Canada, and since he has indicated today that he is interested in providing alternative sources of energy, is he considering the potential resource of the Lower Churchill? Also, what action is being taken in consultation with the Government of Newfoundland, because, in his capacity as Minister of State for Economic Development, surely he should consider that as an available alternative source of energy?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I agree that it is an important alternative source of energy, but before I comment any further I shall obtain some further information on the meeting that was held, and, if possible, any further information on the outstanding differences.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CUBAN REFUGEES—CANADIAN INVOLVEMENT

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government a question concerning the Cuban refugees, or, as Senator Frith calls them, the "asylum seekers". When it was thought that those people would number about 10,000, the government indicated that it would accept 300 of them. Now that the number has increased at least sixfold, can the Leader of the Government advise if there have been representations from the Government of the United States and/or the Government of Peru that Canada accept a larger number of those refugees?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will take that question as notice.

Senator Macquarrie: I have a supplementary: Could the Leader of the Government ascertain and indicate to the Senate what part Canada is playing in the transportation of those people, considering the new American development, and also which government departments are represented in Florida to process those people?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that supplementary information will be sought.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER—AGREEMENT BETWEEN GOVERNMENT OF CANADA AND FÉDÉRATION DES FRANCOPHONES HORS QUÉBEC

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, on May 1 I asked a question concerning an agreement that had been signed by the previous Secretary of State, Mr. MacDonald, with the Fédération des francophones hors Québec. The Leader of the Government replied the other night to the general effect that that agreement was now a dead letter and that the government was apparently seeking other mechanisms for consultation.

Would the Leader of the Government ascertain what defect the present government sees in the agreement reached only a couple of months ago by its predecessor, other than the fact that that agreement was negotiated by the previous government? At the same time, will the Leader of the Government attempt to find out what became of two other questions that I put to his deputy on May 1? They were fairly straightforward questions that arose out of the 1979 report of the Commissioner of Official Languages.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): May I reassure honourable senators that this government steadfastly refuses to make its decisions purely on the basis of partisan considerations. The evolution of policy is far removed from—

Senator Flynn: From you.

Senator Perrault: —from the political structure. That information will be sought and an explanation provided, if possible. With regard to the additional questions, again that information will be sought—but in the interests of the Senate and not on any partisan basis.

HUMAN RIGHTS

VIOLATIONS IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. In view of the fact that the Canadian Human Rights Commission investigators have found that some 3,000 public servants are victims of a violation of the federal law on equal pay for work of equal value, would he comment on this glaring omission which exists? What is the position of the government, and what action is being taken to correct this situation?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the decision, and the implications of that decision, are under study at the present time.

Senator Marshall: I wonder if the Leader of the Government would also include in that study the omissions and variations in regional pay of the federal servants right across the country, and also look into the lack of equality between east and west.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, perhaps Senator Marshall will provide firm evidence on that point. Generally, an effort is made to provide equality of indemnifications according to category across the country. If evidence exists to support his allegations, certainly I hope that it can be made available as soon as possible so that the question can be directed to the proper source.

THE CABINET

Hon. John Morrow Godfrey: Honourable senators, my question today is for the Minister of State for Economic Development and again involves freedom of information and open government. Starting at page 158 of George Radwanski's biography of the Prime Minister, he sets out in great detail how the cabinet committee system works, so that the full cabinet does actually take responsibility for the decisions taken by the committees. Obviously much of Mr. Radwanski's information was initially obtained from ex-cabinet ministers, and I am sure that, because of Mr. Radwanski's high reputation, anyone reading the book would take for granted that he had checked his information and that it was an accurate description of the process—

Some Hon. Senators: Question.

Senator Godfrey: When I read this account, I must say that I was favourably impressed with the system, much more so than with the Conservative system of an inner cabinet, and I was puzzled, and still am, as to why the government did not come clean with the public and explain it in detail at the outset, and take full credit for it, rather than wait for Mr. Radwanski's revelations.

I am sure the minister will have to take my question as notice, because he will have to read Mr. Radwanski's account before he can answer my question, which is: Has the really excellent system described in such detail in Mr. Radwanski's book been changed in any material way since the publication of the book?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I wish to thank Senator Godfrey for sending me notice of his question, I also have a mimeographed copy of page 158 of Mr. Radwanski's book. I would like to examine that in somewhat more detail, in the context of the paragraph that appears in the book, before providing an answer.

The honourable senator asks whether the system described in the book has been changed in any material way since the book's publication. I am sure that every honourable senator knows that, although there has not been an official declaration, the cabinet committees are still in existence. It is also fair to say that since Senator Godfrey and other senators are so curious about this matter, the government is considering whether or not there should be an official declaration. Most honourable senators already know anywhere from 50 per cent to 99 per cent of the situation. All they want us to do is to make an official statement about it.

Senator Walker: Can the minister tell us what Prime Minister he is talking about?

Senator Olson: I am talking about the present great Prime Minister of Canada.

Senator Walker: Now we know.

AIRLINES

APPLICATION OF EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS TO EXTEND SERVICE

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. I wonder if he has had an opportunity to obtain some answers to the questions relating to Eastern Provincial Airways that have been asked in the past. This is a matter of great concern in Newfoundland and indeed all the Atlantic provinces. CP Air has announced its July schedule from Halifax to Toronto, and approximately 900 employees of Eastern Provincial Airways are becoming increasingly concerned, as, indeed is everyone in the area, about the future of that airline. Is it possible to obtain some information on the matter because in a few months' time we may be looking at a very serious situation?

● (1450)

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I had hoped that some information on the Eastern Provincial-Canadian Pacific Air Lines issue might have been available this afternoon, but I have not as yet seen evidence of any appeal being directed to cabinet. I have, however, raised the matter with some of my cabinet colleagues. While the situation will be checked out—and perhaps it can be done, indeed, in the next half-hour or so—the status of any appeal by EPA was not discussed this morning.

Honourable senators are aware of the diverse viewpoints with respect to the routes in the Atlantic provinces. It is regarded by many members of Parliament as a very important issue. Information, as I say, will be sought, and that will be done very soon, to see if there is any updated material that we can bring to the chamber.

Hon. George van Roggen: I have a supplementary question, honourable senators. May I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether I have his assurance that the cabinet, in considering this matter, will give full weight to the cogent and rational reasons given by the Canadian Transport Commission for its decision. The commission gave full weight to the fact that Air Canada and CP Air are Canada's two designated international carriers; that as such they need a sufficient base within Canada to maintain their international operations; and that it will destroy the effectiveness of the regional airlines policy of this country if, every time a national carrier is given a national route, a provincial carrier is allowed to go outside its own area. I would like the assurance of the government that those considerations will be kept in the forefront in making this decision, and that the decision will be made in the best interests of the airlines in Canada, and not on purely political grounds.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the observations of Senator van Roggen will certainly be brought to the attention of my cabinet colleagues.

GRAIN

TWO-PRICE WHEAT

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, and it relates to an inquiry by Senator Buckwold yesterday as to when the government intends to eliminate the two-price wheat system in Canada. It would appear that the domestic price of wheat is now lower than the price of wheat in the international market.

Senator Buckwold referred to a document dated May 9 that he had received from the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, stating that the Canadian farmer has recently been subsidizing the Canadian consumer to the tune of almost a dollar a bushel. The minister corrected him, by saying that as of the day before it was more like 52 cents a bushel.

My question to the minister is: How long has this situation prevailed? How long has the Canadian producer been subsidizing the Canadian consumer, and what did the minister mean by his use of the word "burden" when replying to the effect that it is the intention of the government to remove this burden from western producers, so that soon they will no longer be required to bear it?

Does the minister mean that the 52-cent difference is a reduction in the profit that the western producer makes, or is that the amount by which the price to the consumer is below the cost of production? The minister has not replied yet to my question of some weeks ago concerning the cost of production.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, this present policy will come to an end for eastern wheat on June 30, and for western wheat on July 31.

A very substantial part of the crop goes into domestic milling for domestic consumption. It is a fact that there is a burden on western producers at the present time because they, and not the public treasury, are subsidizing the consumer. It is my objective—and, I believe, the objective of the government—to remove this burden from the wheat producers, because I think it is unfair to ask one particular sector of the country to bear that kind of burden.

As far as the cost of production of wheat is concerned, I had a question from Senator Bosa some time ago on that subject. All of the experts in the country are working diligently on the matter. So far there has been no agreement whatever on what the actual cost of production is, but it is certainly, in my judgment, very much above the amount of $5 that is today being charged for domestic wheat.

INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE TO SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I would like to pose a question to the Leader of the Government.

Earlier today, in response to a question from one of our colleagues, and in his suave, smooth and capable manner, he said that all promises and proposals of both the previous government and the present government would be gone into thoroughly to see what are valid and what are not valid. With this I fully agree.

In light of that statement, and despite what the Minister of State for Economic Development said yesterday, or the day before, with regard to the amount that was promised for the renovation and rejuvenation of the Sydney Steel Corporation plant, may I ask the leader why, since the present government promised $50 million to Sysco for modernization, and the opposition leader, on behalf of the former government, promised $50 million for the same purpose, and assuming that both promises were based on plans agreed to by all parties, why is there such a delay in fulfilling this commitment to the Sydney Steel Corporation? We have over 3,000 steelworkers who do not know if they are going to have a job tomorrow, next week, or a month from now, or how soon something may happen.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Muir, understandably, has great concern with respect to this matter. He has long represented his province of Nova Scotia in the other place and here. Senator Graham and other senators from the Atlantic provinces are also making very forceful representations on this particular issue.

Senator Asselin: Name them.

Senator Perrault: I might say that a rather full and, what I felt to be, excellent explanation was provided yesterday by my colleague, Senator Olson, on the issues referred to in this question. The present state of the market and many other complex economic factors must be considered before making a decision of this kind, as Senator Muir is aware; but there is great concern on the part of this government for the steel industry in that area.

Senator Muir: I realize that Senator Graham has expressed his anxiety about the Sydney Steel Corporation for many years, as have many others. He has done his utmost. However, if we are to go by the electronic and written media, there appears to be much confusion as to where the true explanation lies at the moment. Would the Leader of the Government try to clarify that situation soon?

Senator Perrault: That, of course, was the essence of the clarification provided yesterday by my colleague the Minister of State for Economic Development.

AIRLINES

APPLICATION OF EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS TO EXTEND SERVICE

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government that is supplementary to that of Senator van Roggen and the answer given.

When the Leader of the Government is drawing to the attention of the Minister of Transport the suggestions of Senator van Roggen, would he at the same time please draw to the attention of the minister the following considerations: Eastern Provincial Airways, in financial terms, is one of the struggling regional airlines of Canada. It falls within the policy of government to assist the regional airlines of Canada in the allocation of routes. Eastern Provincial Airways for a long period of time, and predating the interest of CP Air, which has come very late to the maritime area, has not only been applying for routes of this kind, but has been giving excellent service within the region on routes on which it loses money.

The CTC ruling, which is one of the stupidest I have heard of their many stupid rulings, goes so far as to suggest—no, not to suggest, to state—that within two years it will not only be giving CP Air the rights of the Halifax-Toronto run, but also will permit it to go into third-line carrier competition between Halifax and Montreal. This is, of course, a diminishing and less profitable run than it has been in past years. This would be added to the competition that EPA already has from Air Canada.

Finally, would the Leader of the Government draw to the attention of the Minister of Transport and his colleagues that the connection between Halifax and Toronto is very clearly a regional connection; that the element of business between those two cities has increased very substantially, particularly in relation to the other run that I have just mentioned; and that this is probably the one major factor that will keep EPA from going to the wall as it very nearly did two years ago when it received no assistance from the Government of Canada?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I believe I am correct in assuming that Senator McElman is a supporter of Eastern Provincial Airways. Perhaps I am wrong, but I felt that was the essence of his representation this afternoon. Equally, may I say, with respect to Senator van Roggen, that it seems to me that he is just as enthusiastic a supporter of Canadian Pacific Air Lines in its aspirations to extend its transcontinental service to Halifax.

It seems to me that the challenge is to separate flights of fancy from fact. If this matter does come before cabinet, I am sure all of these representations will be given fair attention.

INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE TO CHRYSLER CORPORATION

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I should like to reply to a question asked by Senator Phillips during the Question Period of May 14 concerning rebates being offered to purchasers of Chrysler products in the United States.

As I indicated in a preliminary answer to this question, the subject of rebates is a marketing decision which is a responsibility of the company. Therefore, it was not one of the elements of the recent negotiations with Chrysler Canada. I should like to point out, however, that the rebates being offered to U.S. purchasers of Chrysler products should prove to be of considerable benefit to Canada since about 80 per cent of Chrysler Canada's production is marketed in the United States.

I should also like to stress that one of the government's objectives in providing assistance to Chrysler Canada was to ensure maximum autonomy for the Canadian operation, and it would therefore not be desirable to attempt to tie Chrysler's hands or Chrysler Canada's marketing strategy to that of the American firm. The U.S. decision is obviously designed to deal with conditions in their marketplace, conditions which are considerably different from those in Canada sometimes.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

WAR PENSIONS, COMPENSATION AND ALLOWANCES

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on May 14, Senator Marshall made reference to Bill C-28. He asked what the government's intentions were with respect to re-introducing the bill to allow pensions to be paid to widows of World War I veterans.

As the honourable senator is aware, Bill C-28 was introduced in December 1979 but did not proceed because of the dissolution of Parliament. The government hopes to recommend new legislation which will benefit veterans and their dependents, but the final decision on what will be proposed has not been made.

I should like to thank Senator Marshall for his representations, and assure him that his views will be taken into consideration before a final decision is made.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

RENEWAL OF NORAD AGREEMENT—REFERENCE TO PARLIAMENT

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on May 13 Senator Macquarrie asked if the government was giving consideration to the expressed desire of the U.S. that the NORAD agreement be re-negotiated before the one-year extension expires.

As Senator Macquarrie is aware, the matter has been referred to a committee of the House of Commons. That committee is to consider Canadian policy with respect to future defence co-operation with the United States in the North American region with particular reference to air defence and related arrangements embodied in and flowing from the NORAD agreement. That committee has also been asked to report no later than December 31, 1980.

NORAD HEADQUARTERS—VISIT OF CANADIAN PARLIAMENTARIANS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on May 8 Senator Grosart asked if there was a recent official visit of Canadian parliamentarians to the NORAD headquarters. If so, what was the composition of the group; what was the purpose, and what was the result?

There have been two recent official visits to NORAD headquarters by Canadian parliamentarians. Senator Douglas D. Everett accompanied the Honourable F. L. Jobin, Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba, on a visit to NORAD headquarters on April 28-30, 1980, for briefings as representatives of the province which hosts the headquarters of the Air Command of the Canadian Armed Forces. They had been invited by Lieutenant General Kenneth E. Lewis, the Canadian Deputy Commander of NORAD, who was recently appointed by the Minister of National Defence to be Commander of Air Command in Winnipeg.

The Honourable George Hees visited NORAD headquarters December 9-11, 1979, for briefings and familiarization following his appointment as Chairman of the Canadian Section of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, Canada-United States.

PRIVILEGE

THE HON. HAZEN ARGUE, MINISTER OF STATE FOR THE CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of remarks made in the other place on May 12 by Mr. Bill McKnight, the honourable member for Kindersley-Lloydminster. At page 939 of Hansard of the House of Commons he is reported as follows:

> I have found it very difficult, also, when I have attempted to go through other channels for other pieces of information because the senator in the other House who is responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board never seems to be there. Because of the importance of the Canadian Wheat Board to the people of my constituency, I want to keep them informed; but I am finding it very difficult.

Honourable senators, since I have accepted the responsibility of Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board I have endeavoured to be available at all times, or at most times, for members of the Senate or members of the House of Commons to contact me. As far as my office knows, and certainly as far as I know, no letter has come to my office from this particular member of the House of Commons; there has been no telephone call; there has been no proposal of a meeting; and there has been no contact of which I am aware. I will admit that perhaps it is possible that some effort was made at some time to reach me, but as far as I know, and as far as my office is aware, no such effort has been made.

My office is open at 8.30 in the morning, and the last person on the staff is likely to be there until 6.30 p.m.

Since the Senate convened, I believe I have been absent on three occasions. The first occasion was an evening session when I was attending a banquet sponsored by the Indian Associations of Canada. I felt that attending that meeting was a responsible thing to do. I also spent two days with other ministers of the Economic Development Committee.

Senator Asselin: In Vancouver?

Senator Argue: In Vancouver, and in Prince Rupert I had the good fortune to view the proposed site for the large terminal. In doing so I feel that I was exercising my responsibilities.

● (1510)

I am not here to quarrel with this member or any other member of the House of Commons. I want to say that there have been many Conservative members of the House of Commons who have interviewed me, who have come to my office or talked to me on the telephone, and I considered their representations in as fair a manner as I possibly could. I have had contact with New Democratic Party members of Parliament from western Canada. I have had some contact with Liberal members of the House of Commons, as you might expect, and I hope that at all appropriate times I am available for interviews, and to hear representations from members of the other house and from members of the Senate.

[Senator Perrault.]

TWO-PRICE WHEAT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board) moved the second reading of Bill S-6, to amend the Two-Price Wheat Act.

He said: Honourable senators, in response yesterday to a question by Senator Roblin, I said that I believed this bill was in precisely the same terms as a bill that had been introduced by the previous administration. I find that that is correct. On October 18, 1979, Bill C-7 was given first reading in the House of Commons, and it was in precisely the same terms as the bill now before the house.

In response to another question by Senator Roblin yesterday, I said that my information is that this bill is really a technical bill. It is required to remove an obligation that the government has had regarding two-price wheat, since the payment of the subsidy was discontinued, I believe, on or about December 19, 1978. This bill, if passed, removes that obligation. Whatever system will be followed in the next crop year with regard to two-price wheat has yet to be finalized and made public, but I think it is wise to have a discussion of this bill under way. When I am in a position to make an announcement as to the new policy, I shall certainly do so.

Perhaps I might give a brief history of the operation of the two-price wheat system. This came about initially after repeated demands by western producers to the effect that there be established in Canada a price for wheat going into domestic consumption that bears a fair relationship to the cost of production, and that it not be tied exclusively to the world market.

The minimum price that was provided goes back as far as 1969. It was then fixed at $1.95 a bushel. This was raised to $3 a bushel in 1972, and on September 12, 1973, it was again increased, to $3.25 a bushel. During 1977-78 the government made supplementary payments to producers to support domestic producer returns at $3.55 a bushel. In the fall of 1978 the minimum price was set at the current level of $4 a bushel. In 1973 the government combined the floor price for producers with a consumer subsidy payable when export wheat prices were about $3.25 a bushel. Authority for the payments under this program was provided by the Two-Price Wheat Act. A maximum subsidy of $1.75 a bushel was established which, in turn, set a maximum domestic price of $5 a bushel for producers. In the case of durum wheat, the domestic price was allowed to vary between $3.25 a bushel and $5.75 a bushel, and the subsidy was payable between $5.75 and $7.50 a bushel.

Under these subsidy arrangements, the government made payments totaling $396 million between 1973 and 1978—all this to the benefit of consumers. In the fall of 1978, as one of a number of measures designed to restrain expenditures, the government decided to terminate subsidy payments under the Two-Price Wheat Act. At the same time, a new domestic pricing scheme was introduced by establishing, through regulations under the Canadian Wheat Board Act, a minimum price of $4 a bushel, and a maximum price of $5 a bushel, for wheat sold for human consumption. The minimum price for durum was also raised to $4 a bushel, but the maximum was left at $7.50 a bushel. This action continued to provide a minimum price for the benefit of producers, and to protect consumers against wheat prices rising above $5 a bushel or durum prices rising above $7.50 a bushel.

In this respect, the maximum domestic wheat price has remained at $5 a bushel since 1973, although average market prices have been significantly higher throughout this crop year.

The purpose of Bill S-6 is to remove any obligation on the government to pay the subsidy in light of the changes made in the domestic pricing system. Consumers have been paying up to a maximum of $5 a bushel. This has resulted in some increases in bread prices, although a number of other cost items have also contributed to price increases. It is estimated that the impact on the consumer price index of the change in wheat prices was an increase of .04 per cent, while the food component of the index is estimated to have increased by 0.1 per cent during the three months following the removal of the subsidy in 1978.

As I have said, consideration is being given to a new policy to take the place of the current one. I had consultation as recently as this morning with representatives of the baking industry, the milling industry, farm organizations, and the Canadian Association of Consumers. After considering their submissions, and after giving the policy further thought, I hope that within a relatively short period of time I will be in a position to announce the new policy in relation to two-price wheat.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to thank the minister for what seems to me to be a very fair and accurate presentation of the history that lies behind this bill. I should like to offer one or two reflections on what has happened and what he has said.

The bill itself is mercifully short, a rare sort of bill these days. It has three main effects, first, to make the period during which the subsidies the minister referred to are payable about a year-and-a-half shorter than anticipated by the original statutes; secondly, to repeal the Two-Price Wheat Act entirely some time between now and July 1 next; and, thirdly, to give retroactive effect to the amendment itself with respect to the whole bill.

As the minister hinted rather delicately, I guess this bill could be considered to be a fallout from the Prime Minister's famous television speech after he had been inspired by Chancellor Schmidt on his visit to Germany to try to put the finances of Canada into some kind of better shape. I say "fallout" because, in fact, his effort has been a lamentable failure. We all know what happened to the finances of Canada after he made that speech, and I am afraid we see nothing more hopeful on the horizon today.

In any case, make the speech he did, and, as a result of that, the government decided that they would cut part of their expenditure obligations, as the minister has described, by putting a stop to the subsidy on domestically consumed wheat that was provided for. I think the saving was anticipated to be about $100 million a year.

The minister did not go into this point, but I should like to know whether he has a legal opinion to inform him as to the position of the government if they were asked to show how they were entitled to reduce that subsidy or abolish it. I presume the minister must feel that legally he is in a difficult position, otherwise undoubtedly, being the good parliamentarian he is, he would not bring in a bill that was retroactive for about two years; he must feel that there is a bit of a strain there some place, and I suspect there are a couple of hundred million dollars at issue there. When he is replying, would he tell us what the position of the government is on this matter of liability for subsidies they have refused to pay, even though by statute they appear to be bound to pay them?

Something else happened, too, when the original decision was made to eliminate the subsidy. The government decided, as the minister has very fairly stated, that by regulation—not even an order in council, I suspect, but by regulation—under the Wheat Board Act they would bring in a system of minimum prices and maximum prices for bread wheat consumed in Canada. The effect of this was that they would set a floor of $4 a bushel for wheat consumed in Canada in this way, and a ceiling of $5, no doubt in the hope that the price of wheat would fluctuate between those two levels. In any case, as the minister has said, the price of wheat went over $5; it is over $5 now; it has been over $5 for some time, and, as a result, to the extent that the price exceeds $5 the producers have been subsidizing the millers of Canada for wheat consumed domestically.

I am curious to know just how one approaches this matter. When the original regulation was made by the Canadian Wheat Board to give effect to that, was it reviewed by the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee? It seems to me that it would have been useful if it was. After all, these people were being asked to consent, in effect, to a tax by regulation, to put it in its most extreme form, because if the price goes over $5 they are the ones who will suffer. They will have to forego the difference between the world price or the market price at that time and the $5 for which the Canadian millers can buy wheat from them. I should like to know if the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee was consulted, and, if they were, what they had to say.

I cannot recall whether or not at the time the government issued a warning to anybody that there was a possibility that the price of $5 would be exceeded, with the consequences we have just stated. I suspect no warning was issued, and it seems to me that we should have some examination of the facts of that particular matter.

This brings up an interesting point. The minister has expressed considerable sympathy with the farmers in the west because of the fact that they have been in this position of subsidizing the consumers, and I think that reflects credit on him. I would ask him if he intends to do anything about it, because it would be quite possible to increase the ceiling, for example, from $5 to $6 if he wished to do that, and it could no doubt have retroactive application, although I don't think much of that. It certainly could prevail from today until the end of the current crop year. That would save the producers harmless at least for the rest of this period with respect to the contribution they are making to the cost of living in Canada.

I have another suggestion for the minister, which is that perhaps he would like to take the total loss of the producers and somehow put it back into the Wheat Board pool. I don't know how much that is. I have seen figures of $60 million for the current crop year; I have seen figures of $300,000 a day with respect to it. I don't know what they are, but I am sure they can be calculated.

My second question to the minister is on the matter of restitution. First, I would recommend to him some consideration of raising the ceiling from the $5 to $6 right away, and at least help the farmers out to that extent between this date and the end of the crop year. Even better, if he would be inclined to consider reimbursing them for this income they have foregone, I think it would be a matter which all concerned would be interested to hear something about. That deals with this question of the subsidy by producers of consumers.

I should also like to delve a little more deeply into the minister's intentions for the future. This bill abolishes the two-price system altogether. I take it from what the minister has said that this is not the permanent situation that he envisages. Personally, I think a very good case could be made for getting away from all of this effort here, for simply going back to the market system and doing away with this particular principle. As long as we have it only two things will arise: either the government has to put in a subsidy, if it is to be any good to anybody; or secondly, somebody in the marketplace, either the consumer or the producer, is going to subsidize somebody else.

As long as you have this two-price system, with a government subsidy you know there will be a drain on the public expenditure. If we deal with the situation as we have it now, where there is no subsidy, then we know that if the ceiling or the floor is reached somebody will be subsidizing somebody else. If the price goes below the floor, then the consumer subsidizes the producer; if the price goes above the ceiling, then the producer subsidizes the consumer. Well, what do you do about that?

A difficult question, too, is at what levels to set these prices if you are interested in setting a ceiling or a floor. The 1973 floor was $3.25. That is some six or seven years ago. If that floor were to be marked up to take into account the increase in the costs of production on the farm since that time, my calculation is that there would be a current floor price of $5.56. That is based on certain studies made by the Department of Agriculture and others in the country on what has happened to the costs of production over that period. It illustrates the difficulties you get into if there is an inflexible floor and an inflexible ceiling enshrined in your act, or indeed in your regulations, and they're not related to the costs of production, so that eventually it is found that somebody is not doing very well out of this arrangement.

I was interested to hear the minister say that he had had some consultations with the bakery industry. I am thinking particularly of the export trade. There is a small export trade, I think, in bakery products. Possibly they will be affected, depending on what the minister decides to do. There is another form of grain export in gluten or in starch, which also is affected by prices for the domestic product, which the minister has been explaining to us. I would very much hope that their representations can be given favourable consideration.

I should like to go so far as to suggest, although I don't know whether the minister would agree with me, that if this bill went to committee, that would be a fine time to invite these people to come and make their representations. We do this on other subjects, such as the Bank Act and matters of that sort. It might be enlightening to all of us if we sent this bill to committee and invited the people concerned who are affected by it to come and let us know how they have been affected by it over the past years, and what their recommendations might be for the future in connection with this piece of legislation.

I should also like to ask the minister if he would be inclined, perhaps in the committee, to give us some more information about another factor that bears on this legislation. In section 5(3) of the Two-Price Wheat Act, which we are now amending, there is a provision whereby the minister is directed, on an annual basis and in consultation with producers, to consider the provisions of the act and—this is interesting—all related regulations that may have been made with respect to it, and to make recommendations as may be appropriate in the light of prevailing costs of production of wheat and returns to producers.

I, for one, would be very much interested to know, first of all, if that annual review has been made from time to time, and, secondly, what the results of it were. I am not aware that any report has been made to Parliament with respect to those findings, but the minister might consider the possibility of letting the committee in on the findings with respect to this annual review.

It seems to me that if we had that information, if we had the opportunity to listen to those who are affected by the legislation, and if we had, particularly, the views of the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee on these matters, we would be in a good position not only to assist the minister in the passage of this bill, which I do not oppose, but also to help him with his consideration of what new piece of legislation and what policy should be adopted for the future.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if Senator Argue speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I suppose had I chosen to adjourn the debate at this point I might be in a position to provide, at a later date, more satisfactory answers to some of the questions Senator Roblin has raised. I am happy to do the best I can—

Senator Roblin: Take your time. Adjourn the debate, if you wish.

Senator Argue: I could make further inquiries and speak at another time, but I am happy to close the debate now and have the bill progress.

Senator Flynn: If it is your intention to have it referred to committee, you can make your replies there.

Senator Roblin: Personally, I would like the minister to take his time. If I have asked questions which require a little research, I would be quite happy to wait for his answers.

Senator Argue: On that basis, perhaps I should adjourn the debate. I certainly can provide answers to some of the questions at this point. However, on the legal point raised, I am not in a position at this point to provide a legal reply. I imagine that this bill is in the category of many bills that we consider from time to time; namely, that it will be retroactive. But I would be happy to get legal advice on that particular point.

I would also be pleased to determine whether or not the advisory committee had an input when this policy was changed previously and to look into the further question as to whether or not an annual review has been made in the past and, if so, when and what the result was. On that basis, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Argue, debate adjourned.

The Senate resumed from yesterday, consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's Speech at the Opening of the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament, and the motion of Senator Rousseau, seconded by Senator Hays, for an Address in reply thereto.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, while I have spoken in the Senate on numerous occasions, mainly in response to questions respecting my former portfolio of National Revenue, today I rise to make my first major address in this house. May I say at the outset how honoured I am to be a member of this distinguished body, surrounded by so many of Canada's most eminent statesmen and women.

I have on many occasions spoken words of praise about our most able Speaker, yet I have not until now had an opportunity to make my comments a matter of record. I would therefore now add my words of praise and congratulations to those who have preceded me in this debate.

I should also like at this time to congratulate those three of our number who have been appointed to cabinet. All three are performing tremendously well in their respective portfolios.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Guay: I also wish to congratulate the mover and seconder of this motion.

I am pleased to be able to serve in this chamber as a representative of St. Boniface, Manitoba. As most historians have related, St. Boniface is the cradle of the west. Lord Selkirk invited Monseigneur Provencher to St. Boniface, and it was from St. Boniface that Canadian explorers and missionaries departed on their discovery of what would become our western Canadian heritage.

The last senator to represent St. Boniface was Senator John Power Howden, whose contribution to the public life of this country spanned some 35 years, 20 of which were spent in the House of Commons and 15 in the Senate. While that in itself was a remarkable achievement, an even greater achievement was to bring me into the world. He was our family doctor in St. Boniface, and he was a tremendous doctor.

Honourable senators, as I look back over my political career I feel a sense of personal achievement. From a modest beginning as an entrepreneurial member of the francophone minority of St. Boniface, I went on to serve my city as mayor and, ultimately, my country as a cabinet minister. I thank my family and friends for their support; I thank my colleagues for their encouragement, and I thank my leader, the Right Honourable the Prime Minister of this country, for his trust. I am both delighted and honoured to be able to continue my service as a member of this esteemed body. My only hope is that I will be able to display the dedication and selflessness of my predecessor.

While I may serve St. Boniface, I also serve, as each of you, regardless of party, serves, all other parts of Canada. Together we represent Canada's rural and urban communities, her various provinces and diverse regions, as well as her minorities, thereby ensuring that each segment of our country has a voice in our nation's capital.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, I would also like to talk today about the attitude of Francophones outside Quebec towards the Quebec referendum. They feel themselves directly concerned by the referendum which will be held in Quebec on May 20. Of course, it is impossible to describe in a few words the attitude of Francophones outside Quebec. However, I believe it necessary to make a few comments about some of the positions which have been taken and which have caused rather strong reactions in certain circles.

First of all, we shall look at the position of the Fédération des Francophones hors-Québec, the FFHQ, in the referendum debate. Then we shall examine the positions taken by the various leaders of provincial francophone associations.

Following a meeting of its various groups held in Montreal on March 29 and 30 to determine its position in the referendum debate, the FFHQ let it be known that it would not support the NO option for the referendum and that it had noted a strong evolution of its members towards the YES option. In a statement published at that time, the FFHQ explained that while its members are divided as to the possibility of supporting explicitly the YES option for the referendum, it had come to a consensus as to the impossibility of working actively for the NO option. This statement mentioned several reasons to justify this position.

The FFHQ asserted that it did not commit itself to the NO because it recognized that a YES to the referendum question was not a YES for sovereignty association. To support this interpretation, it mentioned the formal promise of the Lévesque government to hold a second referendum. On the other hand, the FFHQ noted that it would be difficult for it to give its unconditional support to the concept of sovereignty association, which it considers for the moment, and I quote:

> —insufficiently explicit about the status and the hope of improving the situation of francophone communities outside Quebec.

The FFHQ concluded its statement on its position in the referendum debate by giving the following warning to the provincial authorities, and I quote:

> Our provincial governments will have to express clearly their political desire to meet our aspirations before the referendum if they want us to reconsider our position. Otherwise, we shall continue to be a "people without a country", and we shall have to come down explicitly and unequivocally for a YES to any negotiation which would inevitably result in the formulation of a new agreement based on the principle of equality of the francophone and anglophone nations without any prejudice to the rights of the native people.

The position taken officially by the FFHQ did not prevent some of its member associations from taking their own positions as provincial groups. For instance, the executive of the Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta decided to take a position of non-interference in the Quebec referendum to respect the right of Quebecers to determine their own future. On the other hand, the Association canadienne-française de l'Ontario—ACFO—decided to "monitor" most particularly the comments of the Ontario government spokesman about the status of Francophones in this province and to rectify any mistake if need be.

However, it is the decision of the leaders of the provincial associations of Saskatchewan, New Brunswick and Manitoba to support the YES option which received the most attention. However, if we look at how these positions have been expressed, we can only recognize that they show the same ambiguities as the position taken by the FFHQ. Finally, it is important to take into account the reactions generated by those supporters of the YES side among the people those provincial associations claim to represent.

I would like to repeat that in those associations it is the leadership, perhaps I should use the word "executive", but it is the leadership, not the membership of the groups in the provinces. After a lengthy discussion the board of the Association culturelle franco-canadienne of Saskatchewan unanimously decided to support the YES side at a meeting held in the month of February. The executive of the association then stated that its support for the YES side in the Quebec referendum should be disassociated from Mr. Ryan's position on the new constitution as well as Mr. Lévesque's sovereignty-association. They said:

> So YES for us finally means a chance to get on with the discussion of our rights and our place in confederation in a somewhat more open manner with the prospect of possible changes. Whether you like it or not, and even if that is not what it truly means, a NO in the referendum will be interpreted as satisfaction on the part of Quebecers (and consequently of all French Canadians, they said) with the present situation. English Canada is only waiting for that NO to bury the whole issue as quickly as possible, forget about any serious discussion of Canadian confederation and return to the status quo. So a NO in the referendum could very much mean NO to change. And the absence of change, the status quo, quickly and surely leads to the disappearance of Francophones.

According to the executive the ACFC of Saskatchewan, the only solution is for Quebecers to support the YES side and hope that the negotiations which will follow will bring considerable changes in the Constitution, thus giving "Fransaskois" certain rights that will enable them to survive. The executive of the association considers that a YES vote does not necessarily mean a mandate for sovereignty-association but a repudiation of the present Constitution.

The position taken by the ACFC is far from being endorsed by all "Fransaskois". Indeed, during a special program broadcast by the local television station, we were able to see that most Francophones in the Gravelbourg area rejected a YES vote. While wishing for a reform of the Constitution, they expressed their fear about the future if Quebec supported the YES side. Those "Fransaskois" think that in spite of a negative vote in Quebec the degree of dissatisfaction across the country will force governments to renew the Constitution. On the contrary, they are convinced that a positive vote in the referendum would be the first step towards independence of the birth-place of the francophone presence in North America. They do feel that without Quebec everything is loss for them.

The Société des Acadiens du Nouveau-Brunswick—no I am wrong, I should say the leaders of the Société des Acadiens du Nouveau-Brunswick because again you cannot blame all Acadians, quite the contrary—announced its decision to support the YES side in the referendum on sovereignty-association even though "the constitutional plan of the Lévesque government does not fully meet the aspirations of Acadians". The president of that organization stated that a victory of the NO side in the referendum would be interpreted as support for the status quo and that the "status quo leads directly to the assimilation of Francophones and their disappearance sooner or later."

Mr. LeBlanc also said that Acadians and other Francophones outside Quebec should take part in the negotiations for a new agreement that would meet not only the needs of Quebecers but also the needs of French-speaking communities outside Quebec. According to him, a positive vote in the referendum represents the only way of getting the process of constitutional revision moving. He stated that the decision of the Société des Acadiens should be interpreted as a message to Canada expressing a desire for change by the Acadians of New Brunswick.

In an editorial in l'Evangéline, Mr. Paul-Emile Richard suggested that the Société des Acadiens du Nouveau-Brunswick is kidding itself if it thinks that the PQ is interested in negotiating a new confederative pact under which official language minorities would get better treatment. The editorialist suggested that the association did not have to get involved in the business of another province. In addition, he said he did not understand why the association felt it had to give its support, no matter how "qualified", to a process that could engulf the Acadians if it were implemented. That analysis led Mr. Richard to wonder whether the association was working in the best interests of Acadians or in the interests of someone else. Finally, in concluding his editorial, he asked whether the "qualified" YES of the association reflected the views of Acadians as a whole.

It was during a press conference held at the cultural centre of St. Boniface on April 1 that the officials of the Société francophone-manitobaine announced that they were supporting the YES side in the Quebec referendum. The president, Mrs. Gilberte Proteau, indicated that it was a YES to a mandate to renegotiate the Constitution and that the association did not take side about the separation of Quebec. Mrs. Proteau explained that the YES was necessary because the present Constitution is economically discriminatory against the country and culturally discriminatory against Francophones.

To recall how the association arrived at its position, it should be said that a motion suggesting a review on the effects of YES or NO in the Quebec referendum, for the Manitoba Francophones had been passed following a close vote on March 23, during the annual convention of the Société franco-manitobaine. According to the newspapers at the time, the deliberations, before the vote by show of hands, had revealed that there were wide differences of opinion among the 750 persons in attendance. Now, on April 1, at the press conference she held, the president of the association stated that it was on the basis of that motion that the executive committee had reached a decision on the stand to be taken, and that the decision had been unanimous.

The position taken by the executive committee provoked strong reactions in various franco-manitoban circles where it is doubted that the position of the committee is that of the majority of the French-speaking population in the province. Those reactions led to the founding of the Pro-Canadian Committee which initiated a petition in favour of a united and bilingual Canada. On April 26, the president of the committee, Mr. Maurice Prince, announced that in two weeks of activity his group had gathered the names of some 3,000 Franco-Manitobans and Francophones living in Manitoba. I congratulate Mr. Prince, because since April 26 he has accomplished a lot among our Franco-Manitobans. It has become obvious that the vast majority, that is, a high percentage of Franco-Manitobans, would not consider saying YES, because if they had to vote, they would vote NO, as Quebec Francophones will in fact do next Tuesday.

Francophones outside Quebec certainly cannot be blamed for exerting pressures to get the most out of the present confrontation between Quebec and English Canada, and for trying to speed up negotiations for a constitutional reform that would take into account the reality of the two founding peoples. However, one must deplore the fact that the stands taken by some Francophones outside Quebec have given more weight to the argument, appealing but false, according to which a YES in the referendum expresses support for a renewed federation.

Those who claim that voting YES would give renewed impetus towards renewed federalism do not understand, I am sure, that sovereignty is the very denial of federalism.

[English]

I should like to speak briefly on another matter of interest, namely, the decentralization of federal departments and services. The current emphasis on decentralized government in Canada began in 1968. During the election campaign of that year, Mr. Trudeau emphasized the concept of "participatory democracy," which caused major political and bureaucratic interest in making government more sensitive to people's needs. Decentralization of government departments and decision-making from the Ottawa-Hull area to the various regions and provinces across the country was seen as one means of making federal policies and programs more responsive to local needs.

The Western Economic Opportunities Conference held in Calgary in 1973 gave added momentum to federal decentralization policies. At the conference, western premiers complained about Ottawa's continued disregard for regional needs in its policies, and in the way the federal government delivered programs in the west. From a political point of view, many observers believe that the conference was designed to re-win the west for the Liberal Party after its poor showing in the 1972 general election. Decentralization has thus been thought of as one important method of eliminating the feeling of alienation in western Canada.

When the President of the Treasury Board announced the creation of the government task force on decentralization in September 1975, he suggested that decentralization policies would be given "the highest priority". The move from Ottawa to smaller communities across Canada would make the latter more attractive places in which to live, and hence help to offset the concentration of the population into ever fewer metropolitan areas. Decentralization would prevent government from becoming "Big Brother" in future years and thus minimize public alienation.

Mr. Chrétien at that time also stressed the importance of decentralization as a factor in strengthening national unity in western Canada as well as Quebec. He said:

> But alienation exists in other parts of Canada, especially in the west. The reason for this is that the federal government appears insensitive and unresponsive, just as it used to seem to Quebecers.

A further objective of the plan to decentralize became apparent as specific moves were announced. In August 1975 the Minister of Supply and Services decided to relocate the 250-man Cheque Redemption Control Division of the department from Ottawa to Matane, Quebec. He explained the choice of Matane in part by the following consideration:

> Locating this division in Matane will create 250 permanent jobs in a region where work is very seasonal and where the chronically high unemployment rate has exceeded 30 per cent in winter.

Although only 250 jobs were involved, the annual payroll of about $2.3 million would supply a much needed boost to a local economy suffering from high unemployment. Decentralization was thus an aspect of the continuing federal effort to reduce regional economic disparities, and to inject jobs and money into depressed communities to prevent their gradual depopulation.

At the same time that the relocations were announced, it was stressed that they would be completed over a long period of time—three to five years—to ensure that they could be carried out in an orderly manner and to minimize the economic impact on the National Capital Region. For this reason, most of the intended moves were either still in progress or had not yet begun when there was a change of government in 1979.

The Canadian public service is still much more highly centralized than either its United States or British counterpart. As much as possible there is still the need to ensure that Canadians from coast to coast have access to the same services and treatment as are available in Ottawa, without having to refer every issue back to the capital, much less visit it. It is only by accelerating the decentralization of the Public Service and by creating strong regional power bases within it that it can be made more responsive and sensitive to the interests and concerns of the whole country.

The problem is particularly acute in the most senior echelons where too many officials have never served in various parts of the country, but have largely built their careers at headquarters in Ottawa. So long as a disproportionate number of the most senior and influential government positions are concentrated in the National Capital Region, the most competent and ambitious of young and middle-ranking public servants will attempt to be posted here as early as possible in their careers, and will strongly resist any suggestion that they accept a position in the maritimes, Quebec, the west or the north as a blight on their future promotion. The opposite must become the case. Varied service in different regions of the country must become an essential qualification for promotion to the most senior policy and decision-making positions.

Real decision-making power must be decentralized as well as sections of departments if career opportunities are to be created in various parts of the country, and if regional alienation is to be ended. How can local people and the provinces have confidence in the regional offices if the senior managers are seen as little more than post office boxes and messengers for Ottawa? Why indeed should deputy ministers in Ottawa respect the regional input into the national decision-making process if the regional officers have little independent authority and are always subject to having their local and regional decisions overruled from Ottawa?

It is essential that if we are to have decentralization, and let Canadians know that we are providing them with the same service they would obtain in Ottawa, then, whenever a regional manager makes a decision, that decision must not be interfered with by Ottawa.

While the policy of relocating parts of departments and federal agencies to smaller communities across Canada is desirable, I repeat that it should not become an excuse for avoiding the development of strong provincial and regional centres of power within the federal public service. Without such centres, it will be too easy for a practice of "diffuse the physical plant but continue to dominate the individual component from Ottawa" to become the rule. To prevent this from happening, it may be necessary to reorganize departments more along regional lines than is presently the case, or even to combine the activities of several departments at the local level. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion is currently the only one which seems to have substantially decentralized its decision-making process, and to have developed a greater responsiveness to local and provincial needs and priorities as a result. The Employment and Immigration Commission also seems to have moved in this direction, but to a lesser degree.

• (1600)

If decentralization is to become, as it should be, a real factor in the development of national unity, in ending regional alienation and in enhancing the federal presence in all parts of the country, the same must be able to be said of almost all departments and agencies.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, for Senator Tremblay, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 1, 1980-81

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-29, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1981.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. A. Irvine Barrow: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move this bill be read a second time now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Barrow: Honourable senators, this bill, Bill C-29, introduced today, provides for interim supply for the main estimates and full supply for supplementary estimates (A) for 1980-81. Both these estimates were tabled in the Senate on April 23, 1980, and were referred shortly after to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. The supplementary estimates were discussed in committee on May 7 with Treasury Board officials, and were reported to this chamber the next day.

I should like to deal first with the main estimates, which total $58.437 billion on a net basis. Of this amount, $33.499 billion is authorized by on-going legislation, and $24.938 billion is to be voted. This bill will provide $20.3 billion of the amounts to be voted in order to meet the requirements of the Government of Canada to December 31, 1980. It also contains a general request for nine-twelfths of all the votes and specific requests for additional one-twelfths for some 51 votes, including seven for which twelve-twelfths, which is a full year, are required. All added requirements are due to the seasonal nature of the programs and the need in other instances to make payments before the end of December. The review of the main estimates by the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance will take place during the interim supply period.

● (1105)

I should now like to turn to supplementary estimates (A) for 1980-81, which total $230,432,194. As stated in committee, these estimates are required to deal with problems resulting from disruption of the normal supply process and the legislative process by the two general elections during the past year. They include some urgent votes of a legislative character which were carried over from previous years' estimates because they were never approved by Parliament. They also include some new items which were not part of the main estimates that were financed in whole or in part by special warrant and must now be included in this bill. These supplementary estimates contain seven $1 votes. The National Finance Committee was provided with a listing and explanation of these votes, which can be categorized as follows: four which amend provisions of previous appropriation acts; two which authorize guarantees of loans; and one which deals with the status of a former member of the Canadian Forces.

Honourable senators, I hope I have explained the contents of this bill and would be pleased to answer any questions you may have at this time.

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, Bill C-29, requesting the granting of supply to Her Majesty, is not an unusual bill except, perhaps, in the size of the amount being requested. In totality, authorization is sought to spend a huge amount of money. The amounts being paid under the authority of supply bills are growing enormously each year, and as they do it becomes increasingly difficult for the mind to grasp their full significance. It is something like contemplating the distance to the moon or some other planet. We know what the distance is, but it is so great that it is difficult to comprehend. I am sure that the growing rate of increase, resulting in these enormous amounts, is a matter of grave concern to all of us on both sides of this house, and as it must be to all serious-minded Canadians.

The expenditure side of the main estimates has increased by some $800 million from those of the previous government, which is just a few short months. The deficit has increased from $10.4 billion to $14.1 billion. These are huge and frightening amounts. How long does the trend continue before the day of reckoning comes is a matter so serious as to demand our full attention.

Let me briefly give you a breakdown of the total budgetary outlay for 1980-81 as presented in a press release recently issued by the Secretary of the Treasury Board. The federal government will spend about $18.5 billion, or 32 per cent of its total budgetary outlays, on the health and welfare of Canadians. The economic development sector will take about 13 per cent, and national defence will take 11 per cent. Then there are lesser amounts—6 per cent for transportation and 6 per cent for fiscal transfers to the provinces. The second largest percentage allocation in the budgetary outlay for 1980-81 is the servicing of the public debt. The servicing of the public debt will absorb 17.7 per cent, or almost 18 per cent of the total. This is up $1,925,000,000 from the previous year. Once again, in percentage terms, this increase amounts to over 27 per cent of the total change in budgetary outlays.

I do not know, honourable senators, or pretend to know, what percentage of the budget can safely be allocated to debt management, and I suspect that most people are in the same boat. One thing on which we can all agree is the obvious fact that the greater the percentage of the gross national product that is spent on debt servicing, the less is available for essential services and, indeed, for the proper functioning of government—defence, foreign aid, and so on.

One can easily see the trend to which I refer from some of the figures I have outlined. In another part of the press release it is pointed out that about $12 billion will be tranferred to other levels of government—$11 billion in payments to persons and $6 billion for subsidies and other transfer payments, with over $10 billion going to the public debt. So we have $10 billion going to the servicing of the public debt and $12 billion being transferred to other levels of government. The figures are becoming very, very close one to the other, and I fear for the fiscal arrangements and the responsibilities of the federal government in transferring funds to the provinces.

I have no desire or intention of delaying passage of this bill, but I feel I should, in the few brief moments available to me, mention what appears to be a serious management problem in governments generally. The Auditor General has pointed this out in his rather startling efficiency rating of the civil service. This is no indictment of the clerks and others who make up the bulk of the civil service, but in the lack of direction and motivation on the part of the senior people—the bosses, the leaders.

I do not suggest for one moment that this is a problem unique to Ottawa. I suspect it is true of most governments. I know it to be true in Newfoundland. But we must concern ourselves with the situation in Ottawa, and a real concern it is. The huge amounts that are voted yearly for government expenditure are so vast as to conceal, at least partially in terms of percentage of the total, some of the more obvious wastes and mismanagement sectors.

This is a matter that should be of concern to us. Some of the examples that have been pointed out during the course of debate on this measure in the other place demonstrate the enormous amounts involved, notwithstanding that, as I said, they are a small percentage of the total. By way of example, the original estimate for an agricultural laboratory in Lethbridge—I presume that is Lethbridge, Alberta; I cannot imagine one being constructed in Lethbridge, Newfoundland—the original estimate was $3.25 million, and it is now up to $19 million. Total budgetary overruns stemming from a lack of cost controls are estimated at something over $1 billion.

These are some of the problems that are most obvious. There are others. Some have been examined in committee; others will be examined in committees here and in the other place. They will be brought to our attention again next year by the Auditor General and by the Public Accounts Committee of the other place.

This is an area with which we should all be concerned. We should try to keep as much control over the public purse as we can. I do not envy the people in the financial management area of government. We are going through very difficult times and they have a difficult road ahead of them. I sincerely hope we will do all we can to help correct some of the more obvious deficiencies we see in government management and budgetary control.

Senator Barrow: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: I wish to inform the Senate that if Senator Barrow speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Barrow: Honourable senators, I want to thank Senator Doody for his remarks. Certainly, those remarks would be very apropos at the time our National Finance Committee considers the estimates for 1980-81.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Barrow: With leave, honourable senators, I move that it be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

May 16, 1980

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Jean Beetz, LL.D., F.R.S.C., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 16th day of May at 12.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to a Bill.

I have the honour to be
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled:

Report on the administration of the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1979, pursuant to section 11 of the said Act, Chapter 43 (1st Supplement), R.S.C., 1970.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before moving the adjournment motion I should inform the Senate that the Leader of the Government and the Minister of State for Economic Development are absent this morning because they are out of Ontario on urgent government business.

I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, May 27, 1980, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Before the question is put I ought to say that I do not want honourable senators to feel that the sitting time of 2 o'clock in the afternoon is fixed and unchangeable. I am simply recommending that we sit at 2 o'clock in the afternoon rather than at 8 o'clock in the evening; we can sit at 8 o'clock if honourable senators are not satisfied with my reasons for the suggested change.

We shall have a distinguished visitor to our country in the person of the President of Mexico on May 26, and he will address the joint Houses of Parliament, as I understand it, at 2 o'clock. I apologize for having previously said that that would be at 11 o'clock, but I did so on the basis of the information I had at that time. However, it was subsequently changed. I understand that the Leader of the Government corrected that yesterday—at least I hope he did. In any event, the President's speech is now scheduled for 2 o'clock in the afternoon of Monday, May 26.

Honourable senators also know that there are other events planned to celebrate the visit of the President of Mexico, and to extend hospitality to him, which it is hoped they will share in. It will also be remembered that senators were asked to make every effort to attend the joint sitting. Although on the occasion of the visit of the Prime Minister of Japan the Senate made a better showing at the joint sitting than the other place, nevertheless I feel that we could have made an even better showing.

If honourable senators were planning to attend the joint sitting and the other events surrounding the visit of the President of Mexico on May 26, I thought they would just as soon meet at 2 p.m. on May 27 as opposed to 8 p.m. However, if there is strong objection I would be glad to amend the motion.

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, I am not voicing strong objection, but a decicion to sit at 2 o'clock rather compounds the difficulties I am under in trying to arrange for committees. At the moment I understand that two committees plan to meet in the afternoon of Tuesday, May 27, to hear witnesses. I would suggest that that be kept in mind in determining when the Senate will sit.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, that is a perfectly good reason for sitting at 8 o'clock. You might wonder why I had not consulted Senator Lafond about this, but yesterday I was required to be out of town and today I have not had a chance to speak to him. If senators are busy with committee work on the afternoon of May 27, then the Senate should not sit until 8 p.m. However I still urge senators to attend the events related to the visit of the President of Mexico on Monday, May 26.

With your leave, honourable senators, I will modify my motion to provide for an adjournment until Tuesday, May 27, 1980 at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Petten, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, May 27, 1980, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

ENERGY

QUEBEC AND MARITIMES PIPELINE

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, we have just had an announcement that the Minister of State for Economic Development will not be in the house today. I am relieved to find out that that is because he is on urgent government business. When I noticed his absence, I thought that perhaps he had placed too much weight on my suggestion the other day that absence makes the heart grow fonder, and that he was courting more affection from this side of the house. I am glad to find that I was mistaken.

My question, which was intended for him, I shall therefore direct to the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate. It has to do with an exchange that took place between Senator Olson and myself yesterday with respect to the so-called Quebec and Maritimes Pipeline.

I made some comments on the statement by the minister, and in replying to my comments he imputed that my expressions of opinion were running roughshod over the views of certain maritime premiers on this matter, including those of the Premier of Nova Scotia. The views of the Premier of Nova Scotia have, rather forcibly and strikingly, been expressed since that time and they are that he proposes to fight for a cabinet reversal of the National Energy Board recommendation to postpone construction of the maritime portion of the pipeline. Therefore, far from running roughshod over his views, I was, in fact, anticipating them and expressing them in this chamber.

My question is: Would the minister, in view of this fact, be prepared to withdraw the imputation that I was riding roughshod over the views of the Premier of Nova Scotia?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on the first point raised by the honourable senator, I do not want to be taken as having indicated that Senator Olson's absence was exclusively on government business, and might not have been to court the even greater affection from the other side that Senator Donahoe mentioned. I do not know whether that was so, but I do not want to be taken as having excluded that possibility.

In any event, I will see that the honourable senator's observations are drawn to the minister's attention, and no doubt the matter can be raised at our next sitting.

Senator Donahoe: I have a supplementary. It was suggested, in the statement made by Senator Olson, and in the remarks made in response to my comments on that statement, that it was the National Energy Board who said that the environmental studies necessary had not been carried to a sufficient point to justify proceeding with the extension of the pipeline into the maritimes, and that therefore we should not have done that. I am wondering if the minister has had an opportunity to see the comments that have been made on that decision by some very responsible persons. The Chairman of Alberta Gas Trunk Line said, in response to the announcement of this decision, that "it would have been a very prudent move to approve the maritime extension." Petro-Canada, that organization, of which my honourable friends are so fond, has also expressed an opinion through the lips of its chairman, who went so far as to question the appropriateness of "putting such a national policy issue to the NEB." He suggested that what was at issue here was a matter of government policy, not the technical feasibility of the maritime portion of the line, and that to put this decision to the NEB was to abdicate responsibility.

[Senator Donahoe.]

My question, which I would like to have conveyed to the Minister of State for Economic Development, is: Will he now tell us, in light of this widespread dissatisfaction with yesterday's announcement by Mr. Lalonde, if the government is prepared to take this matter into its own hands, as the Chairman of Petro-Canada suggests, and approve the extension to the maritime provinces?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I cannot say that the minister concerned will agree that the dissatisfaction is widespread, but I will certainly see that not only his comments but also those that he has brought to the attention of the chamber, are conveyed to the minister for his comment in turn.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. In connection with the pipeline extension, the Minister of State for Economic Development yesterday mentioned that he was under the impression that it would take only two years to complete the pipeline from Montreal to Halifax. It seems to me that the announcement made yesterday suggests that the pipeline to Quebec City only would take about five years. Would the Deputy Leader of the Government ask the minister to correct or confirm the information that he gave yesterday?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I suppose the third alternative is that the minister may be able to reconcile what seems to be a discrepancy in terms of the time period. Certainly what does appear to be a discrepancy will be drawn to his attention for comment.

CANADA

DISPLAY OF FOREIGN FLAGS

Hon. Guy Williams: Honourable senators, I have a short question for the Leader of the Government. It is straightforward and, therefore, I shall not go into lengthy detail. It concerns the flying of foreign flags on Canadian soil. An irate veteran spoke to me on the telephone for nearly an hour yesterday, advising me of two occasions when a foreign flag had been flown by an individual, a foreigner in this country. He was of the opinion that the flying of foreign flags is controlled by regulations and that those regulations are similar to those that apply to marine situations under which a foreign vessel, in its passage through Canadian waters, must fly the Canadian flag over that of its own country. In this case, the telephone caller had been told by a responsible Canadian government department that it was not illegal to fly a foreign flag without flying the Canadian flag.

• (1130)

My question is: Why does the law governing the flying of the Canadian flag differ so much from the marine law respecting the flying of flags on ships in Canadian waters?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can try to answer from my own understanding. It is common for American flags to be flown with Canadian flags by tourist establishments, and others, to indicate a hospitable attitude towards visitors from the United States. In direct answer to the question, I would think that the exigencies of regulations under marine law might be quite different from those applying in the situation I have just referred to. However, if a more precise answer as to why the rules relating to foreign flags in marine situations do not also apply to land situations is required, then I will pass the question on to the appropriate authority.

Senator Williams: To make it a little clearer, the second part of this gentleman's problem is not an American flag, but another foreign flag. I am presently waiting for some written information on the matter, and when I have it I will bring it to the attention of the house.

Senator Frith: Would Senator Williams be prepared to stand this matter until he gets the more specific information? I take it we can await his more specific question?

Senator Williams: Very good. The additional information I need is coming from the RCMP.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the deputy leader. I am pleased that Senator Williams raised this matter, because I have myself seen, in various parts of Canada, flags other than Canadian flags flying alone. Could the deputy leader also inquire as to the protocol respecting the display of a flag or symbol of another country.

Senator Frith: Yes, honourable senators, I shall be glad to do that. Perhaps Senator Bosa would be willing to make his question part of the package that is coming forward from Senator Williams. We will then be glad to answer those questions in all their dimensions.

Senator Bosa: Yes, I will be glad to do that.

TRANSPORT

MASTER PLAN FOR AIRPORTS IN ATLANTIC REGION

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have two more delayed answers. The first is in response to a question asked by Senator Marshall on April 17. The question was:

> I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he would look into the publication of a report on the master plan for the future of airports in Atlantic Canada which was completed at the end of 1979 but, as a result of the election, was delayed. I wonder if he would find out from the Minister of Transport if the report is now ready, and when it will be produced, because it concerns many in the Atlantic region.

The answer is:

> Transport Canada has not been preparing a master plan for the future of airports in Atlantic Canada. However, two separate area master plans are being developed by personnel of the Atlantic region for Transport Canada to encompass the province of Newfoundland and Labrador and, perhaps, the Honourable Jack Marshall is referring to these two plans.
> An area master plan for Newfoundland is in an early stage of development, while the area master plan for Labrador, which is already in existence, is being updated.
>
> You may be interested in knowing that an essential component in the development of these area master plans is extensive consultation with provincial government officials and local communities. The purpose of these consultations is to assist in ensuring that the plans reflect local and provincial concerns.

• (1135)

Honourable senators, I am asked to request that Senator Marshall accept assurances from the department that consultation is an integral element of the development of the area master plans for the Atlantic region. Indeed, the department is just about to commence the public consultation process for the Newfoundland master plan.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO JAPAN

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): The second delayed answer relates to a question asked on May 6, 1980, by the Honourable Nathan Nurgitz. I will read the question and answer in spite of his absence.

The question was:

> Honourable senators, with that ruling in mind I have a question for the Deputy Leader in his position as Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate. Could he please inform us if the sale of a Candu reactor was high on the list of subjects discussed with the Prime Minister of Japan during his recent visit?

To put the delayed answer in context, the reply I made at the time was as follows:

> Honourable senators, I know no more about that matter than what my learned colleague probably saw in the papers. I imagine it was on the list, but if he would really like to know whether it was high on the list, then I shall pass that question along.

The answer with which I have been furnished, reads:

> The question of a possible sale of a Candu reactor was high on the list of subjects discussed between the two Prime Ministers on May 6, 1980. They reviewed and discussed the possibilities for expanded co-operation in the energy field between the two countries, including the possible sale of the Candu reactor to Japan. Prime Minister Trudeau emphasized that the sale of the Candu system could contribute to the strengthening of bilateral trade and economic relations.

Honourable senators, those are the only two answers that I have been furnished with for today's sitting.

TRANSPORT

AIRPORT STATISTICS

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I have had a written question on the order paper since April 17, which I assume will be answered by the Department of Transport. Indeed, I first asked this question on November 29, 1979. Would the deputy leader be good enough to ascertain when I might expect an answer to my question?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will red-circle that question and try to find out this morning or early this afternoon when we can have an answer. I will attempt to have it for our sitting the week after next.

Senator Flynn: Under the previous administration it took only two weeks to obtain answers. Now it is taking over a month.

Senator Bosa: When the deputy leader is inquiring about this question, would he also inquire about my question, which is No. 1 on the list of questions on the order paper? I placed the same question on the order paper last October and it was never answered.

Senator Frith: Yes, I will do so.

TWO-PRICE WHEAT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Argue, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Perrault, P.C., for the second reading of the Bill S-6, intituled: "An Act to Amend the Two-Price Wheat Act".—Honourable Senator Argue, P.C.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I am still awaiting some of the information that is necessary to answer the questions put to me yesterday by Senator Roblin. I would ask that the order stand.

Order stands.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before I move that the Senate do adjourn during pleasure I am somewhat embarrassed at having to say that the arrangements respecting the visit of the President of Mexico are still not absolutely firm.

• (1140)

If it turns out that the arrangements I have advised you of are changed in any way, or are cancelled, I will see to it that you are so informed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Jean Beetz, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker:

The Honourable Jeanne Sauvé, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

> May it please Your Honour:
>
> The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.
> In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:
> An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1981.
> To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 27, at 8 p.m.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN GALLERY

BALTIC HONORARY CONSULS

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Honourable senators, may I draw your attention to the presence in the gallery of the Honorary Consuls of the Baltic States. With leave, and on behalf of the Senate, I would like to welcome to this chamber Dr. Jonas Zmuidzinas of Lithuania; Dr. Edward Upenieks of Latvia; and Mr. Ilmar Heinsoo of Estonia.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Yuzyk: Canada, the United States, and several other democracies do not recognize the Soviet military occupation of those states and the forcible incorporation of those countries by the Soviet Union, which took place in 1940. We hope that their aspirations for free and independent democratic countries will be realized in the near future.

The Honorary Consuls are accompanied by members of the Baltic Federation of Canada, whom I should also like to introduce. They are Mr. T. E. Kronbergs, Mr. J. R. Simanivicius, Mr. Walter Pent, Dr. Edward Parups, and Mr. J. Danys.

[Senator Frith.]

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Yuzyk: They are here on the occasion of the Eighth Baltic Evening that will be held tomorrow in Room 200, in the West Block on Parliament Hill.

Lithuanians, Latvians and Estonians in Canada now number over 100,000, and they are among the best citizens of our country. We are happy to welcome these visitors to our chamber today.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

THE LATE HON. HAROLD CONNOLLY

TRIBUTES

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I draw your attention to the passing of one of our former members. During the week while the Senate was in recess we lost the Honourable Harold Connolly.

Harold Connolly was a prominent Nova Scotian, a man who had an interesting and successful political career. He was at one time Premier of Nova Scotia. He was the immediate predecessor in that position of our esteemed colleague, Senator Hicks.

Following that tenure, he was appointed to the Senate and was a senator for a number of years. Unfortunately, early in his senatorial career his health failed, he suffered a stroke, and for a long period of time he was unable to make the important contribution that I am sure he would have made to the deliberations of this house and the parliamentary system. He managed to make a reasonably good recovery, and for several years had been carrying on in a relatively normal way in Halifax. However, last week he suffered a second stroke and died.

Harold Connolly was buried in Halifax on Wednesday last, and a very fine tribute paid to him in the service of commitment. The mass was presided over by the Archishop of Halifax. Among those in attendance were the Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia, two former Lieutenant Governors and the Premier. The passing of the Honourable Harold Connolly was noted with due pomp and due circumstance.

I simply wish to bring to the attention of the Senate the fact that we have lost a good man and a good Nova Scotian.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, the former Senator Harold Connolly was a long-time friend of mine, and we were in communication up to March of this year. He was a former Premier of Nova Scotia, and a member of the legislature from 1936 to 1955, a period embracing 20 sessions. He was a member of the Senate for almost 20 years. Originally he was a newspaperman, and he became a politician. He held many portfolios, including those of Industry and Trade and Health and Welfare, and he particularly enjoyed the latter.

I sent him a copy of Retirement Without Tears, and a few days ago I had a letter from him in which he said:

This report, which I read avidly, is a Senate masterpiece and it should not be allowed to die in a file. Instead it should be debated by the Senate to a conclusion. It is an issue that goes down to the fundamentals of humanity.

Later on he indicated that he thought a great mistake was being made in talking about the kind of changes that are likely to be made in the Senate.

I think it is fair to say that Harold Connolly was the original idea man for the regional economic expansion concept. He was an outstanding orator, as I recall him; he could make the English language sing. He had a sense of humour. He was formidable in political battle, gentle in victory and understanding in defeat. He was admired and respected, and he left a legacy, which when pieced together seems very full, more than the space of one lifetime would permit.

He was enthusiastic and had great strength in the face of adversity. He was a man of many talents. He demonstrated his personal strength and his belief, particularly in times of adversity.

I was always impressed with his love of language and ability to speak. I went to the library to try to find something that I thought suitable and that he might like, and I found the following words in the works of Hilaire Belloc:

From quiet homes and first beginning,
Out to the undiscovered ends,
There's nothing worth the wear of winning,
But laughter and the love of friends.

● (2025)

We extend our sympathy to his wife and family. We miss Harold, as we missed him before. I am sure that his family, especially, will know that he is being missed in the Senate.

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might be permitted just a moment to join my two colleagues in their eloquent tributes to the late Harold Connolly.

I had the pleasure of serving with Senator Connolly in the Legislature of Nova Scotia when he was a minister, and later, when he was premier, although I cannot say that I helped him very much in either of those two positions. I remember very well his powerful oratory and his great command of the English language, but perhaps what I remember most about him is the gentleness and friendliness with which he welcomed, many years ago, some eight members of my party who were sitting in the Legislature of Nova Scotia for the first time, that house not having had the distinction of entertaining any members of that party for something over four years. I may say that the general helpfulness which he offered us did not appear in moments of debate, when one would not suspect him, perhaps, of being unduly concerned about helping us.

My association with him over the years led me to understand very well why he became so prominent in the public life of Nova Scotia, and why he became prominent in the field of journalism before he went into politics. He was a great Nova Scotian and a great gentleman. We regret his passing very much. Nova Scotia and Canada have suffered a very great loss. I wish to join in extending sympathy to his family.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I am glad to associate myself with the remarks that have been made by others in relation to the late Senator Connolly. My recollection of him goes back a long time, and it is unfortunate that in the last decade of his life he was not seen very much, either here or in Halifax, because this means that at the time of his death he was not a current figure. However, those of us who remember him in years past will remember many nice things about him.

Not the least of his achievements, in my opinion, is what he accomplished when he was Minister of Trade and Industry, and in charge of tourism in Nova Scotia. He brought the industry of tourism in Nova Scotia into the modern age, and made a great contribution not only in that field, but in the early stages of industrial promotion in Nova Scotia as well.

I like to think of him also as the genial Irishman who, at a party, could entertain scores of people with his singing of Irish songs. I remember his very good nature in that way particularly well. Also, I used to play bridge with him at the Halifax Club. He was a good bridge player, and though I do not believe generally in people being holders of terrible cards, I make an exception for Harold Connolly. It seemed that every time I played with him he never had any cards at all, but it can at least be said of him that he made the most of what he did have. This was true not only in playing bridge, but in using the many talents that he brought to the political life of Nova Scotia, and, latterly, to this chamber.

THE LATE GREGORY ROYCE FRITH

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to say something about the support I received from you and the staff of the Senate following the death of my son. It is as hard for me to say anything about it, as I know it has been for my friends and supporters here to find the right words—supporters in the sense that I just used the word.

It is very hard to describe the cumulative effect of so many expressions of support and sympathy. It is like something we have all experienced when the force of human beings joined in prayer can be felt and sensed.

On behalf of my son's wife and the family, I thank you all very much.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AGRICULTURE

DROUGHT IN PRAIRIE PROVINCES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, if I could start this section of our business tonight, I should like to address a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development with respect to the drought conditions in western Canada. I regret that he is not supported by his colleague the Honourable Minister of State responsible for the Wheat Board, because I am sure that between the two of them they could furnish a wide background of experience on this matter.

My question has to do with a letter sent to the federal government by the Minister of Agriculture for the Province of Manitoba on May 9, 1980, in which he asked the federal government to let him know what steps they were prepared to take in connection with the developing emergency in the drought area. He particularly wanted to know whether the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act could be reactivated or activated to provide help in this matter. He also wanted to know whether the federal government would take under consideration the question of sharing in the financial costs of the whole position in the west. My question is: When will the government answer this letter?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, an answer to the letter may or may not have gone forward. As far as an acknowledgment to the letter is concerned, I cannot answer that, but I would expect one has gone forward.

As far as answering in detail the requests that were contained in that letter, I should like to inform the honourable senator that we regard the situation as being serious—indeed, as being critical; in fact, Senator Argue is in Winnipeg today holding discussions on the matter with the Canadian Wheat Board.

I do not think that we have a clear assessment of what ought to be done. It seems fairly clear that some assistance is required to deal with the raging forest fires. I am not sure of the details of this assistance, but a forest fire program has already been undertaken. I cannot say whether the provinces have asked for any special assistance in fire fighting, but they have certainly asked for assistance regarding the safety of people who have been caught in this situation, and the Department of National Defence has responded to the best of its ability.

I was in Winnipeg on Sunday afternoon—not by a prearranged meeting—and I was flying in a DND plane. Some of the officers who had been involved in evacuations told me that the evacuations had been carried out in an orderly and highly satisfactory manner.

I return now to the next most urgent matter, which is what can be done and what ought to be done to look after livestock where grass is not growing because of the drought. The assessment of this situation is that an expedited program of bringing supplementary feed into those areas is the best plan. Unfortunately, there is no place in Canada that we know of where enough fodder is available. Of course, there may be some available as far away as Ontario or Quebec.

An Hon. Senator: They are in Canada.

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Olson: We are unable to locate sufficient fodder in the prairie provinces that can be moved.

Yes, they are in Canada, but you have to look at the alternatives, and it seems to me that an expedited program of trying to use some higher-concentrated feeds mixed with some fibre—which is necessary for cattle in that condition—is the most satisfactory alternative, and that is being looked at. I know that the Canadian Wheat Board is holding back shipments of barley—if it has not completely stopped them—out of those areas where it may be needed. I believe it has made some arrangements to obtain as much as 50,000 tons of screenings, which can be brought back in, and anything else which may be utilized. It is trying, as expeditiously as possible, to put that together.

PFRA, a section of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, has been working on this problem for two or three weeks now. I believe it is fair to say that later this week we will have some kind of program to present, and that is about as quickly as it can be done. At that point, of course, whatever appropriate financial commitment ought to be made by the federal government will be considered.

I should also say that the situation in some of the area that was so severely affected earlier has changed as a result of a heavily moisture-laden system that moved in on Friday, and which by Sunday had affected most of southern Alberta. Indeed, this also alleviated the situation in northern Alberta to a great extent. When I went through Regina about 6 o'clock on Sunday evening, it had started to rain. I do not know what has happened since. The rain was not enough to relieve the situation, but certainly there was a prospect that it would be relieved.

That is a long answer, but it is important that these matters be brought out. We had arranged for some light planes to carry out a more extensive tour which would have involved discussing the situation with those affected, specifically as to what they viewed as solutions, but unfortunately the rain storm kept us from carrying out that tour. But let's not kid ourselves or be under any illusions about that rain. The small amount that had fallen by Sunday was not enough to relieve the situation completely.

Senator Roblin: If I might pursue the point, I might ask my honourable friend if he has been reading the Regina Leader Post recently.

Senator Olson: I have heard about it.

Senator Roblin: I will tell you what I know about it. They report that a document was prepared for a cabinet committee which explicitly stated that while there was little the federal government could do to alleviate the adverse effects of the drought, it should be doing all of those cosmetic things that would lead to the appearance of activity.

Senator Steuart: Shame, shame.

Senator Roblin: One of the political gimmicks recommended was ministers' tours of the area. I, of course, ascribe none of this to my honourable friend. I would like him to tell us some time, however, whether or not this document was prepared by his advisers and, if so, whether or not he will let us see it so that we can judge the quality of the advice he is receiving.

I am sure he is much too wise to pay attention to that sort of thing. The point I want to make in continuing my question is that, while there has been a three-inch rainfall in Alberta—and heaven be thanked for that—it has not got as far east as we would like, and I am rather concerned that my honourable friend does not really appear to be co-operating or consulting with the provincial governments, as I would hope he would think it proper to do. The provinces all have departments of agriculture—

An Hon. Senator: You are making a speech.

Senator Roblin: That is right, I am making a speech, and you will encourage me to continue it, I can see that.

All of the provinces concerned have a department of agriculture and they all have ideas as to what could be done. I would suggest to my honourable friend that, if he finds it possible, he might perhaps meet with these gentlemen in Winnipeg or Regina and solicit their co-operation in this matter. I am sure such an initiative would be welcome.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I really do not have any disagreement with anything that the honourable senator has said, including the headlines in the Regina Leader Post. I do not think there is anything that the federal government can do to alleviate the drought. We do not claim to be able to change the weather. I do think that some comments that have been made by some provincial officials in attempting to make some political hay, if that is the right word, are really inappropriate in the light of the seriousness of the situation. I make no apology to my honourable friend or to anyone else because we on this side of the house choose neither to ignore nor turn our backs when there are people hurting any place in this country, and there are some people out there who are hurting. If you want to call that "cosmetics," that is up to you; but, basically, it is a matter of caring.

Surely we have to make an assessment of the situation before we can announce any program or the participation therein.

It is simply not true to say that there has not been consultation, because there has been, not only between officials at the federal level and their provincial counterparts but also between those officials and officials of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, which is in charge of some of the facilities which are at the disposal of the federal government to deal with this situation.

It may be that some will want to continue this facade that we have not been interested. We have been. As a matter of fact, the committee to deal with this was activated even before the letter my honourable friend referred to came in. My honourable friend will also understand, I think, that had the weather pattern changed at any time earlier in this month, that of course would have been the best solution. We are ready to do anything that can be done. If there were enough feed supplies that could have been obtained at some reasonable economic level, they would have been moved in by this time.

I do not have any great problem with all of my honourable friend's assertions. They are probably all true. We are sincere about getting on with matters and making an effective contribution rather than running around criticizing someone else who may or may not be doing his full share.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I must point out to my honourable friend that the assertions to which he referred, including the expression "cosmetics", certainly did not come from me nor, so far as I am aware, from any provincial minister; they came from my honourable friend's own governmental department. So, if he is concerned about the use of the language, he had better look into his own affairs and see who it is who is giving him this kind of advice and do something about it.

I still make my point that there is no evidence I am aware of that we have had the amount of co-operation between the two levels of government that I would like to see. It seems to me that if a meeting were held between the three provincial Ministers of Agriculture and the federal officials, such a meeting would go a long way towards ensuring that we had the maximum effect for the minimum of effort in relieving the distress to which my honourable friend referred.

Senator Olson: My honourable friend can take it that exactly what he is describing that ought to be done now has been going on for many days.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CARIBBEAN INSTABILITY—CIDA INVOLVEMENT

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government. Before putting my question, I too wish to commend him for his diligence to his duties, not only tonight but ongoing. I appreciate it very much.

Like many Canadians, I was shocked to read in the Ottawa Journal on Friday last that CIDA, a highly estimable group, has had it suggested to them that they might, in the interest of Caribbean stability, provide gunboats and other police techniques for the small islands of the Caribbean. Can the Deputy Leader of the Government assure this chamber that there is no place, so far as CIDA is concerned, for gunboat diplomacy or gunboat peddling, and that Mr. Douglas Small's article in the Ottawa Journal to that effect is not well founded?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I certainly hope that I can so assure honourable senators, but I obviously will have to try to track down the source of that story in order to do so. It is my hope that I will be able to stand in this place and assure my honourable friend that there is no place for gunboat diplomacy, whether through CIDA or any other agency of the Canadian government.

ENERGY

CANADA-MEXICO OIL AGREEMENT

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development relating to the agreement signed today between Canada and Mexico respecting oil imports. I don't know from firsthand knowledge the contents of the agreement, but I understand that, among other things, it provides for Canadian importation of only 50,000 barrels per day. If I am wrong on that, I am sure the minister will correct me. If that is true, it does not compare, or seem to compare, at any rate, very favourably to the maximum of 100,000 barrels a day provided for in the agreement initialed last year between Canada and Mexico.

Can the minister tell us what has happened in the meantime to reduce this very useful amount of 100,000 barrels per day as a maximum to 50,000 barrels a day—which, while useful, is only half as useful as 100,000 barrels per day?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I cannot give the reasons for the reduction from 100,000 barrels per day to 50,000 barrels per day, but I can confirm that the volume of 50,000 barrels per day is the volume included in the agreement that was signed today.

Honourable senators will recall that the President of Mexico, in his speech on Monday, did make mention of there being other factors involved with respect to their sale of hydrocarbons.

There are still a great many negotiations to be completed between the two countries, including negotiations respecting telecommunications, natural resources, and mining machinery. In the aluminum fabrication field they are discussing expansion and production facilities, and in the transportation field they are discussing railway expansion and upgrading, and the Mexico City Metro. There is, of course, in addition to the oil supply, some consulting services being discussed and various Canadian firms are seeking some consulting contracts. While I cannot give any more detail today until those negotiations are completed—the various ministers that are involved in them will be making the announcements—I can give my honourable friend an assurance that we will bring a report to this house as early as possible.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I thank the honourable senator for his statement and his confirmation that 50,000 barrels per day is the figure which is included in this agreement.

This leads me to a supplementary which relates particularly to the area of the country in which I live, Atlantic Canada. Again, I have some figures which I cannot assert of my personal knowledge as correct, but which I think the minister will know about. Given the fact that Atlantic Canada now consumes 300,000 barrels of imported oil per day, and that that consumption of imported oil is likely to increase to something in the order of 800,000 barrels a day by 1985, and the further reality—which I think I have heard the minister himself discuss—that Canadian production of conventional oil is to decline during that period, will the minister, when he answers my first question, indicate to us and to Atlantic Canada from where it is expected the government will make up the shortfall of 500,000 barrels per day, which is a greater amount than the maximum of 100,000 barrels per day in the initialed Mexican agreement?

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators will recall, of course, that the 100,000 barrels a day was indicated to start some time later. Indeed, the delivery of this amount of 50,000 barrels per day will commence some time later this year, which is substantially earlier than the commencement date in the other agreement, and I suppose that has some advantages. I expect that an off-the-cuff reply as to from where the balance of the requirements of the maritime provinces will be met is that they will be met, to the extent possible, from sources that are now supplying them. It was our hope that we would have a somewhat more secure supply for that requirement.

In addition to that, I would repeat that we hope that a very large portion of that requirement can be met by gas substitution as quickly as possible. In spite of the ruling that was made the other day, we intend to pursue that, and probably further down the road there will be some offshore production from the maritime provinces themselves. We do not depend on that as a reliable, substitutable source at the moment, because it is not yet in deliverable condition, but that seems to be the scenario for meeting what my honourable friend has mentioned as the total requirements.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Perhaps I might ask a further supplementary since the minister has been so kind to respond to those I have asked.

With respect to his comment about supply from offshore sources in the Atlantic region, I presume he was referring to gas because he mentioned it in connection with the gas pipeline, and I understand that still has to be confirmed as being of commercial quantity. I further understand that even if it is of commercial quantity, it will be four to five years at least before it is brought ashore. If there is to be no pipeline built until after a delay of at least two years, then that gets us well past 1985 before any gas from conventional sources is available. My question is: What plans are in hand to make up this deficiency?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do not have the decision in front of me, but it seems to me that it was stated by the Minister of Energy, when he announced that the National Energy Board had declined the application to proceed east of Quebec into the maritimes, that it was primarily based on some environmental questions that had not been answered. It would be our hope that that can be done expeditiously and it will not be long until a decision will be made to extend that pipeline.

I would not want my response to be confined only to offshore gas at Sable Island. There are also some very interesting discoveries of crude oil at Hibernia and other places and, hopefully, that will come into the consumer stream before long.

QUEBEC AND MARITIMES PIPELINE

Hon. G. I. Smith: I hope I am not straining the patience of honourable senators, but may I be permitted one more supplementary? It relates to the so-called construction of the Q and M pipeline.

It is the fear of some people—I think many people in the Atlantic region—that the pipeline having been built to the point just beyond Quebec City, to which it is now authorized to be built, the remaining portion to wherever it might be in the maritime provinces—Halifax, for instance, or Canso—is unlikely to prove attractive, from a financial point of view, to anybody looking at that stretch of the line alone, and that the real viability of the Q and M pipeline from the vicinity of Montreal to Halifax or Canso lies in its being constructed as one enterprise.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I believe that is correct. I do not want to repeat again and again that this government has given a commitment to attempt to expedite the building of the pipeline all the way to the east coast. While I cannot give any commitment of an underwriting by the government, it is the intent of the government that this line be built, and built soon. I do not believe the application before the National Energy Board to do that job called for any federal government underwriting, but there may be some consideration of that later on in view of what my honourable friend has just said.

CANADA-MEXICO OIL AGREEMENT

Hon. Ernest C. Manning: Honourable senators, may I ask a supplementary question on this agreement to buy 50,000 barrels of oil per day from Mexico? Is the minister in a position to advise the house whether the price to be paid for that oil is the world price, subject to further increases as the world price increases, or is it a firm price for the duration of the agreement or for some fixed volume of oil?

Also on the subject of price, is it tied to the world price? I think the minister will agree that the term "world price" has become a rather vague expression in recent months because there are half a dozen prices that may be referred to as the "world price." Could he give us an indication of the actual price at which the agreement starts, if it is tied to the world price?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the answer is no, I cannot do that now, but I can give an undertaking to try to obtain that answer. I expect it to be in the agreement, when we see it at the conclusion of all the negotiations that are continuing. It may be one or a combination of Senator Manning's suggestions, but I would not like to speculate on it because I think we will have it in a few days anyway.

TAXATION AND EXPENDITURE TO ACHIEVE SELF-SUFFICIENCY

Hon. Cyril B. Sherwood: Honourable senators, on May 8 last in a question to Senator Olson, Minister of State for Economic Development, I quoted a statement by Mr. Marshall Crowe, former chairman of the National Energy Board to the effect that the achievement of self-sufficiency in Canada would require an expenditure of $200 billion. I then asked the minister whether, in the light of these projections, the government, in considering possible new taxes on energy companies, was aware that the achievement of energy self-sufficiency could be seriously delayed. The minister declined to answer, suggesting that it would be unwise to comment on assessments made by persons outside the government, however well-informed and eminent they might be.

I would draw to the minister's attention an Energy, Mines and Resources Bulletin EP77-8, which projects that in terms of 1975 dollars the achievement of energy self-reliance in Canada would necessitate the investment of $138 billion. In 1980 dollars that amount equals the Crowe prediction of $200 billion.

My question to the minister is: In the light of statements by the minister's parliamentary secretary in the other place to the effect that new taxes on energy companies are being considered, and given that I have now quoted for the minister's benefit an internal government assessment, would he now answer my question as to whether or not the government is aware that in considering such taxes it may be delaying the achievement of energy self-sufficiency.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I can answer yes, the government is aware that that had happened, but to ask me to go any further is not to ask me for information, but simply to ask me for my own opinion.

TERMINATION OF OIL IMPORT COMPENSATION PROGRAM

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development. I am sure he recalls that the Throne Speech contained a paragraph promising in rather glowing terms equal opportunity for economic development in all areas of Canada. I am sure I recognized his penmanship in the background. I wonder if he can reconcile that paragraph with the statement of the Right Honourable the Prime Minister on Thursday, May 22, that the oil import compensation program would be terminated. How does he picture this helping the development of Atlantic Canada?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I think the interpretation ought to be changed slightly; that is to say that while the compensation program may be terminated at some time in the future, this does not mean that there is going to be a different price in one part of Canada from that in other parts. The Prime Minister's statement did not say that we were going to move away from a reasonably uniform price across the country.

Senator Phillips: I would like a little greater assurance than the so-called blended price which the Right Honourable the Prime Minister mentions so often. We in Atlantic Canada feel that the Liberals have already put us through the blender too many times and we have no desire to go around that circle again. I would like to have an assurance that gasoline will cost the same all across Canada.

Senator Olson: Well, honourable senators, no federal politician can guarantee that because there is a variation in provincial taxes across the country, and that is up to the provincial governments. What we have now is a reasonably uniform cost to the refinery of the feedstock that makes gasoline, and I think the honourable senator would have a difficult time finding anything in the Prime Minister's statement to suggest that we intend to change that.

PARLIAMENT

LIBERAL AND NON-LIBERAL RIDINGS

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development, but this time in his capacity as a political minister for Alberta and responsible, I understand, for the twinning of ridings of eastern Liberal MPs with Alberta ridings. Would the minister please provide us in this chamber with a list of those twinned ridings so that persons in Alberta will know from whom to seek assistance.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Well, honourable senators, I would be very happy to do that, because I think this is one of the most useful programs to promote national unity in this country that I have ever seen. My problem in answering the question is that the honourable senator is asking me to bring into this house, as though it were public business, that which is the business of the Liberal Party of Canada. I imagine there would be some objection to that. I would be very happy to have those names mentioned here, but then I think we would open the door for bringing out in this chamber all the other great things that the Liberal Party of Canada does from time to time for Canada.

The honourable senator may as well understand now as later that this in no way usurps the responsibility of the elected members from all those ridings. It is a matter that is within the Liberal caucus and within the Liberal Party, and I am very grateful that there are a number of Liberal members from other parts of the country who are not only ready and willing but have already donated some time to make sure that there is a viable alternative to the Conservative Party in those three western provinces, which I regard as a very important part of the democratic system.

Senator Nurgitz: As a supplementary, honourable senators, would the minister say then that if a person in, for example, the province of Alberta had a problem he could not seek advice from his twin Ontario MP?

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Olson: I did not say that. I am grateful to his twin, if he happens to be from Ontario, and, indeed, I am very glad he is volunteering his services. But what I want to make clear is that I am not sure that this is part of the public business of the Government and the Parliament of Canada. It has been set up by the Liberal Party of Canada and the liaison in the constituency is with the executive of the constituency Liberal Association. I am doubtful about whether that type of question should be answered in this house.

Senator Nurgitz: Then perhaps the minister could confirm that a twinned eastern member of Parliament, who actually has a seat, is in no way to provide anything for an Alberta constituent.

Senator Olson: No, I would not agree to that at all. In fact, I think it will be a very useful service. If people want to contact him because he has available to him facilities for getting in touch with departments, for example, that is an option that is open to them and volunteered by the sitting member.

Senator Nurgitz: In that case it is a matter of public business, and I think it would be of some interest for this chamber to see the list.

Senator Olson: Perhaps it should be brought here, but I remind my honourable friend that when a member is elected to the House of Commons he becomes a member for the entire realm. There is no question about that. During all the years I spent in the House of Commons, I answered letters and performed services for people who wrote to me from one end of the country to the other, and this is nothing different except that it is being expanded somewhat. It is a practice that is engaged in by every member.

• (2110)

Senator Nurgitz: I have one final supplementary. I assume, therefore, that the minister is in disagreement with the Leader of the Government in the Senate who said at the annual meeting of the Liberal Party of British Columbia, which he seems to be constantly attending, that the twinning program was unrealistic and unworkable and that it interferes with the role of a duly-elected member of Parliament.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am always a little suspicious of taking someone else's interpretation of what my colleagues have said. I would like to check that out.

Senator Flynn: You're not the only one.

MINISTERIAL OFFICE IN ALBERTA

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. Can the minister confirm that in his capacity as the Alberta minister he has opened an office at the lovely Chateau Airport Hotel at the Calgary International Airport?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Yes, I have opened an Alberta minister's office at the Calgary International Airport. That is correct. I could give some details about getting it opened quickly, when we rented some space that was available and ready to move into. It is located in the most convenient place I know, in the hotel right at the airport. It is the first door you come to when you walk out of the parkade. I cannot think of a more convenient place for the people of Alberta to communicate with a minister for Alberta.

Senator Flynn: Or for you. You can always get away quickly.

ENERGY

TERMINATION OF OIL IMPORT COMPENSATION PROGRAM

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I wish to direct a question to the minister who has just resumed his seat, and possibly pour some oil on troubled waters.

Earlier in the Question Period when he was being questioned by Senator Roblin about the terrible situation in western Canada—I am paraphrasing the minister's words—he said that he and the government cared about Canadians everywhere.

A couple of weeks ago when I asked him how long it would take before the pipeline to the east coast would be in operation, he estimated it would take two years. Tonight when questioned by Senator Smith (Colchester), the minister mentioned Hibernia and Sable Island, with all our hopes and prayers that the wonderful day may come when we in Nova Scotia may develop something like that developed in Alberta under Senator Manning.

On Thursday the Right Honourable the Prime Minister, referring to the oil import compensation program, said: "Yes, Madam Speaker, it is part of our policy to phase out the oil import compensation over a period of time." The following day the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources repeated the same thing.

May I ask the minister: If it is going to take periods of two years, or five years, as has been mentioned here tonight, can he indicate when this oil import compensation program will be cut off? Will it be before we have something to take the place of the subsidy; and, if so, what will consumers in the Atlantic provinces do financially to heat their homes, run their businesses, generate power, and so on, during that interim period?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): No, I cannot give any indication of when it will be phased out. If the honourable senator will read the rest of that reply, along with several made by the Minister of Finance, he will understand that the time-frame and the staging of the phasing out is dependent on many other things. If he wishes a half-hour speech, I can enunciate some of them for him, but I do not think the Question Period is the time for that.

Senator Muir: No, I hardly think we want to listen to the honourable gentleman for half an hour at this point in time, although he is always entertaining. However, that was the reason for questions being asked in the other place. Controversial answers were given by different ministers, and I was asking the minister here if he could give us an answer that was different from the two or three that have already been given.

Senator Olson: I hope that any answer that I give is consistent with what my colleagues have said in the other place.

Senator Smith (Colchester): But not guaranteed.

Senator Olson: I said "I hope."

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

HELSINKI FINAL ACT—PREPARATION FOR REVIEW CONFERENCE

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, my question is for the Deputy Leader of the Government. In view of the fact that the review meeting of the Conference on European Cooperation and Security will be held in Madrid only five months from today, and in view of the interest of parliamentarians of both houses in the implementation of the Helsinki Final Act, could the deputy leader inform this house of any intention by the government to give parliamentarians of both houses an input in the preparation for that meeting and its deliberations.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Yes, honourable senators, I shall endeavour to obtain that information.

PARLIAMENT

APPOINTMENT OF TASK FORCES

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, at page 1356 of the House of Commons Hansard there is reference to the appointment of parliamentary task forces. I believe it was clarified in the other place, following some controversy, that the task forces will report to Parliament rather than to a minister. Would the Deputy Leader of the Government clarify whether "Parliament" means the Senate and the House of Commons; and, if so, will members of the parliamentary task forces include members from the Senate?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am able to say that the report to Parliament will be one that is in the understood sense, namely, a report to the Senate and the House of Commons. I believe there will be Senate participation, but I am uncertain of that at the moment. I shall try to clarify the situation some time this week.

INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE TO MICHELIN TIRE COMPANY

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development, based on an article in today's Ottawa Journal. It is headed "Federal Aid for Michelin Under Fire".

We might not have been too concerned about this matter if it were not for the fact that, since this government has taken office, we in Nova Scotia have seen a decision made which means that we shall have to wait indefinitely for the pipeline to be extended into our province. We have seen decisions taken which would appear to indicate that the federal government is reneging on its promised offer of assistance to the steel plant in Sydney, to Sysco. We are being advised and warned that our subsidy for oil used in the production of energy in Nova Scotia is to be withdrawn and discontinued. This morning we are told that the federal aid for Michelin, which is proposing to build a third plant in Nova Scotia, is under fire.

It comes under fire from some very interesting places. The critics include the Vice-President of the Canadian Labour Congress, the President of the Nova Scotia Federation of Labour, and representatives of four tire companies: Uniroyal Ltd., Goodyear Canada Inc., The General Tire and Rubber Co. of Canada Ltd., and Firestone Canada Inc. One of the arguments advanced as to why federal aid should not be given to Michelin was that there has been a recession in the tire industry in Ontario and therefore it should not be supported in Nova Scotia.

The thing that concerns me, and will concern Nova Scotians, having suffered these other adverse blows, is: Are we now going to get another body blow that is clearly below the belt?

For years in Nova Scotia we looked forward to a regular, consistent policy of assistance in regional development to be produced by the federal government. As a result of that there was brought into existence the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, DREE so-called, and to that department funds were made available for the assistance of industry in the Atlantic region. A policy was set forth whereby these funds could be made available. If appropriate propositions were put forward there was a procedure by which the merits of the claim could be judged and a decision taken, and if the decision was favourable the help could be forthcoming.

Those are the procedures that were followed with respect to the Michelin claim. We now find that that assistance is being objected to; that the minister is being urged not to make that assistance available, and the minister is quoted as saying that the arguments were eloquent, to use his phrase, although he was not prepared to say how persuasive they were. He then said that the decision has not been taken, and that these representations will have to be studied very, very carefully.

My question to the Minister of State for Economic Development is: Have the policies that have been in force in the Department of Regional Economic Development been abandoned? Are we now about to see a change whereby pleas for assistance will be judged not on the basis of departmental policy but on the basis of the whims and wishes of a minister of that department.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I think the answer to the last part of the question is that the policies are known, and have been followed. However, to try to answer any other part of the honourable senator's remarks, which was really nearly a major speech rather than a question, is to comment on press speculation, and I have been around long enough to know that it is unwise to do that.

Hon. Robert Muir: Would the minister take it upon himself to speak in a sporting way to the Minister of Sport from the province of Nova Scotia, and the Minister of Finance, who I am sure are vitally interested in this situation with regard to Michelin. I do know that Senator Graham is interested. What a cosy little group. We have a representative from the CLC, the President of the Nova Scotia Federation of Labour and four large tire manufacturers pressing the present government, "Don't you dare give a nickel to the Province of Nova Scotia so they can start a plant." Is this the attitude we are going to have towards Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island when the big multinationals start putting the pressure on?

The ironic part is—if honourable senators will bear with me—that the representatives of labour, representing the same unions in many areas of Nova Scotia and Cape Breton Island, are saying, "We don't want any industry; we don't want it in Nova Scotia." I believe the government has its heart in the right place, and I hope we will get a good answer forthcoming from the minister.

Would the minister ask his colleagues to take a real good look at this? I know they have to meet, as the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport and others have done with groups and delegations, and as the minister himself has done in the past in whatever office he has held. Would the minister impress upon these other cabinet ministers not to listen too strongly to these representations that are being made?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am very sure that every one of the ministers who have been named by the honourable senator have read the press speculation or press reports of statements attributed to the people involved. I really will not need to remind them, but I will undertake to make sure that the honourable senator's concern is also conveyed to them.

ENERGY

TRANSPORTATION OF DOMESTIC OIL THROUGH PANAMA CANAL

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I should like to address a further question to the Minister of State for Economic Development on the matter of the supply of oil for Atlantic Canada. Has the government been considering, or is it now considering, the possibility of transporting western oil through the Panama Canal to the east coast of Canada to supply any deficiency that may arise from the inability to import from other sources?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I think I can answer fairly to that question that this is not under active consideration at the moment.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Would the minister be good enough to explain what I understand was the comment of the Minister for Energy, Mines and Resources, and why he took the opportunity to remind members of the other place today that they must have overlooked the existence of the Panama Canal if they are worrying about a source of importation of oil to assist in the deficiency that might arise in eastern Canada.

Senator Olson: I do not know the context in which that comment was made. I will give the honourable senator an undertaking to look it up, and perhaps tomorrow I can give a better explanation. Sometimes these things are said in the heat of debate in the other place. I am not sure that that happened in this case, but if it was done in that vein, maybe no further explanation is needed.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I shall look forward eagerly to hearing the explanation.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER—PROPOSED JOINT COMMITTEE—COLLECTIVE BARGAINING IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to reply to a question addressed to me by Senator Murray, who on May 1 last asked two questions arising from the annual report of the Commissioner of Official Languages. The first was whether or not a joint committee on language matters would be established. That, of course, was done tonight.

His second question asked what the position of the government was with respect to the recommendation that the provision of services in both official languages be a matter for bargaining with the Public Service unions.

Senator Murray will recall that in the answer I gave at that time I referred to certain sections of the act. However, further study of this question has lead us to believe that he is referring to those portions of the 1979 annual report, particularly pages 48 and 49, that deal with the problems, for example, of any conflict between seniority provisions, and the wish to provide services in both languages when the person entitled to the position by reason of seniority is unable to provide that service. I wonder if Senator Murray would agree that it would be a particularly appropriate question to put high on the priority list of matters to be studied by the joint committee.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Assuming that there is going to be some witness, some minister, who is mandated to speak for the government before that committee.

Senator Frith: I would not be able to give that undertaking, but I understand why, of course, it would be the honourable senator's suggestion, and I am sure the suggestion of some other members of the committee, that such a witness be asked to appear before it. It seems to me a natural consequence of raising the issue with the committee.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CUBAN REFUGEES—CANADIAN COMMITMENT

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on April 23 Senator Nurgitz asked how Canada's commitment to accept 300 Cuban refugees compared with the numbers that were accepted from Chile, and if Canada intended to increase its commitment.

Canada has accepted over 7,000 Chileans since the overthrow of the Allende government in 1973. As for increasing our Cuban commitment, it is premature to discuss any increase in those numbers at this time. Canada remains interested in the question of Cuban immigrants on humanitarian grounds, and we are willing to continue to assist in seeking a solution to this problem. To this end, Canada participated on May 8 of this year in international consultations in San Jose, Costa Rica, where ways of dealing with persons seeking to leave Cuba were discussed. We shall continue to follow the situation very closely.

BOYCOTT OF 1980 OLYMPIC GAMES—ALTERNATIVE GAMES

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): On May 6, 1980, Senator Nurgitz asked what plans, if any, were being made by the government for alternative games to the 1980 Moscow Olympics.

The answer is as follows:

> On April 30, 1980, the Fitness and Amateur Sport Branch of Sport Canada convened a meeting with the presidents, executive and technical directors of each of the summer Olympic sports. Sport Canada at that time presented its position regarding the basic principles and process for an alternative program to the Moscow Olympics.
>
> Honourable senators, I have a memorandum, dated April 30, 1980, from the Acting Director of Sport Canada to staff for the summer Olympic sports, setting out the particulars of alternate training and competitive opportunities. I propose that it be incorporated into the record.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The memorandum follows:)

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

1. Sport Canada does not support the concept of a multi-sport 'Counter Olympics' in the establishment of alternatives to participation in the 1980 Moscow Olympics.

2. Sport Canada supports the principle that the Olympic sports continue with their selection processes leading to the identification of their teams.

3. Sport Canada intends to assist those sports and athletes who will have qualified for the Moscow Olympics, to identify the highest competitive opportunity available.

4. Sport Canada intends to cancel the multi-sport Hanover Camp but will assist those sports that wish to use this venue as part of their alternative programs.

5. Sport Canada will assist those sports who will have qualified for the Moscow Olympics to re-align their national team programs in light of the Moscow Olympic boycott.

6. Funds previously approved for national sport governing body programs—e.g. Hanover Camp, C.O.A. contribution—which have now been freed will be used to supplement new training and competitive programs. First priority will be given to those sports and athletes who will have qualified for the Moscow Olympics.

PROCESS

7. Each Olympic sport that qualifies for the Moscow Olympics is requested to consult with Sport Canada to identify those projects which have become redundant in light of the Moscow boycott.

8. These Olympic sports should subsequently identify the associated dollar values generated from these redundant activities.

9. Sport Canada Consultants with the assistance of Mike Queale, will work with each sport to consider alternative programs with these established basic principles.

AIRLINES

APPLICATION OF EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS TO EXTEND SERVICES

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): On May 14 and May 15, 1980, by Senator Marshall and Senator Doody, questions were asked regarding the status of any appeal by Eastern Provincial Airways against the decision by the Canadian Transport Commission granting CP Air the right to serve the route Toronto-Halifax.

The answer is that the Minister of Transport has received an appeal by EPA. Interventions both for and against this appeal are still being received. An appeal has also been filed by Air Canada against the part of the CTC decision granting CP Air the right to serve the route Montreal-Halifax starting March 1, 1981. Interventions for and against this appeal are likely to be filed once the particulars of this appeal are made known. The Minister of Transport will decide on these appeals as soon as he has had an adequate opportunity to examine all of the interventions received.

Just as an addendum, honourable senators, appeals will not necessarily go to the cabinet. There are several avenues for appeal, depending under which act an appeal is filed. For example, the Minister of Transport could review the CTC decision and uphold it. Therefore, questions by honourable senators refer to representations to the Minister of Transport and not to cabinet.

[Senator Perrault.]

ENERGY

NEWFOUNDLAND—ENERGY POLICY OF FORMER FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Doody on May 15, 1980. The honourable senator asked when the Government of Canada intends to bring a reference before the Supreme Court to resolve the offshore resources issue with the Province of Newfoundland.

The answer is as follows:

> In April 1976 the federal government and the Government of Newfoundland agreed that the question of ownership of and jurisdiction over areas offshore from the province should be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada. Preparations for such a reference are therefore well-advanced, although a specific date can not be indicated at the present time.

NEWFOUNDLAND—LOWER CHURCHILL RIVER

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I would like to respond to a question asked by Senator Marshall during Question Period May 15, concerning consultation with the Government of Newfoundland relative to the Lower Churchill power development.

The Honourable Marc Lalonde and the Newfoundland Energy Minister, the Honourable Leo Barry, met on May 14 for preliminary discussions relating to energy. There was brief reference to the Lower Churchill hydroelectric potential but both governments are awaiting a report of the Lower Churchill Development Corporation before considering developmental possibilities. The report, scheduled to be completed in early June of this year, will advise as to the economic feasibility of two potential hydroelectric sites.

Mr. Barry asked that the federal government exercise jurisdiction over the interprovincial movement of electricity so that surplus power from the Churchill hydroelectric developments could be transported across Quebec and sold by Newfoundland in the maritime provinces. While there was not an in-depth discussion on interprovincial electrical energy transmission at the meeting, Mr. Barry presented a paper titled "Interprovincial Electricity Energy Transfers: the Constitutional Background" which Mr. Lalonde undertook to examine in detail preparatory to discussions on this matter and that of the Lower Churchill development at a later date. Mr. Lalonde also indicated he would want to discuss the matter of electric power transmission with the Quebec government.

QUEBEC AND MARITIMES PIPELINE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I wish to respond to a question asked by Senator Flynn during Question Period on May 16, concerning the length of time to complete construction of the natural gas pipeline to Quebec City.

In my initial comments when this question was first raised I indicated that construction of the pipeline would take less than two years, relying on the fact that we in Canada have probably the highest level of technology in the field of pipeline construction. I am pleased to be able to inform the senator that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has confirmed that the Quebec City section could be completed in 1981. Of course, construction of the entire distribution system would take longer to complete.

Honourable senators, I would like to reply to a question asked by Senator Donahoe during Question Period on May 16, concerning an imputation that he was running roughshod over the views of the Premier of Nova Scotia.

I would be delighted, as requested by the honourable senator, to withdraw any imputation that in his comments in this chamber he was running roughshod over the views of the Premier of Nova Scotia. What I had in fact said was that, in urging immediate construction of the Quebec and Maritime pipeline the honourable senator was asking us to run roughshod over the findings of the National Energy Board respecting environmental considerations. I went on to say that Senator Donahoe was also asking us to run roughshod over the considerations that were presented by the provinces concerning offshore development.

In response to the honourable senator's supplementary question about an immediate approval of the extension to the maritimes, I will state now, as I did in my remarks on May 15, that the government's preferred option remains the construction of the Quebec and Maritime pipeline to the maritimes; that we have urged the company to complete the necessary environmental studies, and that we are looking at ways to speed the exploration work at Hibernia and off Sable Island. Both issues obviously bear directly on construction of the Quebec and Maritime pipeline.

DOMESTIC OIL PRICING—IMPACT OF INCREASE IN PRICE OF OIL IMPORTED FROM SAUDI ARABIA

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I would like to respond to a question asked by Senator Muir during Question Period on May 15, concerning the increased price of Saudi Arabian oil.

Saudi Arabia has increased the export prices of all grades of crude oil by $US2 per barrel, bringing the price of its principal export crude, Arabian light, up to $US28 per barrel.

About 35 per cent of Canada's oil imports for domestic consumption are of Saudi crude oil. The cost of this increase to Canada and to the Oil Import Compensation Program will therefore be about $US70 averaged over all our imports. On an annual basis this is approximately $Can130 million.

With regard to related price increases by other OPEC countries, I have to report that several OPEC countries, including Venezuela, have recently announced increases in the export price of their crude oils.

Iraq, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates all raised prices by $US2 per barrel effective May 1st, while Venezuela has announced that effective May 26th, 1980, its crude oil export prices will increase by from $US1.00 to $3.50 per barrel.

About 15 per cent of Canada's imports are from the Middle East countries mentioned above while over 40 per cent come from Venezuela. The cost of this increase to Canada and the Oil Import Compensation Program will therefore be about $US1.50 on average over all our imports. On an annual basis this is approximately $Can270 million. This would be in addition to the $Can130 million consequent upon the Saudi Arabian increase of $2.00 a barrel.

ATLANTIC REGION—LOCATION OF LIQUEFIED NATURAL GAS TERMINAL

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I should like to respond to a question asked by Senator Donahoe during the Question Period on May 15 regarding the site of a liquefied natural gas regasification terminal for the Arctic Pilot Project, sponsored by Petro-Canada. The three potential sites are: near Quebec City on the St. Lawrence; the Strait of Canso, Nova Scotia; and Saint John, New Brunswick. No decision has yet been taken on the terminal site. Petro-Canada is examining the three sites in the light of the recent government approval of an extension of the natural gas transmission system to Quebec City.

I should like to inform honourable senators, and in particular the Leader of the Opposition, that that completes all of the questions I have outstanding.

Senator Flynn: Are you sure?

Senator Phillips: I am sorry to disagree with the minister, but I had asked whether the pipeline to Quebec was reversible and he was going to find that out for me. I know that the government is reversible, but I hope that the pipeline is reversible, too.

Senator Olson: I would expect that any government which never changes its point of view, even though the people want something else, would suffer the fate of a recent government that I know. However, I will take the question as notice.

Senator Flynn: You certainly would rather switch than fight.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

COMMEMORATIVE SILVER DOLLARS—QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER ANSWERED

Question No. 4—By Hon. Peter Bosa:

1. How many (a) commemorative silver dollars and (b) prestige sets were minted and sold in (i) 1978 and (ii) 1979?

2. How many commemorative silver dollars were sold to Canadians and how many were sold to individuals or coin dealers outside of Canada in (a) 1978 and (b) 1979?

Reply by the Minister of Supply and Services:

1. (a) (i) 638,142

(ii) 682,689

(b) (i) 147,238

(ii) 158,022

2. (a) Canada: 390,510

Outside: 247,632

(b) Canada: 350,912

Outside: 331,777

Question No. 5—By Hon. Peter Bosa:

1. How many ounces of silver were used by the Royal Canadian Mint to produce commemorative silver dollars in (a) 1978 and (b) 1979?

2. (a) What is the present inventory of silver at the disposal of the Mint; (b) when was it acquired and (c) what was the cost per ounce?

Reply by the Minister of Supply and Services:

1. (a) 280,396.50 troy oz.

(b) 342,681.75 troy oz.

2. As at December 31, 1979:

(a) 77,960.13 troy oz.

(b) from April 1, 1969 to December 31, 1979

(c) Average book value cost of $Can 7.15 per ounce.

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Hicks, seconded by the Honourable Senator Deschatelets, P.C., for second reading of the Bill S-2, intituled: "An Act to implement conventions between Canada and Spain, Canada and the Republic of Liberia, Canada and the Republic of Austria, Canada and Italy, Canada and the Republic of Korea, Canada and the Socialist Republic of Romania and Canada and the Republic of Indonesia and agreements between Canada and Malaysia, Canada and Jamaica and Canada and Barbados and a convention between Canada and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax." (Honourable Senator Grosart).

Senator Macdonald: Honourable senators, Senator Grosart is absent on public business and has asked me to request that Senator Nurgitz be allowed to speak in his place.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, in the last session I moved the second reading of a similar bill and was followed in the debate by Senator Hicks. This year our roles have been reversed. Senator Hicks' explanation of this bill was excellent, and I congratulate him. His explanation was more detailed than the one I gave some months ago, although I believe there were fewer countries involved in the tax conventions bill at that time.

Honourable senators, it is regrettable that these agreements cannot all be uniform, but, as Senator Hicks mentioned in this house before, there is some difficulty in that each one is negotiated separately. It is also regrettable that we cannot have more of these conventions, but I commend the bill to this house and urge the government to bring on many more. I assume that further comments can be raised in committee.

On motion of Senator Laird, for Senator Hayden, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 28, 1980

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE OF FIRST MINISTERS

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to say at the outset how pleased we on this side are to see the Leader of the Government back in his place. I know he was here last evening, but only for a short period and I didn't get a chance to tell him how much we miss him when he is not in his place. The reason we miss him is that he is always willing and able to give us direct and precise answers.

Senator Perrault: As always.

Senator Flynn: So today I want to again give him the opportunity to prove that point.

I am sure the Leader of the Government and all honourable senators share my satisfaction at the positive attitude taken by the provincial governments in this country to the prospect of co-operating to reform the Constitution. My question relates to a remark by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who, in a prepared speech delivered yesterday, suggested that the motives of the Government of Alberta were to get "economic sovereignty with political association."

Can the Leader of the Government tell us whether the minister was speaking for the federal government when he imputed a motive of a new type of sovereignty association to the Government of Alberta?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am sure the last thing that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would do would be to impute motives unfairly to anyone. That simply is not his style.

Senator Flynn: What is his style?

Senator Smith (Colchester): I guess he changed his style on this occasion.

Senator Perrault: Also, I note with interest that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition is quoting from a fragmentary account which appeared in some periodical. I have not had the opportunity yet to read the entire speech, but I am sure that in the total context it will be fair, as usual.

Senator Smith (Colchester): That is a short and precise answer.

Senator Flynn: The remarks of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources dealt principally with Alberta in respect of the views of that province on resources, and those views are shared by the governments of Saskatchewan, Newfoundland and British Columbia. Isn't that right, Senator Steuart?

Senator Steuart: I am not on your side.

Senator Flynn: I didn't say that you were on my side. I am simply wondering whether you are on the side of the Government of Saskatchewan. That is something else.

Senator Steuart: On one side.

Senator Flynn: You are one-sided; I don't doubt that. Is it the view of the federal government that those provinces also seek economic sovereignty with political association?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, over the course of the many meetings of first ministers and officials to follow, discussions will be held on a number of matters, and, undoubtedly the subject of resources will be on some future agenda. The government looks forward to productive talks involving first ministers on this and a number of other subjects.

Senator Flynn: It seems to me that in preparation for these talks on constitutional reform—and I understand there is going to be an initial meeting on June 9 next—the Prime Minister and some of his cabinet colleagues—and I exclude, of course, Senator Perrault, who is always very prudent—have been saying things that would suggest that only their concept of a new Constitution is going to be put before the provincial premiers and that the views of other parties represented in this Parliament will not be considered, and are taboo.

Can the Leader of the Government tell us whether the Prime Minister really means that only his concept of a new Constitution is going to be acceptable? He has said that everything is negotiable, but every time he makes a statement he seems to reject any suggestion that is not in harmony with his own views.

Senator Perrault: The suggestion by the Leader of the Opposition that the government is not open to ideas and new concepts with respect to this important subject of constitutional change and reform does not accord with the facts. The Right Honourable the Prime Minister has said on many occasions that he welcomes the thinking of the premiers of the various provinces and other parliamentarians.

In that regard, honourable senators, might I suggest that we consider the possibility of having a two- or three-day debate in this chamber on the subject of constitutional change and reform. It is important that members of this house make a full contribution to this important national dialogue.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

• (1415)

Senator Perrault: I appreciate the fact that support seems to be emanating from all corners of the house. I am sure the views of honourable senators will be given careful consideration by this government and the Prime Minister. We are at an important time historically in this nation, and it would be unwise for any government or any Prime Minister to be less than open to ideas and suggestions. Perhaps we can discuss this week with the Leader of the Opposition the dates on which such a debate might move forward.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, I would like to put a supplementary question concerning the first ministers' meeting which apparently will be held on June 9, following the announcement made in the other place by the Prime Minister.

First, did the Prime Minister enclose with his invitation to the premiers a working agenda to enable them to be ready for that meeting on June 9?

[English]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, at this time I have no knowledge of a working agenda that has been mailed to the provincial first ministers. I understand that the June 9 meeting is to be a preliminary one and that the intention is not to resolve all outstanding problems or to come up with a final package of constitutional change.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: Does the government leader know whether at that meeting on June 9 the federal government intends to set up a constitutional revision standing conference of the premiers and the federal government, excluding the other political parties at the provincial and federal levels?

[English]

Senator Perrault: One of the purposes of the meeting on June 9 is to resolve questions of future proceedings and procedures. One of the reasons for the meeting, I understand, is to work out an agenda for future conferences and meetings of which, no doubt, there will be many in the months to come.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: As a clarification, if the federal government suggests a meeting on June 9—and as the government leader has just mentioned, there will be several other meetings in the months to come—can he tell us what priority in the constitutional revisions the federal government intends to submit to the provinces? We have heard that the first priority would be the outright abolition of the Senate. As we are concerned, we should learn about it from the government leader so as to get involved in the consideration of that priority, since the abolition of the Senate will apparently be the first priority in that constitutional revision?

• (1420)

[English]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the priorities have not yet been established; nor has the agenda been established. I know that all of us look forward to the speech that the honourable senator may wish to give in the Senate on the subject of constitutional change. I know that he will have his own views on priorities, which will be listened to carefully by all honourable senators.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: If the premiers are called upon—it would be useful to be able to be heard, my question does not seem to have been heard—if the provincial premiers are called upon to come to Ottawa on June 9, they should be told beforehand why they meet, or they should receive a letter suggesting the mechanisms considered by the federal government for the process of constitutional change. Could he therefore indicate in the first place why the provincial premiers are summoned for June 9? There must be an objective, or is it simply to ask them if they agree the Constitution should be changed, this being the only reason for the meeting?

[English]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it may well be beneficial to have a statement in the chamber tomorrow afternoon on the subject of the anticipated meeting. The questions asked by the honourable senator are relevant. I do not have all the answers at present, but I hope to provide information tomorrow.

ENERGY

OIL EXPLORATION INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, my question is for the Minister of State for Economic Development. It has been announced that the federal government is planning a new petroleum exploration incentive program that would use grants in place of tax incentives to reward Canadian-owned companies that explore in frontier areas. It is also reported that this scheme will be funded through cutbacks in other resource tax incentive programs.

Would the minister tell us if, in the government's analysis, existing non-frontier exploration will be adversely affected by a discontinuance of certain resource tax incentive programs, and, if so, to what extent?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the way the question is put makes it almost impossible for me to answer except by way of speculation. The senator said that it had been reported, without providing the source of, or giving any credibility to, those reports. However, one part of the question is valid. In the Speech from the Throne there was an indication, and there have been follow-up statements, to the effect that some sort of incentive program will be provided for Canadian companies, as an incentive to do this developing, especially in the frontier areas. That program has not yet been worked out.

I could go on to tell my honourable friend that there are some difficulties with having it strictly a tax-related incentive, because, of course, if a company were not in the proper tax category through its taxable earnings, the program would not apply. So it would broaden the scope somewhat to move it from strictly a tax expenditure to grants.

That is not by way of an announcement, but is one of the aspects being considered. I hope the matter can be decided so that people in the industry will know reasonably soon.

Senator Balfour: A supplementary question: Is the minister saying that, at this stage, at any rate, the government is not in a position to announce even a ballpark budget figure that would be allocated to this program?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, very simply the answer is no, we are not yet at that stage. The senator will, of course, realize that the super depletion allowance expired a few weeks ago, and we believe it is useful to have fairly concentrated and involved discussions with the industry to find out what is the most effective way of promoting a Canadian incentive for this purpose.

● (1425)

Senator Balfour: Is the minister telling the Senate that the detailed story in the Globe and Mail this morning, under the by-line of Jeff Carruthers, is speculative and not factual?

Senator Olson: Well, I have to admit that although I had heard the story was there, I have not read it because I have not had time; but I will not only read it some time later today, I will get an assessment, if I can, from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, to see if it is speculative in the sense that some kind of announcement will be made soon.

Senator Balfour: After he has had the advantage of reading this story which I can assure him is very detailed in content, if he agrees with me in my analysis of the story, will the minister be prepared to make a more definitive statement in this chamber tomorrow so as to inform honourable senators with respect to the budget implications and other implications of the program? I leave that with the minister to consider.

Honourable senators, I have another question but it is along a slightly different line. What steps does the government intend to take to reserve the exodus of independent Canadian oil companies from non-frontier areas in western Canada, resulting from the relatively more favourable economic climate prevailing south of the border?

Senator Olson: Well, we hope that there will be some additional incentive to remain in Canada and do that exploration, but the honourable senator knows that one of the activities that has been going on at a very high level in western Canada is the exploration and development of gas fields. There are over 8,000 wells in Alberta that are capped because there is an insufficient market for the product. We have done a number of things in that respect, including getting on with the Montreal-east pipeline that will pick up some of that volume, and we hope that we will have an agreement ready in time for the Foothills people to be able to go ahead with the prebuild. That will take some of that volume, also. In addition, when the negotiations are completed between the producing provinces and the federal government, it is hoped that there will be some indication that the results will be beneficial from the point of view of further investment in exploration and development.

OIL IMPORTED FROM MEXICO—COST OF CONVERSION

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development. With reference to the agreement with the Mexican government to supply 50,000 barrels of oil per day, has the Canadian government, in order to assess the final costs per barrel to the Canadian consumer, taken into consideration any of the conversion costs that Canadian plants may have to incur to refine that oil?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I am sure that the government has, although I do not have a detailed explanation of the additional costs or who would be expected to pay them, but I have in front of me a copy of the joint statement made by the President of Mexico and the Prime Minister of Canada yesterday. There are a couple of paragraphs on pages 3 and 4 that deal with petroleum purchases. The question raised by the honourable senator is not specifically dealt with, but if he would like a copy of this statement I will see that he gets one.

Senator Charbonneau: Thank you. Assuming that these costs exist, and I think they do, will they be considered as supplementary subsidies, absorbed by the government in terms of the equalization of petroleum prices, or will they be included in those cloudy Liberal blended prices or costs?

• (1430)

Senator Olson: I will try to answer that question in spite of the preamble which makes it difficult, because I cannot agree that there is anything cloudy about the Liberals' blended price.

Senator Flynn: Nothing unusual.

Senator Olson: It is perfectly clear, and I cannot take responsibility for my friend's inability to assimilate straight facts.

Senator Smith (Colchester): It is hard to find any around here.

Senator Olson: I would first of all have to find out what the present status is, and I have to admit, quite frankly, that I do not know whether there is a difference in the cost of the compensation program.

Senator Flynn: It is cloudy.

Senator Olson: No, it is not cloudy; it is perfectly clear, whether or not it is a part of the present arrangement for paying compensation. If that is so, I will also try to find out whether it is going to be extended to different grades of oil that are not normally used in those refineries.

OIL—CONSERVATION MEASURES

Hon. Cyril B. Sherwood: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources recently announced in Montreal a government policy to encourage substitution of other fuels for oil, the objective being to reduce our demand for oil to only 10 per cent of total energy needs. This policy is very similar to the one announced by the previous government but without the specifics. Could the minister tell us what the target date is for achieving this goal?

[Senator Charbonneau.]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Yes, honourable senators—as soon as possible.

Senator Sherwood: In order that Canadians might be assured that more than rhetoric is involved in this announcement, could the minister tell us what particular incentives the government plans in order to achieve this worthy objective?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, each time a wide-ranging question like this is asked, it is somewhat difficult for me to go through all the details. There are many different approaches to oil conservation. There can be substitution by, for example, deeper penetration into the market that is already connected to the gas supply in Canada, and the extension of that main supply system all the way to the east coast as soon as possible. There are a number of other factors to be considered respecting the use of alternative fuels. I can bring in a pretty detailed statement, but that has been public information for a long time.

Senator Sherwood: I would not expect the minister to tell us here and now, but would he undertake to inform this chamber in detail what is being done to encourage the development of other alternatives? I am thinking of gasohol, methane, hydrogen, wind, sea and solar production.

Senator Olson: Yes. Tomorrow or no later than next week I will bring a detailed list of the exploratory actions being taken, including the ones that my honourable friend has mentioned, although there are many more.

Senator Sherwood: I note that the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board is back. Since the production of gasohol depends on the production of alcohol from grain and other crops, would the minister tell us how attentively the government and the Department of Agriculture are inquiring into this matter?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I am not sure how far the department is inquiring into this, but I am certainly prepared to look into it. It is debatable as to how far one would go in changing feed grain into fuel for any purpose. There are two schools of thought on this question. A gasohol program might be excellent if we had huge surpluses of grain that were burdensome and in danger of rotting, and there was no chance to feed them to livestock or humans. This question would have to be looked at very carefully. I would be prepared to furnish details at a later date.

• (1435)

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS—PRICING POLICY

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. Last night when speaking to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, besides putting forward his interpretation of the constitutional position to be taken by the Province of Alberta, the Minister of Energy gave strong indications that the federal government will impose a tax on all petroleum products as part of its proposed new energy pricing structure.

Will the Minister of State for Economic Development confirm that the government is tending towards this method of increasing its energy revenues?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have answered questions like that many times. What they are based on is some interpretation of some speculation, and all I can say to the honourable senator is that when announcements of policy are ready to be made for and on behalf of the government, the honourable senator and every member of this chamber will know.

Senator Flynn: We want to know the meaning of what the minister said.

Senator Asselin: Is what he said true?

Senator Smith (Colchester): The answers are too cloudy.

Senator Donahoe: If the honourable minister wants to say that the pointblank statements made by the Minister of Energy are speculation, then he is free to say so. But he said it; I didn't say it. It is certainly quite clear that what the minister said was that the blended made-in-Canada price for oil will be an extension of the system adopted several years ago to permit two oil sands plants in Alberta to get world prices for their output of synthetic crude oil. So it is pretty clear that what the minister was saying, according to any ordinary interpretation of his words, was that there is to be an energy tax on all oil.

Now, my supplementary question, in light of that fact, is—

Senator Olson: That is not a fact but an opinion.

Senator Donahoe: If it is an opinion, it is not my opinion. It is the Minister of Energy's opinion.

Senator Olson: It is your interpretation of where it leads to, and that is an opinion; it is not a fact.

Senator Donahoe: In light of the fact that such a tax—as distinct from the tax proposed in the Crosbie budget—would apply to consumers of all petroleum products including home heating oil, is the minister in a position to tell us whether the government, should it implement this tax, plans to assist hard-hit energy consumers in any way?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, this is getting ridiculous. The honourable senator now comes along and asks if the government, should it implement what he speculates to be the result of what he read in the newspaper, will do something in addition. The honourable senator knows very well I would not comment in any way, shape or form on a question with that kind of preamble. I will have to say again, if he does not understand, that when changes or conclusions are reached on an overall energy package they will be announced, and they will be announced by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Senator Donahoe: If they are to be announced, may we have some assurance that they will be announced in Parliament, and not before a body like the Canadian Manufacturers' Association?

Senator Olson: I cannot give him assurance on where the Minister of Energy chooses to make his announcements. He will do that in Parliament as much as possible, as every cabinet minister does. There are other occasions when it is more appropriate in the interests of Canada to make them in other places, and that decision will be made from time to time.

• (1440)

I know the honourable senator, or at least his colleague, complained that the minister made an announcement in Montreal about the extension of the pipeline from Montreal into eastern Quebec. I just don't think that is a valid criticism. There is an announcement made right in the area where the people of Canada are affected.

My colleague will make announcements about wheat in western Canada from time to time, and probably my colleague the Minister of Fisheries will make announcements about fisheries and other policies in the area where people are affected, and we make no apology for doing that.

Senator Asselin: Playing politics—not surprising.

OIL IMPORT COMPENSATION FUND DEFICIT

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance will not be bringing in a budget until some unspecified date in the indefinite future, and in view of the fact that the negotiations between the federal government and the oil-producing provinces do not get under way until some time in June, and that it is unlikely—this is an opinion—that they will reach an agreement by the expiry of the deadline, will the minister undertake to place before us the latest government revenue projections and expenditure projections, and the size of the budgetary deficit, as these are updated from time to time within the government; and will he also undertake to track for us the ever onward and upward growth of the deficit in the Oil Import Compensation Fund so that we may be able from time to time to calculate with more precision the cost to Canada of the government's leisurely approach to its responsibilities?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Yes, I will be prepared to bring to this house a statement of that kind, and updated assessments as often as the Minister of Finance makes them. However, I think the honourable senator will realize that a very complete statement was made on or about May 14—I am not sure of the exact date—which was then called a mini budget, or something like that. What it was, in fact, was a response to the opposition, who wanted an update. At this point in time we cannot give any indication until the minister is ready to bring in a budget.

I think he did have something to say, both at that time and since, about what the cost of the oil compensation program was doing to the overall costs to the federal treasury. I had better not speculate or try to recall the exact figures, but I think he said something within the last week or so about what those costs had escalated to.

Senator Murray: It is going up all the time.

Senator Olson: That is right, it is going up all the time.

Senator Murray: Which is why I wanted an update.

QUEBEC AND MARITIMES PIPELINE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question by Senator Phillips who asked on May 15 if the Q & M pipeline would be reversible.

I should like to inform the honourable senator that the Montreal to Quebec City portion of the Q & M pipeline will not be immediately installed as a reversible pipeline. However, the future possibility of reversing the line has been taken into account and can be achieved through adjustments to the compressor stations. This is not regarded as a difficult engineering problem, and if future discoveries of offshore gas are sufficiently large, gas can be transported from east to west. In respect of the proposed Quebec City-Maritime section, a decision on its reversibility would, of course, be based on the size of the offshore discoveries, and I have already emphasized our determination to facilitate this process at an early date.

Senator Phillips: That is a blended answer.

TRANSPORTATION OF DOMESTIC OIL THROUGH PANAMA CANAL

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have a reply to a question asked by Senator Smith (Colchester) during the Question Period on May 27 concerning the shipment of oil to the maritimes via the Panama Canal.

There is no discrepancy between my statement yesterday, that this matter is not under active consideration, and the reference of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to the same subject. In responding to a question concerning shipment of oil by tanker from Montreal to Halifax the minister noted that should it be necessary at some future date to supplement eastern oil supplies it is also possible to ship oil via the Panama Canal.

As I have already indicated, this is not seen as a requirement at this time, and therefore it is not something the government has under active consideration. I will reiterate, however, that this government is prepared to take whatever steps are necessary to assure a secure supply of oil and gas for all regions of Canada, including the maritimes. This has been the focus of the decision between the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and his provincial counterparts, and we will make an announcement on this matter at the conclusion of the discussions with the provinces.

AGRICULTURE

PROPOSED EASTERN CANADA POTATO MARKETING AGENCY

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question asked by Senator Macquarrie on May 7.

[Senator Murray.]

The answer is: The Honourable Eugene Whelan, Minister of Agriculture, met with the Ministers of Agriculture from the provinces of Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and officials from the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, on April 15, 1980. As a result of this meeting the ministers from all provinces, with the exception of Quebec, agreed that the National Farm Products Marketing Council should be approached concerning the establishment of a marketing agency. The minister then directed the chairperson and the Marketing Council to undertake hearings to determine the merits of establishing a marketing organization, and to report their findings with dispatch.

The Eastern Canada Potato Producers Council has also undertaken to prepare and sponsor a detailed proposal for a marketing agency under the National Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. Their goal is to complete and present the proposal to the Marketing Council by the end of May.

On receipt of the proposal the Marketing Council will publish information concerning the hearings, which should commence towards the end of July. By regulation, the Marketing Council must allow 45 days between publication of notice and commencement of hearings. If all activities proceed according to plan, it is the government's goal to have a marketing organization in place by late January or early February, 1981, in time for the 1981-82 crop year. Therefore, the expectation is to have this plan in operation, not for the present crop year but for the next.

NATIONAL FINANCE

NOTICE OF ATTENDANCE OF GOVERNOR OF THE BANK OF CANADA AT COMMITTEE MEETING

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: In connection with the hearings of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on Regional Economic Disparities, I would remind honourable senator that the witness at 9:30 tomorrow morning will be the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Hicks, seconded by the Honourable Senator Deschatelets, P.C., for second reading of the Bill S-2, intituled: "An Act to implement conventions between Canada and Spain, Canada and the Republic of Liberia, Canada and the Republic of Austria, Canada and Italy, Canada and the Republic of Korea, Canada and the Socialist Republic of Romania and Canada and the Republic of Indonesia and agreements between Canada and Malaysia, Canada and Jamaica and Canada and Barbados and a convention between Canada and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax".—(Honourable Senator Hayden).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have Senator Hayden's instruction and authority to yield this order to Senator Hicks.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have to remind the Senate that if Senator Hicks speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Hicks: Honourable senators, if no one else wishes to speak in this debate, I do not think it necessary for me to say very much about this bill. I thank Senator Nurgitz for the support he gave the bill in his remarks last evening.

I know that had he been here Senator Grosart would have commented on the long delay in the ratification of these treaties, and asked me as to the state of affairs in the interim since the treaties were signed and before they are ratified, so I will put the answer to that question on the record.

• (1450)

The Treaty with Malaysia was the first to be signed. It was signed at Ottawa on October 15, 1976. Three of the remaining treaties were signed in 1976, one in 1977, four in 1978, one in 1979, and the last one, that with Barbados, was signed on January 22, 1980.

If we look at the convention with Austria we see that Article XXIX, under the heading "Entry into Force," states:

> 1. This Convention shall be ratified and the instruments of ratification shall be exchanged at Ottawa.
> 2. The Convention shall enter into force 60 days after the exchange of the instruments of ratification and its provisions shall have effect:
>
> (a) in respect of tax withheld at the source on amounts paid on or after the first day of January in the calendar year in which the exchange of instruments of ratification takes place; and
> (b) in respect of other tax for taxation years beginning on or after the first day of January in the calendar year in which the exchange of instruments of ratification takes place.

All the other conventions or treaties contain, I believe, the same article, or one similar to it.

Therefore, honourable senators, as long as we pass this bill in time for the formal ratification to take place during the year 1980, the avoidance of double taxation will occur to the benefit of taxpayers from the beginning of this taxation year in 1980, but there will be no avoidance of double taxation for citizens of the treaty countries in relation to those treaties which were signed, let us say, in 1976 for the years 1976, 1977, 1978 and 1979. So the conventions will come into force only for the taxation year beginning in this year, 1980.

If there are no further questions, I will conclude by inviting support for the second reading of this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Senator Hicks moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, May 15, consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's Speech at the Opening of the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament, and the motion of Senator Rousseau, seconded by Senator Hays, for an Address in reply thereto.

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, honour to whom honour is due. I want first to offer my compliments and my congratulations to our new Speaker. On the basis of a long friendship that was never broken since we started studying at the department of social sciences at Laval University at a time I will not identify with a specific date, as well as on the basis of the expertise he has acquired during an exceptional career, I am happy for him, and particularly for us, with the appointment of Jean Marchand to the highest and most prestigious office in this house.

In that tribute to our present Speaker, I want to include his predecessor, Senator Grosart, who unfortunately is not here this afternoon, but at least he will be able to read it in Hansard. During the too short period in which he presided over our debates, as a new member in this house I particularly appreciated his way of handling things which was both respectful of the rules and coloured with his own personal touch of humour.

To Honourable Senators Flynn and Perrault, I also offer my congratulations for their confirmation in their positions as leaders of the formations to which we belong. For both of them there is in that confirmation a continuance of the alternance that will continue in future, a not too distant future, hopefully, at least for us on this side of the house.

To the mover and seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, Senator Rousseau and Senator Hays, I express all my admiration for the presentation and the quality of their speeches at the beginning of this debate.

Honourable senators, on the day of the referendum, a day that already seems far away, not in calendar time but some sort of psychological time, the people of Quebec rendered the verdict we know, a verdict based on an unprecedented participation, at least in Quebec, of the electorate and which does not leave any doubt, Quebecers said NO to sovereignty-association but at the same time asked with a surprising and unexpected majority, at least as far as I am concerned, for major changes in the Canadian federal system.

They did so as some sort of an act of faith in the assurances of constitutional reform that were repeated over and over again to them during the referendum period.

Indeed, the Speech from the Throne was already explicit about that, and I quote:

> Because my Government wants to strengthen the spirit of Canadian unity and nurture the seeds of renewal, it promises to interpret a vote of "no" to sovereignty-association as a vote for the rebuilding of the Canadian federation. My Government also promises to give effect to a "no" vote by mobilizing all the forces at its command in order to ensure the renewal of the Federation in a spirit of respect and justice for all.

In a spectacular and even dramatic way, in his speech on May 14, the Right Honourable Prime Minister of Canada solemnly reiterated that commitment to Quebecers and Canadians as a whole, even indicating to them that in a certain way he would put his future on the line in carrying out the meaning of a NO in the referendum for them and the country as a whole.

The Leader of the official Opposition expressed the same point of view when he addressed Quebecers on various occasions. The provincial premiers and so many other speakers both outside and within Quebec said the same thing.

A perhaps somewhat gloomy observation by a Quebecer in passing, is: "Never before had we witnessed such proliferation of refusals of the status quo and of intentions to renew the federation."

● (1500)

In fact, if only because of the commitments made and the promises that Quebecers were urged to believe, there is no doubt that they did not vote purely and simply against sovereignty-association; they voted for a true constitutional reform.

This is indeed the interpretation of the vote last May 20 from all quarters. So much so that the next day the solemn commitments and promises made during the referendum campaign were transformed into a sort of feverish precipitation of new ideas, a program of concrete measures the first of which will have been the spectacular whirlwind tour of the provincial capitals by the federal minister responsible for constitutional matters and the next, it would seem, a meeting of the premiers at the beginning of June.

Thus the process of constitutional reform is therefore already under way.

What will be the role of the Senate in this process? When and how should we get involved and what should our perspective be?

Senator Lamontagne mentioned these matters the other day in the last part of his pre-referendum intervention and, to a certain extent a little while ago, many of the questions Senator Asselin was asking the Leader of the Government had to do with this. These are the same matters that I would like to deal with today.

It seemed in fact that the pace which governments seemed to want to give to their constitutional work merits some exploration as soon as possible and that the decisions required from us should also be taken as soon as possible.

Whether it will take place in a wholesale way or in a piecemeal fashion the constitutional reform will necessarily involve the following steps.

First of all, there will be intergovernmental negotiations through conferences between civil servants or ministers or the first ministers' conference. The negotiations will give rise to proposals, on which, supposedly, the first ministers will have reached a consensus. Governments per se will then intervene to approve the project designed by the first ministers. Provincial legislatures will also be called upon to intervene and finally, in the last step of the process, the new Constitution project will be sent jointly by the Senate and the House of Commons to the Queen with a request that Her Majesty submit it to the Parliament of the United Kingdom.

One can easily imagine the diverse and difficult problems which such a process would raise and which must be resolved if the goal is to be met and if the result is to be a new federal agreement, a new Constitution, a brand new one as the Prime Minister said last week.

Among the numerous problems, there is one which concerns us directly and which holds more importance for us. The problem stems from the fact that in principle, the Senate must intervene in the process only at the final stage of the request to Her Majesty, whatever this request might be, whether it is purely and simply a repatriation of the current Constitution with or without an amending formula, whether it be to amend it or replace it by a new one. It is only at this stage of events that the Senate will be called upon to intervene. Its intervention will then consist of adopting, as is, or after amendment, the project already adopted by the House of Commons, in much the same way as it usually intervenes for federal legislation.

It seems to me our position then would be embarrassing, to say the least, in discharging our role under the current constitution.

How will we decently perform our duty as an upper chamber, once the proposed new Constitution has gone through all stages except ours?

Clearly we will be faced with a basic dilemma: either we deal with the bill as we deal with any legislation coming to us from the House of Commons, and any change of substance that we could then make would entail starting anew all the stages in a process that certainly would have been very strenuous, in what would appear to be some sort of unacceptable abuse of discretion, since we have been nominated rather than elected to this house, while all other assemblies, both federal and provincial, include elected representatives of the people; or again we rubberstamp the proposal, without analysis nor criticism, and certainly without any major change, be it by a vote where the majority rule would play in this house as in the other, or be it by some sort of consensus of prior unanimity, which in either case would be unacceptable as a matter of principle from the standpoint of this house's role in our parliamentary system, which it must perform in toto as long as it is not abolished.

It is no doubt in order to help us find the way out of such a dilemma that Senator Lamontagne formulated the proposal he put before us two weeks ago. He suggested that we should not delay getting into the constitutional reform process nor that we wait until piecemeal proposals, as and when they are prepared, come before us, nor should we wait until the final stage of an Address to the Queen on a proposed new Constitution but we should act right now on our own and within our own institutional framework.

Must our constitutional work proceed in the shape of a first stage, as suggested by Senator Lamontagne, that of a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, and later a second stage, that of a special committee?

Should we even have a work schedule in two stages, the first of which would be:

> "restricted to a comparative and critical study of the reports and documents already published . . . in order to . . . focus on a few basic points"

The "overall reform of federalism" being reserved for the second change?

Personally, I see no need for these two stages, and no need either to create a subcommittee in the first place. On the other hand I would see only advantages in merging the two stages and establishing right now the special committee proposed by Senator Lamontagne.

These however are minor issues. The main thrust of Senator Lamontagne's proposal, if I grasped his true intent, is the institution of a purely Senate committee.

I am in total agreement with that approach, both for the immediate term and later on, for the following reason that is basic in my view. In the performance of our role as an upper chamber within the Canadian Parliament, we should maintain our independence in respect of the House of Commons in the usual Canadian legislative process; all the more so must we maintain it in the process of constitutional reform; all the more so must we maintain it as concerns the executive power. In any case, we must maintain it "against any combination of majorities in the assembly," as Sir John A. Macdonald once said.

● (1510)

In summary, whether it is to maintain the required distance between the Senate and House of Commons and the executive or else to go beyond the cleavage of political groups, I agree wholeheartedly with the proposal of Senator Lamontagne that the Senate should establish its own committee on constitutional reform, that this committee should be, and remain, exclusively of the Senate, and that its membership should take no account of the various political labels which identify us from each other.

By taking such steps to protect our independence, we shall however be accentuating the dilemma that I mentioned earlier. Indeed, whatever our objectives and our aspirations as far as our work is concerned, before putting our ideas to good use this time, and not only before undertaking anything or making any move, shall we have to wait for others to submit proposals?

I am supposing, rashly perhaps, that our studies will bear fruit and lead us to novel considerations which have eluded those who come before us in the official process of constitutional review, to the extent that we choose to keep to ourselves the results of our reflections without communicating them to the outside world before the last stage of the process, and to the same extent as we shall remain locked in the dilemma that I mentioned earlier.

Our work will not escape this dilemma and will only have a real significance if it can be communicated in some way to the other parties before the die is cast. I therefore believe that timely communication of the result of this work is a prerequisite if we want to have any real input in the evolution process.

How can we achieve this without jeopardizing the independence we cherish and without, by the same token, associating ourselves unduly with the decisions that other government or parliamentary bodies will have to make before us?

Perhaps we could meet our objective in this way:

First of all, supposing that our special committee is formed in the near future and that its terms of reference will be to prepare comprehensive constitutional recommendations, we could probably accept the suggestion of Senator Lamontagne and ask this committee to identify very rapidly a few major themes which we well know must be included in any new constitutional project. To give but one example of such themes, it is very obvious, at least it seems obvious to me, that a charter of basic rights and freedoms, including linguistic rights, must be included in the reformed Constitution.

I could give other examples, but I particularly wish to emphasize or describe the criterion we could use to identify those five or six themes—I do not believe there should necessarily be more than that, five or six would already be very significant—the five or six themes to be considered in priority. This criterion could be as follows: that each theme be related to a problem of which the Canadian community as a whole is aware, or, more colloquially, to a hot issue, and that it can be treated relatively independently from the Constitution as a whole without jeopardizing the general balance of this whole, whose purpose and final form will appear later on when certain decisions have been made on more fragmentary components.

Second, the special committee would be required to report to the Senate on each of the themes chosen while respecting the order of priorities established, and this report would have to include its constitutional proposals on the matter.

Third, a special debate could then be held, and I must emphasize in passing that some of the suggestions might not be in complete accordance with procedural rules. The fact that I am a novice might explain certain oversights on my part concerning these rules. In essence, this is the idea.

Senator Frith: A debate after the committee has reported.

Senator Tremblay: Exactly, a special debate could be held in the Senate on each report.

In this case, the choice of the first debate theme will, of course, be a determining factor. It is on that choice that finally rests the challenge which the previous suggestions imply and on which they are based—the challenge that our proceedings reach all intervening parties in the process of constitutional reform, indeed the whole community. A challenge, in fact, on the way our proceedings will be treated in the mass media, which, I assume, should be different from what it is now, judging by the attendance in the press gallery!

If, for instance, the first theme chosen was the question of language rights, it is my conviction that we would thus open the door to ulterior debates on other themes, especially if we succeeded in dealing with it somewhat originally.

However complex and decisive our work could be, the problems I have just outlined are related to our integration into the process and evolution of constitutional reform. Those problems nonetheless remain matters that concern the operational logistics and the mechanics of our relations with other authorities concerned.

I consider as more important and more significant still the problems we will have to solve regarding our approach to the substance of the reform and our point of view, whether in analysing the projects likely to come before us, or in devising projects of our own.

Those problems already exist regarding the role the Senate plays in the present system in federal legislation; all the more will those problems occur regarding the role it will play in constitutional reform.

What indeed does the Senate mean in our federal system? From what intentions and what reasons did it originate?

This issue would probably have only a historical and speculative scope if we considered it only, as historians do, as a way to ascertain the intentions of the Fathers of Confederation on the matter at the time. But above and beyond its historical dimension it acquired a here and now importance when the Supreme Court set the intentions of the Fathers of Confederation in present day reality and ruled on the unconstitutionality of the provisions of Bill C-60 concerning the Senate. I will limit myself to what the Supreme Court itself invoked to base its judgment on the role of the Senate and on our role as members of this chamber.

The Supreme Court first of all quoted Sir John A. Macdonald:

> In order to protect local interests and to prevent sectional jealousies, it was found requisite that the three great divisions into which British North America is separated, should be represented in the Upper House on the principle of equality. There are three great sections, having different interests, in this proposed Confederation.

The difference was already recognized at that time!

> To the Upper House is to be confided the protection of sectional interests: therefore is it that the three great divisions are there equally represented for the purpose of defending such interests against the combinations of majorities in the Assembly.

• (1520)

The Supreme Court also quotes the Honourable George Brown:

> But the very essence of our compact is that the union shall be federal and not legislative. Our Lower Canada friends have agreed to give us representation by population.

You also know that in the course of some years preceding, major changes had occured in the equilibrium of the population of Upper and Lower Canada.

> Our Lower Canada friends have agreed to give us representation by population in the Lower House. On no other condition could we have advanced a step; and, for my part, I am quite willing they should have it. In maintaining the existing sectional boundaries and handing over the control of local matters to local bodies, we recognize, to a certain extent, a diversity of interests; and it is quite natural that the protection for those interests, by equality in the Upper Chamber, should be demanded by the less numerous provinces.

So as not to misinterpret the two quotations, I will refer to the Supreme Court itself as it expressed, last December, the way in which it currently views these authoritative and historical testimonies.

> A primary purpose of the creation of the Senate, as a part of the federal legislative process, was, therefore, to afford protection to the various sectional interests in Canada in relation to the enactment of federal legislation.

I will spare you the analysis made afterwards by the Supreme Court in its explanation of the motives which underlie its decision. May I only mention and underscore that on numerous occasions in the course of this explanation of its motives the expression "agency created to protect the interests of regions and provinces" in the federal legislative process often appears.

All things considered, it is on this basis of the role and the purpose of the Senate in our federal system that it declares unconstitutional the provisions of Bill C-60 concerning the Senate.

If such is our role in the ordinary course of events, what must it be in some extraordinary circumstances such as a constitutional reform?

It might be said that we do not have to worry, in this instance, about defending the interests of the provinces. They will certainly look into it themselves, each in its own right, since they are directly involved in the process right from the start of the negotiations and at all other subsequent steps except the one concerning the Canadian Parliament, of course.

On the contrary, I believe that we would be wrong if, in the course of constitutional revision and even in the present situation, we did not take into account the role assigned to us by the Fathers of Confederation which has just been confirmed by the Supreme Court.

The provisions of the Constitution now in force are clear and explicit in dealing with us. They do say that each one of us represents—and here the word "represent" is used—one or the other of the four Senate divisions and this one must also be represented in the Senate.

It does not use the same language when speaking of the members of the other place—they are elected for a province or a territory and they represent the voters in their respective ridings. In that sense, I agree entirely with the interpretation the Right Honourable Prime Minister gave the other day of the role of the Commons when he said that no member of the House of Commons represents a particular area and, on the contrary, they must be looked at in the context of the country as a whole. That seems to me quite an accurate description of the meaning of what we will call representation in the Commons. In the Senate, it seems to me this is fundamentally different, that we are in a system of regional representation.

If we approach the constitutional reform in the perspective of the divisions—to use the term of Sir John A. Macdonald—that we represent in this house, regardless of the fact that we were appointed by the central authority, we could perhaps make the case that a major objective of certain proposed reforms for the Senate is already partly achievable.

I am thinking among other things of the proposed House of the Provinces, instead of the Senate, or the House of Federation, so, paradoxically, a common link is to provide the provinces and the regions with a better presence in the central body. In the objective and the role we were given originally, that presence is already provided by the Senate. Of course, there is the difference in the process of appointment. Perhaps the difference in that process of appointment explains why everybody thinks the Senate fulfills a function purely of an upper house, that it is a pure instrument of improvement of the legislation coming from the Commons without reference to the regional dimension that can arise in each of those bills.

It seems to me this is an opportunity not to be missed, an opportunity to exercise first a role of vigilance should, for example, in the present climate of good will, there be a desire to take action symbolizing the Constitution era, actions like patriating the BNA Acts as they are, without the consent of all the provinces if necessary. I do say "without the consent," in the event that some of them would not give their consent even after prior consultation. The reference to patriation is perhaps not quite arbitrary on my part if you recall a recent event that happened in the other place. Then, the procedure I mentioned at the beginning should be followed. There would have to be an Address of Parliament, consequently of the Senate and the House of Commons. It seems to me if such a thing were to occur, we would have a duty of vigilance to carry out which we could carry out by placing ourselves in the perspective of our definition, at least the definition the Fathers of Confederation gave us, and that the Supreme Court just confirmed, of representing and protecting the interests of the regions and the provinces.

In short, we are being given an opportunity to restore a dimension of our function which for the Fathers of Confederation was at the very heart of the federative pact, a dimension the scope of which we may have ourselves minimized but which the proposed renewals now being suggested everywhere demand should become again one of our chief concerns.

On motion of Senator Godfrey, debate adjourned.

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Retirement Age Policies, entitled: "Retirement Without Tears", tabled in the Senate on 15th April, 1980.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I yield to Senator Bosa.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, as a member of the Special Senate Committee on Retirement Age Policies, I am pleased to take part in this debate on the consideration of the report entitled "Retirement Without Tears," tabled in the Senate by Senator Croll on April 15, 1980.

This was the first time I had had the privilege of serving on a committee chaired by Senator Croll, and I can assure honourable senators that he is everything that has been said and written about him. What impressed me greatly was his insight with respect to social issues and his determination in dealing with those issues. Senator Croll is a great humanitarian but he is also a "no-nonsense" chairman, and he did not hesitate for a moment in bringing down the gavel when a member of the committee drifted too far from the subject at hand, which occurred quite frequently.

I may add also that this was a great opportunity to get to know the other members of the committee. It was a privilege to work with them.

When the committee was established on December 7, 1977, it was given five specific subjects to examine and report upon, as follows:

(a) existing retirement age policies;

(b) the social and economic implications of mandatory retirement;

(c) the feasibility of flexible voluntary retirement plans;

(d) age discrimination against those over 65; and

(e) the need to co-ordinate present and future retirement age policies among government, labour and business.

It is not my intention to review each of these five subjects, but only to present some thoughts respecting areas of the report which I believe to be important.

As honourable senators know, there was no provision in the terms of reference for the filing of a minority report, so participation in this debate enables one to present one's views on certain aspects of the report. By way of background, I would like to say that I have shared some of these thoughts with both Senator Croll, the chairman of the committee, and Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), the deputy chairman, following the meeting at which the report was finalized.

Between the setting-up of the committee and the tabling of the report in this house, two federal general elections took place. It is my conviction that those happenings had a disruptive effect on the hearings and work of the committee, and may have influenced the committee to prepare its report prematurely.

Although the committee was appointed in the Third Session of the 30th Parliament, it did not begin public hearings until the following session. The committee was first briefed by the research staff of the Library of Parliament, who had prepared over two dozen papers on various aspects of retirement. From November 1978 to March 1979, the committee held twenty-four public meetings at which it received 46 invited briefs and questioned 124 witnesses. Testimony was received from several federal government departments and from two provincial governments. Testimony was also received from a wide variety of professional associations ranging from the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Association of Social Workers and associations directly involved in the pension field, to banks and businesses, and the Confederation of National Trade Unions.

I have mentioned some of these witnesses because, on closer examination, it would appear that there were two major omissions from the list. The first omission is that of the Canadian Labour Congress, an organization representing 2.3 million workers in 110 autonomous affiliates with 8,000 local unions. The CLC did not appear as a witness, nor did it present a brief.

The second omission is that of certain provincial governments. For instance, the Governments of Ontario and Quebec, where more than 60 per cent of the population over 65 years of age reside, did not send witnesses or submit briefs. Surely failure to obtain testimony from the CLC and from the two most populous provinces of Canada should be considered a significant oversight. I am convinced that it would have been of great benefit to the committee to have had the views of that institution and those governments.

One of the major concerns of the committee related to providing adequate income to a significant proportion of older Canadians. Demographic trends indicate that the number of Canadians over 65 is increasing. In 1978 there were 2.1 million Canadians over the age of 65 years, and it is estimated that this number will increase to 3.4 million by the year 2001. Therefore, the committee recommended that planning for the large increase in the 65-and-over group be undertaken now.

[Senator Bosa.]

There are, indeed, very sound grounds for this concern, since in 1978 half of the Canadian families whose heads were 65 years of age or older had annual incomes below $6,712, and half of the unattached individuals in the same age bracket had annual incomes below $4,003.

In response to this situation, one of the recommendations of the committee is that the contribution rate to the Canada/Quebec Pension Plan be increased from 3.6 per cent to 8 per cent of pensionable earnings, this increase to be phased in over a period of two years, and contributions to continue to be split 50:50 between employer and employee. While the committee did recommend that Canada/Quebec Pension Plan benefits be increased over a five-year phase-in period, it made no specific recommendation as to the amount of increase.

It has been assumed in many circles that a doubling of the contribution rate necessarily implies a doubling of the benefit rate. Reference to this assumption is found on page 67 of the committee's report, and in the remarks of Senator Croll as reported in Debates of the Senate, April 22, 1980, at page 82.

A closer examination of the functioning of the Canada/Quebec Pension Plan reveals that such an interpretation is unfounded. Any increase in the rate of contribution need not lead to an automatic increase in benefits to retired Canadians. The Canada/Quebec Pension Plan is only partially funded. The contribution of 3.6 per cent will become insufficient to meet current benefits by the mid-1980s. The Canada Pension Fund at the end of 1978 amounted to $14.5 billion, and the Quebec Pension Fund amounted to $5.2 billion. Both the Task Force on Retirement Policies and the Economic Council of Canada have concluded that this fund will be depleted gradually, until it disappears early in the next century, if the current contribution rate of 3.6 per cent is not increased.

In fact, early in the next century the contribution rate will have to be increased even beyond 8 per cent of pensionable earnings just to meet the requirements of a 25 per cent benefit rate in terms of the average industrial wage, and the rate will have to triple to 11 per cent of pensionable earnings within 50 years to meet the same requirement.

I feel that the committee should have considered this particular aspect of the plan further. Even if the recommended increase in the contribution rate, from 3.6 per cent of pensionable earnings to 8 per cent, were to provide a doubling of the benefit rate, it is doubtful whether it would do anything to alleviate poverty among retired Canadians.

● (1540)

Senator Croll pointed out on April 22 last, as reported at page 79 of Hansard, that two out of three Canadians who are 65 years of age or older do not have access to benefits from the Canada Pension Plan. This is further supported by an examination of the public pension benefits received by guaranteed income supplement recipients.

The 1979 report of Statistics Canada, A Survey of Consumer Finances, illustrates the fact that 30 per cent of male GIS recipients received no benefits at all from the Canada/Quebec Pension Plan in 1978, and over 50 per cent received less than $900 in benefits. It is obvious that even a doubling of the Canada/Quebec Pension benefits would be of no advantage to the 30 per cent of retired Canadians who are in most need of assistance, and would provide only limited financial help—less than $150 a month—to over 50 per cent of GIS recipients, among whom is a large number of women.

The first two paragraphs of the introduction on page 1 of the committee's report read as follows:

> Retirement has many dimensions. For some, it is a welcome change and a new world opens up. The drudgery and the boredom of routine work vanish and new vistas of travel, recreation and freedom appear. For others, retirement is unwelcome and something to be feared. Any study must take account of the thousands of elderly people who are leading contented and well adjusted lives. But there is a darker side, for there are also thousands of old people whose lives are degraded by poverty, illness and confusion.
> It is understandable that attention should be focussed on the unfortunates for this is where the opportunity is for remedies and reforms. If there is an emphasis throughout this report on the dark side it is not because of a preoccupation with gloom but rather because it is the fertile area for improvement.

I should like to read another sentence, which appears at the bottom of the same page, before I make my point:

> The view that the solution to the social problems examined in this report lies in the application of large sums of government money is rejected, a point that will be emphasized a number of times.

In these two passages, honourable senators, lies the contradiction of one aspect of the report. The objective is to alleviate poverty among a large segment of retired Canadians—to zero in on those who need help most. However, the majority of those who need help most are unable to contribute to the Canada/Quebec Pension Plan. They include housewives and others who, even when they do work, do not work long enough to qualify for full benefits.

The reality of the situation is that government funds are needed to solve these social problems, and the most target-efficient way to assist low-income elderly people at this time is the guaranteed income supplement.

The Liberal Party recognized this need during the last election when it promised an increase of $35 per month per household to the recipients of the guaranteed income supplement, a promise that is now being implemented. I understand this was passed by the House of Commons last night, and is awaiting Senate approval.

The Canada/Quebec Pension Plan is partially a contributory plan. It is financed by a payroll tax levied on virtually all Canadian workers and self-employed individuals. The tax is a fixed rate—currently 3.6 per cent—applied to all earnings above $1,100 in 1979 and below the yearly maximum pensionable earnings. The exemption of the first $1,100 of income makes the tax burden very slightly progressive on incomes between $1,100 and $11,700. Once that maximum has been achieved, the contribution remains fixed while income rises. Beyond this level of income, the payroll tax, which finances the Canada/Quebec Pension Plan, becomes highly regressive with the tax rate disappearing as income increases. On the other side of the equation, the guaranteed income supplement is financed through progressive taxation because the funds come out of general revenue. I think this is an important distinction to be made.

On the lifting of the ceiling on mandatory retirement one area that ought to be explored in greater detail is alternative employment for those Canadians who, while not wishing to retire, would welcome a change from the routine of their occupations.

In conclusion, I should like to emphasize that while, in my opinion, the report, in some of its aspects, can be criticized, it does contain many important and innovative recommendations. This report, in my judgment, is a social document which serves to focus attention on several sensitive and crucial areas of retirement.

Several studies have been made on retirement recently, including the one entitled The Retirement Income System in Canada. The Province of Ontario has also just concluded a study on retirement. The Report of the Special Senate Committee on Retirement Age Policies is an important addition to these studies, and will make a valuable contribution towards solving the complex social problems of retirement.

On motion of Senator Macquarrie, debate adjourned.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government) tabled:

Report of the Privacy Commissioner under the Canadian Human Rights Act, for the year ended December 31, 1979, pursuant to section 60 of the said Act, Chapter 33, Statutes of Canada, 1976-77.

Telexes from the Prime Minister of Canada to the Premiers of the Provinces concerning the meeting of First Ministers to be held June 9, 1980.

Senator Flynn: What was the last item that the Leader of the Government tabled?

Senator Perrault: I tabled telexes from the Right Honourable the Prime Minister to the premiers.

Senator Flynn: Do they say anything about an agenda?

Senator Perrault: Yes. I am going to speak to that later.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO STUDY CERTAIN ASPECTS OF THE CONSTITUTION—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to consider and report upon constitutional provisions regarding individual and collective rights and upon the future role and composition of the Canadian Senate and alternative constitutional arrangements compatible with true federalism;

That the membership of the committee be increased to thirty members and that rule 67(1)(j) be suspended in relation to the membership of the committee;

That the committee be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purposes of its examination and consideration of such legislation and other matters as may be referred to it; and

That the committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

• (1405)

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, for the introduction of the motion only.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by Honourable Senator Lamontagne, seconded by Honourable Senator Frith:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to consider and report upon constitutional provisions regarding individual and collective rights and upon the future role—

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense.

The Hon. the Speaker: So, is it your pleasure, honourable senators—

Hon. Martial Asselin: No, excuse me, Your Honour, there is a sentence I missed when the motion was moved. Could you please read it in extenso?

The Hon. the Speaker: You still want me to read it, because I was just dispensed from doing so? All right, I will read it all then.

It is moved by Honourable Senator Lamontagne, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e):

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to consider and report upon constitutional provisions regarding individual and collective rights and upon the future role and composition of the Canadian Senate and alternative constitutional arrangements compatible with true federalism;

That the membership of the committee be increased to thirty members and that rule 67(1)(j) be suspended in relation to the membership of the committee;

That the committee be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of its examination and consideration of such legislation and other matters as may be referred to it; and

That the committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Flynn: Well, honourable senators, if the mover does not wish to comment on his motion, I have to tell him at this time that we on this side have objections, as I already mentioned to him as well as to Senators Frith and Perrault.

Our main concern on this side of the house is to enlarge the mandate of the committee so as to include all issues related to the constitutional reform.

I do not like the idea of restricting this mandate to only two subjects: that of collective and individual rights and that of the Senate, or a second legislative or consultative house or whatever.

I regard both subjects as important but on this side of the house we believe that the most significant issue as far as the reform of the constitution is concerned is the distribution of powers. But the committee would not be entitled to tackle this subject.

This is the main objection I expressed to Senator Lamontagne and to the others with whom I spoke on this subject. That is why, in order to allow honourable senators on both sides of the house to dwell on the subject raised by this motion, I intend to move that the debate be adjourned. By next Tuesday we will see if it is possible to reconcile our differences and to take a united stand. I therefore move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

THE CONSTITUTION

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE OF FIRST MINISTERS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, may I say that in the documents I tabled today, the telex communications from the Right Honourable the Prime Minister to the premiers, the Prime Minister indicates that the one-day private session on June 9 is for laying future plans for constitutional renewal, broadly conceived in the light of new ideas and the public's desire for change.

• (1415)

He expresses the hope that first ministers can agree on June 9 on both the principles and the process which will lead them to the broad renewal of the federation.

AGRICULTURE

DROUGHT IN PRAIRIE PROVINCES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board in respect of the drought situation in western Canada. The minister was on the prairies over last weekend and I believe made a survey of the situation on behalf of the government. Is the government now ready to announce the assistance policy that it may have in mind, either for individuals or for the provinces?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): As Senator Roblin has said, I was in Saskatchewan over the weekend and I have some information on the drought situation, which is generally available to all senators in any case.

A large part of Alberta has received some very welcome and beneficial rains; there have been some scattered showers in Saskatchewan. Some local areas have received quite a good rainfall, but Saskatchewan generally is still very dry; Manitoba is indeed very dry. That is the information I have, so it is a critical situation.

The attitude of the federal government is that it will help in every way possible. It wishes to help in an imaginative and generous way. However, as the Honourable Senator Roblin will know, when you are formulating a policy it has to go through the various stages of consultation and deliberation. Initially, on my own initiative I think I can say, through others—it was not my responsibility but it was my initiative—the federal Task Force on Drought, which had been in existence since 1977, was activated some weeks ago. Last Sunday a cabinet minister was presented with draft proposals, or a series of draft suggestions that they had to make. On Tuesday of this week there was a meeting of officials in Ottawa to consider specific recommendations on this particular question. Today I believe there is a meeting at the deputy minister level on this question. The policy, I believe, will be before the Economic Development Committee, of which Senator Olson is chairman, next Tuesday.

Senator Roblin: Careful.

Senator Argue: He gets questions every day. I do not think it is because you don't know his exceedingly important role in the cabinet. The matter will be before Senator Olson's committee. I am sure it will receive most sympathetic consideration, and probably some suggestions for improvements. I am sure it will be expedited, so I would hope and anticipate that by next week a formal policy will be announced. It is perfectly clear that the federal government is prepared to take action, and in fact some action has already been taken, but those are the plans.

Senator Roblin: I have one or two supplementary questions I should like to ask, if I may. In the course of recent events, has the minister had an opportunity to visit with the agricultural ministers or the Premiers of Manitoba and Saskatchewan to concert his policy with theirs?

• (1420)

Senator Argue: I have not visited with any of them. I have been engaged in other matters.

Senator Roblin: Has anybody visited with them?

Senator Argue: The Honourable Lloyd Axworthy, I believe, met with the Premier of Manitoba. That discussion dealt mainly with forest fires, but I would imagine this came up.

The discussion that has taken place to date has been at the official level between officials of various levels of government. I believe the Deputy Minister of Agriculture for Canada met with the deputy ministers of agriculture from the three prairie provinces on this question, but policies did not come out of those meetings.

Senator Roblin: I will not conceal my view that I would have been happier if my friend, who knows something about western agricultural problems, had been the one to meet with the western premiers rather than his colleague. However that may be, I would urge my honourable friend to make haste, because he is undoubtedly aware that in the livestock industry there is some threat to the stability of breeding stock. I have received reports that a considerable number of breeding stock cattle had moved to market. In fact, there is a serious slump in prices for these cattle as a result of that. Obviously, if this is taking place on a large scale, the effect in two or three years will be serious with respect to prices in Canada, so far as the consumer is concerned, to say nothing of the fact that it erodes the farmer's capital. So, I urge my honourable friend to get some kind of policy out to us on Monday at the latest.

Senator Argue: The policy will be out next week. One can almost state, in general terms, what the policy will be. There will be assistance for community wells, as well as assistance in transportation of water by PFRA, and so forth. The precise policy, or possible cost that may be attributed to this policy, will be forthcoming.

I have treated this matter urgently. The western cabinet ministers have been out west and have surveyed the situation. I have been in daily contact with the stock growers and their leaders to gather information. The PFRA officials have travelled from one community pasture to another to meet with the cattle ranchers and owners who use the community facilities. So I think this matter is being treated on an urgent basis.

As far as the provincial governments are concerned, I believe each one agrees in principle that it will support the program. The federal government agrees in principle, and action will be forthcoming rapidly.

The information received on Sunday by the authorities in the livestock businesses to the effect that while there may have been some minor increase in slaughtering, that increase was caused by the slaughter of dry cows, and not the foundation. This is the opinion given to us by the livestock authorities. I agree with Senator Roblin that it is exceedingly important that this foundation cow herd be maintained. I think when the program is in public view, it will be clear that there are steps that can be taken, in spite of the hay shortage. Those steps could be to obtain grain, put particular supplements into the grain, and move concentrates to the pastures. This will supplement the food supply for the cows and ensure that they are sufficiently healthy to produce calves next year.

Senator Roblin: I hope my honourable friend is right about the cattle industry.

I have a final supplementary question. The minister has said that he thinks the provinces will go along with the federal government's relief policy. The provinces have their own policies. What is the attitude of the federal government with respect to those policies? Could the minister give us a statement on that?

Senator Argue: Having had discussions with my colleagues, I can say that I am positive that the federal government will agree in principle with the policies that have been put forth by the provincial government. It is simply a matter of co-ordination. I honestly do not anticipate difficulty in any way whatsoever.

Senator Roblin: Will money follow the agreement in principle?

Senator Argue: Yes.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. Is the honourable minister, as a member of the government, the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, or does he merely assist the Minister of Transport who remains in charge of the Wheat Board—a board which is of such importance to western Canadians?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I imagine I know what forms the basis of my honourable friend's question. When I first saw the passage to which my honourable friend has reference, my reaction was: What kind of a setup is that?

The explanation given to me is that every minister of state must have some legal basis for operation, and for that basis he is, in a legal sense, part of the operation of another department, and, in a technical sense, he is in that department. But the authority that has been given to me is that of minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, and that stands four-square on its own and in no way with regard to that jurisdiction am I subservient to any other minister.

Senator Balfour: I thank my honourable friend for that explanation. My question arose out of an almost accidental examination of the order in council appointing the honourable senator to that capacity. It seems to me the order in council is unfortunately worded. We on this side would much prefer that the minister's responsibilities be absolutely clear-cut.

By its language the order in council clearly states that Senator Argue is a minister of state to assist the Minister of Transport in carrying out the latter's responsibilities in respect of the Canadian Wheat Board. Without wishing to be legalistic about it, I think that on the basis of that he is placed, legally and factually, in the unfortunate position of being an assistant to the responsible minister.

Senator Argue: I deny that completely. It is simply not true. While the order in council may seem to read that way, it has been made perfectly clear to me that I am the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. As far as any minister of state is concerned, including a minister of state in the former administration, this is the avenue by which such a minister accepts his responsibilities.

GRAIN

RAPESEED—SPREAD BETWEEN CURRENT PRICE AND FUTURES MARKET PRICE

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, accepting the minister's explanation for the time being, I should like to address a question to him that is perhaps more relevant to the work he is carrying out. My question relates to the rapeseed price spread.

Can the minister explain why the price spread between the futures market and the price which farmers are receiving for rapeseed at country elevators has been abnormally high at various times this year—at times as much as $1.50, which, in comparison with the long-term average, is twice as high as normal.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): I have wondered about that too, and I have had explanations provided to me. I think it can probably be labelled as a criticism of the futures market and of that particular system. I am told that another factor—and it may be just a complicating factor—is that there are no switching arrangements for the transfer of rapeseed from one elevator company to another, with the result that the rapeseed gets out in very small quantities.

There have been major complaints about this matter. The Canadian Wheat Board feels that if it were in charge of rapeseed marketing, that kind of abnormal spread could be reduced.

I am perfectly willing to make further inquiries in an effort to obtain additional technical information on this question, but that is the information that has been given to me by people in the trade whom I respect.

MARKETING OF OATS

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, I have one final supplementary question on the subject of grain. Recognizing that the legislative mandate of the Canadian Wheat Board includes the orderly marketing of oats, will the minister explain why the Canadian Wheat Board has not been actively marketing oats since the crop year 1976-77, and why the producers have not received final payments for oats since 1976-77?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, this is something that is of some concern to the Canadian Wheat Board. Of the various grades of oats, high quality oats have moved very well. In fact, there is a shortage of high quality oats, and that is a problem that needs to be dealt with. There have been some oats available within the system, but they are of a low quality and the Canadian Wheat Board has had difficulty in moving them. I am informed that the board has experienced difficulty to the point where it has not been able to close out the crop years from 1976-77, and that is not an ordinary way to do business.

I am pleased this question has been raised. It is an important question. This whole situation is an anomaly and one which should be cleared up as quickly as possible, and I should be pleased to bring the honourable senator's remarks to the attention of the Canadian Wheat Board.

GRAINS TRANSPORT CO-ORDINATOR—REPORTING AUTHORITY

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board respecting ministerial responsibility. My question is: To whom does Dr. Horner, the Grains Transport Co-ordinator, report? Does he report to a minister of the Crown directly, and, if so, to which one, or to some other agency?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): I would say he reports to a minister of the Crown directly, that minister being the Minister of Transport.

Senator Flynn: Are you authorized to divulge that information?

COUNTRY ELEVATOR SYSTEM—GRADE PROMOTION

Hon. Martha P. Bielish: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Could the minister inform the house and the farmers of western Canada whether he has investigated grade promotion or upgrading practised by the country elevator system and, if so, have the results of his investigation led to the assurance that the producer is receiving full value for his grains?

● (1430)

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): I am sorry, I did not quite understand the question. Are you asking why grains are upgraded, why certain producers get high grades, or whether elevator facilities should be upgraded? I am sorry I did not quite understand the question.

Senator Bielish: I will put the question again. Could the minister inform the house and the farmers of western Canada whether he has investigated grade promotion or upgrading practised by the country elevator system.

That simply means that an elevator will have in storage a quantity of, perhaps, No. 1 wheat. The operator also buys wheat that is almost No. 1, grades it to No. 2, mixes it with No. 1, and sells it as Grade No. 1.

Senator Argue: It is certainly not a proper practice.

Senator Flynn: It is a blended price!

Senator Argue: As long as you are talking about blended prices, and not blended something else.

I think producers sometimes feel that some local elevator agents may at times give them a lower grade, in fact, than the grade to which they are entitled. Under those circumstances a producer has the right under the Canada Grain Act to send a sample to the chief grade inspector in Winnipeg, and have it officially graded. If the grade he was given was, in fact, too low then he is entitled—and this is the way his legal position is established—to the higher grade and therefore to the higher price.

Very often a good elevator manager has, let us say, in these particular circumstances, a large quantity of No. 1 grain in his elevator, and he has some farmer who is bringing No. 2 grain. He may well be able to give that farmer, for what should be in a normal way No. 2 wheat, a No. 1 grade and put the No. 2 into the No. 1 bin. That is not only proper but it is welcome and that is the kind of thing—some mixing in the country elevators—that should be going on in the interests of the producers.

Senator Bielish: Will the minister table as soon as possible a report detailing the rationale behind the system of grade promotion or upgrading by the country elevator system which costs the producers and the Canadian Wheat Board millions of dollars per year?

• (1435)

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I am prepared to obtain expert opinion on this question. I believe that what I have said is accurate, but I shall be pleased to refer the matter to the authorities and see what they have to say.

GRAIN—REDUCTION OF SALES TO U.S.S.R.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I have a question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. This happens to be his day to go through the threshing machine.

Senator Flynn: It will take more than a threshing machine to stop him.

An Hon. Senator: He is pretty sturdy.

Senator Buckwold: Perhaps we can get on with our ploughing.

The Government of Canada, at the request of the United States, complied with the limit on wheat sales—literally an embargo on sales of grain above average or normal sales to the Soviet Union following the Afghanistan incident. I believe that Canadian farmers were prepared to accept that embargo. The result has been a drop in future potential sales to that country. Certainly the sales that are under contract are being carried out and the grain delivered. However, there has been a drop in price, and the government, as well as the minister, has made commitments that farmers in western Canada would not have to pay the price for this particular action, in which they are, in fact, the innocent victims.

Would the minister bring us up to date in respect of what plans are being made to recompense western farmers for the loss of those markets and the drop in prices?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I thank my aggressive friend for his aggressive question. It is perfectly true that the former administration, the Clark administration, at the time the unfortunate Afghanistan incident occurred, was prepared to go along with and, indeed, did go along with the United States policy of reducing sales to the Soviet Union. The Americans did not place anything approaching a full embargo, but only a partial embargo. The crop year was shorter than normal and it has resulted in large deliveries of American grain to the Soviet Union. The Argentine circumvented the system and has had larger sales. The Canadian government at that time agreed to restrict sales and exports to what would be considered normal and traditional quantities.

The new administration, the present administration, has continued that policy. It is probably accurate to say that there has been a somewhat more generous interpretation of the policy in recent weeks than was the case earlier. This is not criticism; it is just the way the situation evolved. So Canada may have foregone some sales that might otherwise have been made under what might be considered to be a more normal set of circumstances.

However, our general exports this year—that is, world exports—will be either at a record level or near record level. It is too early yet to determine whether or not it will be a complete or near record.

The former administration felt, as I believe this administration does, that producers should not have to bear the full burden of the losses that could be directly attributed to this policy. I believe it is correct to say that when the policy was established on January 4 this year, the Wheat Board's asking price for 1 CW 13.5 per cent protein out of Thunder Bay was $227.66 per ton. The information I have is that that might not have been a hard price, because it was really an asking or negotiating price, and that the actual price, if the sales had been made at about that time, might, in fact, have been somewhat under $227.66. That is the figure you start from. The prices since then have gone down to about $191 a ton, and the most recent prices I have seen—though I have not checked today's paper—have gone back up to about $204 or $205 a ton.

I think it is true to say that nobody—just nobody—can attribute any particular loss or any particular increase in the world market for wheat to one factor only, because there are many factors playing on that market every day, such as availability of transport and prospects for crops. In terms of the world's big grain producers, Canada, although a relatively big exporter, is quite a small producer of grain in the total picture.

I have heard people who should know something about commodity markets say that the very high interest rates had a depressing effect in this regard, but all I can say to my honourable friend is that this whole thing is being looked at, and we are endeavouring now to arrive at a realistic and honest assessment of what the loss resulting from this policy might have been.

Senator Buckwold: I have a supplementary question.

I appreciate the detailed reply that the minister has just given, and I am delighted to know that the situation is being reviewed, but he did not indicate whether, in fact, there were any plans afoot to reimburse farmers financially for their potential loss.

Perhaps I may ask a second question at this point. Would the minister indicate whether, in fact, we have actually turned down business with the Soviet Union? I am thinking of cases where their trade missions may have come over with the idea of buying grain, and we have said, "No, we will not sell it."

Senator Argue: As far as I know the answer to the second supplementary question is that there has been no turning down of sales to the Soviet Union because of this policy.

As far as the earlier part of the question is concerned, I think, before any administration gets financial plans in place to deal with something, there should be, first of all, an assessment of what they may, in fact, have to deal with, and so this assessment of what may be involved is now under way. Not only is it under way with the authorities in Ottawa, but the Canadian Wheat Board itself is looking into this question.

ENERGY

REFINING OF BLACK RESIDUAL OIL

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. My question is based on a speech delivered by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. In order that the minister may be familiar with the part of the speech on which I base my question I will quote the exact words of the "Ayatollah" Lalonde.

> —the Government is determined to end the waste that is implicit in burning or exporting the heavy fuel oil that now represents about half the final output of most eastern refineries. We want that black residual oil further refined to gasoline and other light petroleum products for use in Canada. That means that manufacturing and other industrial establishments now using heavy industrial fuel oils are going to have to find other sources of energy.

The government, by the Prime Minister's own admission in the House of Commons, has lost 50,000 barrels of imported oil in the Mexican fiasco, and Venezuela is reducing its exports from 240,000 barrels a day in the first quarter of 1980 to 150,000 barrels a day in the last quarter. Where will the manufacturers and other industrial establishments obtain other sources of energy?

This is especially important, honourable senators, in view of the fact that the government has reversed its decision on a reversible pipeline to Atlantic Canada, and has eliminated the maritime section of the Q & M pipeline.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Well, honourable senators, I cannot, of course, agree with the conclusions stated as facts in the honourable senators interpretation of what the minister has said, but, to set my honourable friend's mind at ease, I should say that it is the national policy that the supply of crude oil is going to be shared all over Canada. One area is not going to be starved of supplies, and if we are unable to obtain sufficient supplies, by going through the traditional routes, from our suppliers overseas, obviously there will be some movement from those areas where the supply may be tight but adequate, so that the whole country will share in whatever supplies we have.

Senator Phillips: I have a supplementary question, honourable senators.

I would ask the minister if the refineries in eastern Canada are equipped and able to further refine the heavy residual oil to gasoline and other light petroleum products.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am not sure that they are at the moment, but I think there is a slightly different interpretation that can be put on what the honourable senator read, and that is that the minister is saying we ought to make use of these products rather than sending them out of Canada, because we are unable to refine them into the kind of products that we use here. It seems to me that that is a highly desirable objective.

Senator Phillips: Will the minister give us some indication of the economics involved here? It seems rather strange to me that the oil companies have been neglecting an opportunity to refine these products, if this is economically feasible.

Senator Olson: I do not think I should attempt to give the honourable senator a lesson in the technical economics of this matter because, first of all, I am not briefed to do so,—and that is the most important reason—but it seems to me, if he is talking about objectives, that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was saying that some effort ought to be made to make use of this fuel, rather than export it, because it is actually in a geographical location where it is needed.

Senator Phillips: I am sorry; I do not wish to give the impression that I am cross-examining the minister, but I do feel he avoided one part of my question, which is: What are the other sources that the "Ayatollah" Lalonde had in mind when he said that these industries would have to find other sources?

Senator Olson: If there is a question there I will take it as notice and try to find out, without in any way agreeing to the rather discourteous preamble to the question.

POST OFFICE

SETTLEMENT WITH CANADIAN UNION OF POSTAL WORKERS

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I would like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, who has had a rather relaxing day.

Would the leader please find out for the members of the Senate the total cost to the Canadian taxpayer of the settlement that has been offered to the postal workers by the government?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I know that all members of the Senate, generally, share the view that it is fortunate that a settlement was achieved in this area without the dislocation of a strike. I am certainly prepared to bring a statement to this chamber on the subject of the impacts of the wage settlement. I may say, however, that some of the media reports about the size of the settlement are quite inaccurate.

Senator Muir: I thank the leader for his very courteous reply. I wonder if he could assure me and the other members of this house that he will carry out some investigation, in view of what he has said about media reports, and attempt to confirm to the Senate that the proposed settlement, if accepted, will widen the gap between wages paid to inside workers and those paid to the letter carriers, which then becomes another problem?

● (1450)

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I shall attempt to bring a fairly comprehensive statement on the settlement before the Senate. It should be pointed out, first of all, that the wage settlement does not exceed 20 per cent. Some reports have placed it at 20 per cent or higher. Secondly, there is a productivity factor in the settlement which is of substantial importance and has implications, I suggest, for future settlements made in not only the private but also the public sector.

TRANSPORT

TORONTO AND MIRABEL AIRPORTS—INTERNATIONAL AIR SERVICES

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government which, I suppose, it would be reasonable to expect he will have to take as notice. Is the Department of Transport reviewing the feasibility of providing additional landing rights for foreign airlines at Toronto International Airport?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): The question of providing additional landing rights for various airline companies is under continuing review by the Ministry of Transport. Of great importance to Canadian airline companies, of course, is the matter of reciprocal rights in other countries. The process of negotiation is a continuing one.

If the honourable senator has the name of a specific airline or a specific nation's air carrier in mind, I would be pleased to initiate a specific inquiry on that point.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I shall try to respond to the leader's invitation by posing another question. Is it true that some airlines have withdrawn or given notice of withdrawal, from Mirabel Airport? Is it also true that other airlines are known to be considering that possibility? The airlines that I have particularly in mind are Aer Lingus, Olympic and SAS. This withdrawal is expected to be effective sometime in July. I should also like to mention Iberia Airlines and one or two others that may be considering the possibility of withdrawing from Mirabel.

Naturally the withdrawal from Mirabel raises the question: Are they withdrawing their services from Canada, or are they being accommodated somewhere else such as Toronto and, if so, what is being done to handle this increased capacity at Toronto?

Perhaps the Leader of the Government might be kind enough to answer a further question on the same subject. There will be some adverse impact on Mirabel if this happens, and I should like to know whether the government has in mind any steps to reduce this adverse impact on Mirabel.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, these are important questions and, because of their detailed nature, I feel they must be taken as notice. Inquiries will go forward immediately.

AIRPORTS—LANDING FEES

Hon. G. I. Smith: I should like to ask one more question of the Leader of the Government which relates to the Department of Transport. Is it correct that the government or the Ministry of Transport is considering, at the present time, any specific substantial increases in user and landing fees at MOT-owned and MOT-operated airports and, if so, what increases and when are they likely to be effective?

I may say, in amplification, that there is considerable reason to believe that landing fees for all piston-engined aircraft will be increased from $1.65 to $5 at Vancouver, Dorval, Mirabel and perhaps other airports.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): The question will be taken as notice.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NEGOTIATIONS WITH PUBLIC SERVICE UNIONS

Hon. C. William Doody: My question is directed to the Leader of the Government and is supplementary to Senator Muir's question on the postal workers' settlement. Would the Leader of the Government indicate whether it is the government's intention to offer, as an opening package, the same set of terms and conditions to the federal public service as it has to the postal workers? Is that the Treasury Board's plan in this case?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): I know that the honourable senator, with his extensive background in government, is aware of the fact that when it comes to labour-management negotiations, various facts are placed on the table by both sides in an attempt to achieve agreement. These include working conditions, tenure, pension rights, catch-up fringe benefits, and so on. In most wage negotiations there is a good deal of comprehensive detail. I can say, however, that no statement has been made by the government that it intends to impose or negotiate a similar package with other sectors of the government work force. Every negotiation is undertaken on its own merits.

Senator Doody: Since the honourable senator has mentioned my background in a provincial treasury board, I might mention the fact that it was only two years ago that the then President of the federal Treasury Board, Mr. Andras, brought the various provincial presidents together and impressed upon them the importance of not starting a series of escalating steps which would once again create a race between the various governments in Canada and set off another spiral of inflation. I assume that the Government of Canada is still carrying on this consultative process with the various provinces, and we need have no worry about that in the postal workers' settlement.

I should also like to ask the Leader of the Government if the 37½-hour week is now to be the accepted work week for the public service.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, a statement with respect to the postal settlement will be made, as I have said, in the next two or three days. I do not now want to get into the details of that package at this hour. I think it is worth reiterating, however, that it is the government's concern that wage settlements are of such an order that they do not cause an escalation in inflation. When the details of the postal workers' settlement are made known, the contract will be found to be not out of line with the principles which have been espoused in the past and enunciated by the government.

Senator Doody: I can take it from that that we can be assured the public sector is not outstripping the private sector in this regard. However, as the Leader of the Government suggests, we will wait and see the details of the package.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INDEXING OF PENSIONS

Hon. C. William Doody: My question is for the Minister of State for Economic Development. I understand the minister indicated that he had answered all the questions directed to him. However, there may have been one or two which inadvertently failed to come to his notice, and I should like to bring them to the minister's attention.

On May 7, I asked the minister to give us some information on the indexing of civil service pensions and the funding of the plan. I think I directed the question, in the minister's absence, to the government leader, and perhaps it was lost in the shuffle. Would the minister make note of the question asked on that day.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Yes.

FISHERIES

ASSISTANCE TO FISHERMEN

Hon. C. William Doody: On May 7, I also asked that specific programs to help fishermen be brought to the attention of the Senate. In the Speech from the Throne, as I remember, the government viewed with great concern the problems facing small businessmen and farmers, and undertook to bring programs to the fore to help remedy the situation. I asked if fishermen were to be included, and was assured that they would be, and that these specific programs would be brought forward by the Minister of State for Economic Development.

I have also asked several other questions which have not yet been answered, but I will leave them for now.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Those matters will be looked into.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CARIBBEAN INSTABILITY—CIDA INVOLVEMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate has asked me to answer a question by Senator Macquarrie, dealing with, as he put it, "gunboat diplomacy" in the Caribbean.

• (1500)

Senator Macquarrie asked for clarification of an article by Mr. Douglas Small that appeared in the Ottawa Journal on May 24 suggesting that External Affairs was advocating that CIDA provide gunboats and other types of security assistance to the small islands on the Caribbean.

As I promised, I endeavoured to track down that story and to seek further information. I am happy to say that I am able to give the answer that both Senator Macquarrie and I hoped I would be able to give. I can assure Senator Macquarrie that no consideration is being given to using development assistance funds for gunboats or police training assistance.

On March 29 last, the Secretary of State for External Affairs announced that the government was reviewing its policy towards the Caribbean, where its interest is profound and growing. This review is now well advanced and various options for enhanced co-operation are being examined with Caribbean states. One proposal under consideration is that several small unarmed harbour craft, each costing less than $25,000, be provided to states of the eastern Caribbean for such coastguard activities as fisheries control, environmental protection, anti-smuggling and search and rescue. Small launches of this type have been provided in the past.

Senator Flynn: Unarmed?

Senator Frith: Unarmed.

Senator Flynn: What do they do, if they are fired upon?

An Hon. Senator: Yes, what if they meet with some resistance?

Senator Perrault: Gentle persuasion!

Senator Frith: Perhaps. In any event, that is the information with which I have been provided.

TWO-PRICE WHEAT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Argue, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Perrault, P.C., for the second reading of the Bill S-6, intituled: "An Act to Amend the Two-Price Wheat Act".—(Honourable Senator Argue, P.C.).

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I should like to draw to the attention of honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Argue speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, during the debate on the second reading, Senator Roblin asked a number of questions, and I would now like to reply to them.

Senator Roblin asked if the government had a legal opinion to inform us of our position with regard to the abolition of the subsidy. The answer is that a legal opinion was obtained, and there is an obligation on the government to pay should producers take legal action. The purpose of Bill S-6, which contains the same wording as the bill introduced by the previous administration, is to remove that legal obligation.

I would suggest to honourable senators that producers have not taken action because they have been able to obtain the maximum price which they would have obtained—that is, $5 per bushel—had the government continued the program as outlined in the Two-Price Wheat Act.

The second question Senator Roblin raised concerned whether or not the advisory committee of the Canadian Wheat Board had been consulted when the change was made in late 1978. I have made inquiries and I am informed that the advisory committee was not asked in a formal way to pass judgment on or to state its opinion about this policy, but that in the normal course of Wheat Board meetings with the advisory committee, which take place regularly once a month, the question of this general policy had been discussed. With regard to the present policy, the new policy, the advisory committee to the Wheat Board has considered this policy.

Senator Roblin's third question also had made reference to whether or not the government will be doing something to increase the ceiling under the policy. As honourable senators know, in Regina on Monday of this week I announced the two-price wheat policy and the basis on which it will be continuing.

Senator Roblin further asked whether or not the government was giving consideration to reimbursing producers for the income they had foregone when the export price exceeded the $5 ceiling. Well, I do not think that that is a question that the government is now considering or, in fact, should have to consider, because in setting forth the policy, it is obviously something of a risk to producers or to consumers—certainly a risk to producers—to have a fixed price. If they are going to get the benefit of the price, then, if it goes above the ceiling of course that is something they have to pay themselves; if it goes below the floor, then that is something the national treasury pays. So there is some risk on the high side to the producers and on the low side to the federal treasury. Those are the considerations that resulted in the program in the first place.

Another question Senator Roblin asked was whether or not as required by section 5(3) of the Two-Price Wheat Act, ministers had reviewed the legislation on an annual basis. Ministers have considered the two-price policy on an ongoing basis since the passage of this legislation. For example, in the 1977-78 crop year, world prices fell below the floor of $3.25. The government provided supplementary payments to bring the return to producers from the domestic market up to $3.55 per bushel.

In 1978, of course, the changes which we are discussing today were decided upon.

In 1979, legislation was introduced by the previous government, and, as honourable senators know, on Monday I announced a policy change for the next two years.

The policy that has been announced, which will go into effect August 1, will be first of all, to remove the necessity for western producers to pay a subsidy—in this case a subsidy to the consumers of Canada. I think everyone has agreed, including the consumers, that a policy that is put in place should not require a subsidy from the wheat producers. It is one thing for the national treasury to pay a subsidy. That may be in order at times. It is fair, I would think, for the consumer under ordinary circumstances to bear the cost of the price of grain going into a loaf of bread. In this instance now in the new policy there will be a floor established of $5 per bushel, and a ceiling established of $7 per bushel, basis 1 CW 13½ per cent protein wheat at Thunder Bay.

The price that will be paid into the Wheat Board's fund at any given time by Canadian millers will be the export price for 13½ per cent protein, so that wheat producers can look forward in the next two years to a price for wheat sold to the millers for domestic consumption ranging between $5 and $7 a bushel.

I have discussed this question widely with farm organizations, and I can say that as far as I have been able to ascertain to date, they are unanimously in support of this policy.

It is fair to the producer because after August 1 it allows him to receive the export price for domestic wheat and because it puts a floor under wheat for domestic consumption of $5 a bushel. We think it is also reasonable to the consumer, because it sets a ceiling of $7 per bushel over a period of two years. It is estimated, and I think it is accurate to say, that the cost of wheat going into the production of a loaf of bread rises by one cent per loaf for each forty cents per bushel increase in the price of wheat. I would therefore anticipate that when this policy goes into effect, if there is no change in world prices or if world prices are approximately the same on August 1 as they now are, the range of increase should be in the neighbourhood of some three cents a bushel.

• (1510)

In any event, I think when we look at increases in incomes, wages and salaries that have gone to others, for the wheat producers this is a very modest increase indeed. It will result in an increase on August 1 of perhaps some ten per cent in his return, and I think that is a very modest amount. I read in a recent issue of the Financial Post that the salaries being received by some chief executive officers of some of our major corporations, who always lecture us on government restraint, the need to be cautious and the need to be careful with welfare payments, have gone up in the magnitude of 29 per cent, and some over 50 per cent. However, they are still behind their American friends.

Senator Flynn: You should never read that publication for information.

Senator Argue: I can scarcely afford to buy it. It is going up in price much faster than the price of wheat. Our chief executive officers are getting only about half the return of comparable executive officers handling bigger corporations in the United States, so perhaps we should not be too critical.

I think it is a good policy. Generally speaking the trade has been relatively favourable to it. Of course, there are variations of opinion when you bring a group of people together, but I think they have generally been quite satisfied. The millers are anxious that there be in place a pricing policy that does not allow the price of wheat going to Canadian millers to vary and to fluctuate on a day-to-day basis. They do not like those fluctuations any more than the producer likes the fluctuations.

I think it is now agreed that the pricing policy for the future in this program will be something like the pricing policy that is in place now, namely on February 15, say, it is agreed what the price of wheat shall be to the millers for the next two following months; then two months from that date, on April 15, they will meet again and the price for the following two months will be set on the basis of the Thunder Bay experience in the previous two months. Really for the millers it is not a day-to-day fluctuation, but is something of a two-month price, which will go up and down in accordance with the wheat export selling price. What it will do over this period of time will be to return to the producers for domestic wheat an amount of money equivalent to what they would have received for this wheat on the international market.

This, of course, is second reading of the bill. It is a technical bill. It does not contain the new policy, which will be provided for under regulations of the Canadian Wheat Board Act. The authority is there, so it will be the Canadian Wheat Board Act that provides the legal basis for the structure of the new wheat policy.

The government is anxious, as I know the previous administration was, that this bill be given royal assent before the end of June, when the act would otherwise expire, so I would think there is some urgency. It is not that I think the Senate will delay it unduly, but it should be in the other place so that they have adequate time to deal with it. I would therefore appreciate its passage being expedited in this chamber.

[Senator Argue.]

I understand that senators opposite are quite willing to give it second reading today. If any senator on either side of the house would like the subject matter of the new pricing policy for domestic wheat referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, for whatever my support is worth I would be prepared to support that suggestion, and have appear before the committee any officials who could give information on the policy, and the committee, in its discretion, might wish to call witnesses from any section of the trade that may be affected.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, before the Speaker puts the question, may I say that the minister may have made a slip of the tongue in referring to the increase as three cents per bushel. I think what he meant was three cents per loaf. Later on the minister said that this might amount to something like ten per cent per bushel. Is that the correct interpretation?

Senator Argue: That was obviously a mistake. It is forecast that this is likely to increase the price of bread to the consumer by three cents per loaf.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Argue: With leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be now read the third time.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I have no strong objection to that, but I doubt it would make much difference if we were to give the bill third reading on Tuesday night. My idea is that Senator Roblin, who has a special interest in this bill, might wish to read the minister's remarks, and he may have something to say on Tuesday night, unless the minister is sure that the matter will be expedited by the other place in the meantime. Somehow I doubt that, and I would therefore suggest we deal with it on Tuesday.

Senator Argue: The expiry date is the end of June, so there is a month involved. It is the right of the Leader of the Opposition to prevent third reading today. However, I am happy with the way in which he couched his remarks. Certainly that is agreeable to me. I may on Tuesday night be at an interprovincial conference that I was told to get busy on by the deputy leader, who has said he will smile if one of my colleagues moves third reading then.

Senator Flynn: It is your turn to go.

Senator Argue moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

The Senate resumed from yesterday, consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's Speech at the Opening of the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament, and the motion of Senator Rousseau, seconded by Senator Hays, for an Address in reply thereto.

Hon. John Morrow Godfrey: Honourable senators, it seems to be a tradition in this chamber that participants in the debate on the Speech from the Throne congratulate the former Speaker, the present Speaker, and the mover and the seconder of the Address in reply. Rather than going through all that ritual this afternoon and saying essentially the same thing, I will just say that I join in the voicing of those nice remarks that have been made about those senators—

Senator Flynn: Bravo!

Senator Godfrey: —including the Leader of the Opposition.

Most people in English-speaking Canada, both before and after the referendum, have been talking, with varying degrees of enthusiasm, in favour of renewed federalism. They talk in generalities or criticize specific proposals, but are very short on specific proposals themselves. I think it is time that we started being more specific, and today I would like to discuss certain aspects of Mr. Claude Ryan's beige paper.

I can well recall having lunch, shortly after Mr. Ryan had been made Leader of the Liberal Party in Quebec, with one of Ottawa's highly respected political columnists. He told me that he thought the Liberal Party had made a very serious mistake in choosing Mr. Ryan. He felt that Mr. Ryan would turn out ultimately to be just as difficult for Ottawa and the rest of the country to deal with as Mr. Lévesque, because he was a man of fixed ideas, essentially a Quebec nationalist who would find it impossible to compromise, and would eventually lead Quebec out of Confederation unless he got his way in everything. With this in mind, it was with considerable apprehension that I awaited Mr. Ryan's beige paper, particularly as I have always been in favour of a strong central government in Canada because I have felt that it could deal more effectively with what I perceived as national problems.

This apprehension was somewhat increased by the way the document was reported in the Toronto press, and by some of the editorial comments. The very next day after the document was made public, the Toronto Star ran a lead editorial in which it stated that it is "an honest, serious document that bears the mark of careful thought." However, it goes on to say that "Ryan proposes under the guise of federalism to emasculate the central government to a degree that could make Canada ungovernable."

Richard Gwyn of the Toronto Star likewise did not think that he needed to reflect on the document for very long, because the same day he too devoted his column to it. He started off by saying that the document "is informed, intelligent, well-written, dispassionate, humane and scrupulously honest." In spite of all that, he concludes that it is "half-baked and bad news."

I must say that my curiosity was piqued as to how a document could deserve all the compliments Richard Gwyn lavished on it and yet, at the same time, could be half-baked and bad news. I decided to read the whole of the document myself. When I had finished with it, I thoroughly agreed with Gwyn's compliments, but not his criticisms. My previous apprehensions about Mr. Ryan, and about the document itself, largely vanished and I felt greatly encouraged. I must also say at this time that the way Mr. Ryan has conducted himself has reinforced the very favourable impression I had of him after reading the beige paper. He certainly does not come through to me in the television interviews I have watched as an inflexible and uncompromising man.

I wonder how many people outside Quebec have actually taken time to read the whole of the document. Not very many, judging by the people I have talked to. They have not even read too carefully the newspaper summaries, because I repeatedly hear misstatements of fact about what the document says, and when I correct them some just will not believe me, obviously because they do not want to.

Let us take as an example the proposed Federal Council. It is frequently stated that it is to replace the Senate, and that it has the power to veto any federal legislation. Nothing could be further from the truth. True, it is proposed that the Senate be abolished. The paper says explicitly that the Parliament of Canada shall consist of one chamber only, namely, the House of Commons. The Federal Council is not, in any sense, a legislating body. The main function of the Federal Council is to provide the provinces with formal machinery whereby they can prevent the federal Parliament from encroaching on the powers of the provincial governments under the guise of an emergency, or by using their spending powers.

I do not consider myself to be an expert on constitutional law. However, I have some experience in this field and did spend a considerable amount of time as a member of the Special Senate Committee on the Constitution considering Bill C-60 and the question of Senate reform. While constitutional experts can undoubtedly be useful as advisers, the essential decisions have to be made by politicians making political judgments as to what is best for the country, taking all factors into consideration and not just what is the most efficient form of government from a theoretical point of view.

Let us consider the practicability of a percentage of the provinces having a veto power over the use of the federal government's emergency power in order to encroach on provincial jurisdiction. Is that not actually what happens now? Would the federal government have ever proclaimed the War Measures Act in 1970 in Quebec without the consent of the Quebec government? In fact, they did so on the basis of three letters asking them to declare the act—one from the Premier of Quebec, one from the Mayor of Montreal, and one from the Montreal Chief of Police.

It is interesting to note that we got along quite happily in Canada for 76 years without the federal government's knowing that it had the right to enact legislation in peacetime under the so-called emergency powers. There is no express mention of emergency powers in the British North America Act; only peace, order and good government. Chief Justice Laskin, in the anti-inflation case, said:

> The Fort Frances case is the first of the Privy Council cases in which the word "emergency" is used. Related to war, the Privy Council had no doubt that it gave a new aspect to the business of government rising above anything in the provincial catalogue of powers.

The Fort Frances case was decided in 1923, so that that doctrine has only been with us for 57 out of the 113 years of Confederation.

Furthermore, until the anti-inflation case, the emergency doctrine has only, with one exception, been used in wartime and the continuance on a temporary basis of wartime measures into time of peace. The exception was the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, 1973-74, enacted after the 1973 Yom Kippur War when there was a threat of an oil shortage.

In the Japanese Canadian case, in the Privy Council in 1949, Lord Wright stated:

> But very clear evidence that an emergency has not arisen, or that the emergency no longer exists, is required to justify the judiciary, even though the question is one of ultra vires, in overruling the decision of the Parliament of the Dominion that exceptional measures were required or were still required.

This doctrine was followed in the anti-inflation case, which is the only strictly peacetime case where the emergency doctrine was invoked to support the validity of federal legislation. This was clearly otherwise unconstitutional because it infringed on provincial rights. In that case, Mr. Justice Ritchie stated that a "judgment declaring the act to be ultra vires could only be justified by reliance on very clear evidence that an emergency had not arisen when the statute was enacted."

Peter Hogg, in his recent book, Constitutional Law in Canada, has this to say about the case:

> —the formulations in the Anti-Inflation Reference, especially when read in the light of the persuasive factual material before the Court which denied the existence of an emergency, makes it almost impossible to challenge federal legislation on the ground there is no emergency. This means that the Federal Parliament can use its emergency power almost at will.

In view of this fairly recent development in Canadian constitutional law by our courts, is it unreasonable for the provinces to insist that they have some say as to whether or not the federal Parliament can use the emergency powers?

What are the practicalities of the matter. In wartime, there surely will be no difficulty whatsoever in getting the necessary consent. The federal government might have more difficulty in getting provincial consent to carry these emergency wartime enactments on into peacetime. But what is wrong with that? If the federal government has a good case, the provinces will co-operate. Look what happened in the only strictly peacetime emergency powers act, the Anti-Inflation Act. After it was enacted, every single provincial government entered into an agreement with the federal government extending the provisions of the act to apply to the public service in that province.

In my opinion, the beige paper is justified in insisting that there should be some formal machinery in place whereby the approval of a certain percentage of the provinces would be required before the federal Parliament can encroach on provincial jurisdiction under the guise of an emergency. The Federal Council would not be exactly overworked considering these matters in peacetime because, judging by past experience, they would only have to meet twice during a 52-year period for this purpose, and could go for as long as 50 years in peacetime without meeting at all.

Now let me turn to the question of the spending power. If federal funds are given to a province for a program lying strictly within provincial jurisdiction on condition that the province spends the money in accordance with certain stipulations, then the federal government is effectively controlling matters that are outside its jurisdiction and are within provincial legislative responsibility.

In effect, the federal government, by the use of its spending powers, can materially alter the division of powers under the B.N.A. Act, and can effectively encroach on provincial responsibility by giving the provinces an offer that they cannot refuse or, as is so often the case, cannot refuse for very long.

● (1530)

Let me take the case of hospitals. Under section 92(7) of the B.N.A. Act, the "establishment, maintenance and management of hospitals" is an exclusive provincial responsibility. Yet the federal government, under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act of 1957, provided for a hospital insurance scheme for all the provinces. However, the federal government of the day was somewhat cognizant of the sensitivities of the provincial governments, because section 6(2) of that act provided:

> No contributions shall be paid under this Act until at least six provinces, containing at least one-half the population of Canada, have entered into an agreement, and the provincial law in relation to those provinces is in force.

The program was supposed to start on July 1, 1958, but by that time only five provinces had entered into the required agreement. The new Diefenbaker government was anxious to get the program going, so they repealed the section requiring six provinces containing at least one-half the population of Canada to agree, and the program started on schedule, with the last province joining on January 1, 1961.

Was there anything wrong in insisting, as the Liberal government of the day originally had, that at least six provinces having 50 per cent of the population must agree? The program would have been held up for a short time had that provision not been repealed, but that, I suggest, is preferable to ramming something down the provinces' throats in an area that is in their exclusive jurisdiction. The proposal in the beige paper follows the same general principle as that contained in the original provision in the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act.

The act providing for the Canada Pension Plan also has a similar provision in that section 115(4) provides that no material change can be made in the provisions of that act without the approval of two-thirds of the included provinces having, in the aggregate, not less than two-thirds of the population of all included provinces.

As we all know, the federal government has moved in the last several years from the practice of making conditional grants to block funding. Block funding is really an unconditional grant given with a specific purpose in mind. In other words, block grants that were given for the purpose of social services may be used by a province for an entirely different purpose—for example, highway construction.

The federal government, in other words, is not imposing its views on provincial governments in areas of provincial jurisdiction through conditional grants; rather, it is now trusting the provinces to decide for themselves what their priorities should be and how they should spend the money given to them by the federal government. The spending power of the federal government is, therefore, much less important in imposing its will on provincial governments. Furthermore, in today's climate, I cannot imagine the federal government using its spending power in areas of provincial jurisdiction without substantial agreement of the provinces.

From a practical point of view, therefore, the proposal in the beige paper that a percentage of a Federal Council must approve the use of such spending power does not really alter the present realities of the situation. For that reason, I am really amazed at some of the comments from academics on these proposals. For example, Professor Ramsay Cook, in an article appearing in the April issue of Saturday Night, says:

> Taken together with other recommendations in the area of the division of powers, the Federal Council idea may lead to a weakening of the central government beyond all recognition. Particularly doubtful is the suggestion that not only would certain federal initiatives require a two-thirds vote for approval but, even after that, opting out would still remain an alternative for dissenters.

Further on he says:

> It is also important to remember that an institution like the Federal Council contains the potential for creating a deadlocked central government.

He also states:

> Even more serious is the lack of any representative from the central government in the Federal Council.

Why the central government should be represented on a body that is in no way legislative, and is mainly concerned with approving encroachments on provincial jurisdictions by the federal government, is beyond me. Furthermore, why would the federal government be weakened beyond recognition because its rarely used emergency powers would have to be approved by a body representing the provinces—or, likewise, with its spending powers.

It appears to me that, in view of the history of the use of the emergency powers that I have detailed, and the recent practices of the federal government in respect of its spending powers, Professor Cook's concerns are more theoretical than practical.

In fairness to Professor Cook, I should mention that he is not alone in the halls of academe in raising fundamental objections to the proposed Federal Council's control of the federal government's emergency and spending powers. Professor Edward McWhinney—like Professor Cook, a very distinguished man indeed in this field—also is highly critical. I might say that Professor McWhinney does not sound very scholarly when he says that the Federal Council is a replacement for the Senate. For the reasons I have pointed out, it is no such thing. Because their functions are completely different, we could have both a Senate and a Federal Council. Professor McWhinney does draw a comparison between the Federal Council and the German Bundesrat which, he points out, has been held by the German courts not to be a federal upper house.

Professor McWhinney also asks: Can one ever limit the application of emergency powers in advance of the event? Apparently, he is unaware of the sequence of events and the three letters received by the federal government, which I have mentioned, in connection with the invocation of the War Measures Act in 1970.

Professor Cook also has support from Senator Forsey. In some notes on the proposals in the beige paper which he has circulated, Senator Forsey states that the Federal Council "would have immense power of veto over much legislation" and that "the stated purpose for creating the Council is scarcely less than revolutionary."

To say that, in my opinion, Senator Forsey is somewhat overstating the case is to put it as mildly as I can. It is only my great personal affection and admiration for Senator Forsey which restrains me from replying to him in the same forceful fashion for which he is so famous.

While I favour the control of the federal government's use of emergency and spending powers when they intervene in provincial spheres of competence, I must say I have very serious reservations as to the desirability or need of setting up the proposed Federal Council for this purpose. Surely there could be a simple provision in the Constitution requiring the consent of a percentage of the governments of the provinces without having to go through the machinery of a Federal Council. The consent of the provinces could be obtained, no matter what the machinery or body is to give it, after prior negotiation between the federal government and the provinces, either individually, collectively, or both.

That is what, in fact, will actually happen, and the Federal Council would just be a rubber stamp for something that had previously been negotiated. If a collective meeting is considered necessary or desirable, why not call a federal-provincial meeting of first ministers, which could perform exactly the same function in this area as the proposed Federal Council.

The next matter I should like to discuss is the proposal in the beige paper for the composition of the Supreme Court of Canada when considering constitutional cases. Briefly, the court would consist of an even number of judges from Quebec and the rest of Canada, plus the Chief Justice of Canada. It is proposed that the Chief Justice will be alternated between Quebec and the other provinces so that the majority will be alternated between Quebec and the other provinces. It is stated in the beige paper:

> In constitutional matters, the Supreme Court arbitrates those fundamental disputes which are likely to affect the balance of power within the federation. For this reason Quebec, a minority province, but the principal home of French Canadians, must be able to protect its vital interests when such disputes are before the Court.

The present Supreme Court of Canada dates from 1950, when appeals to the Privy Council were abolished and the court was increased from seven to nine members, three of whom must be from Quebec. When I read these proposals, I recalled the proposals in Bill C-60, which provided that only judges from Quebec on the Supreme Court could sit when appeals from Quebec considering the Civil Code of that province were being heard.

The Report of the Special Senate Committee on the Constitution referred to some research done by Professor David Kwavnick of Carleton University and Jeffrey Lawrence of the Research Branch of the Library of Parliament, that research being analyses of civil law cases decided by the Supreme Court between 1960 and 1978. The committee report stated:

> The analyses demonstrate that the vast majority of cases (over 90% in the 1967-78 period) were decided in the manner proposed by a majority of the civil law judges on the Court. In no case did a Quebec judge not participate in the majority decision. In the very small percentage of cases in which a common law judge or judges were decisive as to the outcome of the case, the questions although technically arising under the Civil Code, involved matters of interpretation of the language used in a contract, the application of facts to the law and questions other than questions of civil law theory or doctrine.

The Senate committee recommended in its report:

> While it is obviously desirable that the Quebec judges participate in civil law cases, your committee considers that there should be no requirement that questions of civil law must be decided exclusively by them.

It is interesting to note that the beige paper does not recommend any special composition of the Supreme Court when considering appeals from Quebec involving the Civil Code and, in fact, specifically states that the Supreme Court as presently constituted is acceptable for that purpose. I would presume that the recommendations of the Senate committee, particularly the research upon which it was based, had some influence upon Mr. Ryan and his advisers when they were preparing the beige paper.

[Senator Godfrey.]

In order to determine whether or not the judgments of the Supreme Court since it was reconstituted in 1950 would indicate a need that a dualist bench be constituted when considering constitutional cases, I asked Mr. David Johansen of the Research Branch of the Library of Parliament to do a study for me "to ascertain how often the judgments of civil law judges sitting on the Supreme Court of Canada have differed from the overall majority on constitutional issues."

All Supreme Court cases in which constitutional issues were decided were examined from 1950 to the present to determine the composition of the majority and the minority with respect to these questions regardless of the holding of the court on other matters. A total of 97 such cases were located for this period. Of these cases unanimity was achieved on the constitutional issue on 63 occasions. The other 34 cases resulted in a split decision on the constitutional issue.

Honourable senators, I am going to ask that these tables in the study, together with the footnotes, showing the composition of the court and the majorities for each of the cases examined, be printed as an appendix to the Hansard report of today's proceedings.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For tables see appendix, p. 361)

Senator Godfrey: These tables show that in two instances where three civil judges sat (footnote 11) and in one case where two civil judges sat (footnote 5) were they in a unanimous minority, and in the latter case they were joined by one common law judge. There was one case (footnote 12) where two out of three civil judges sitting were in a minority.

In six cases where the common law judges were split evenly (footnotes 8, 13 and 16), a majority of the civil law judges decided the case.

There were four cases (footnotes 9 and 15) where a majority of the common law judges were in a minority, and the majority of the civil law judges decided the case.

Of the two cases where there was a split of six common law judges on one side and three Quebec judges on the other, the only important case was the one denying provincial authority over cable television, and in that case they supported the unanimous judgment of the Quebec Court of Appeal. It is also interesting to note that the beige paper proposals would not have changed the results in these two cases because Chief Justice Laskin would have been presiding, and would have had the casting vote.

It is my submission that the decisions of the court since it was reconstituted in 1950, as disclosed in Mr. Johansen's analysis, show that there is no evidence to support a change in the composition of the Court as proposed in the green paper when considering constitutional cases.

Honourable senators, I had prepared my speech up to this point when I received a long letter from Raynold Langlois, a distinguished Montreal lawyer, and the son of our colleague, Senator Langlois, who chaired the Constitutional Commission which was responsible for drafting the beige paper. Mr. Langlois makes the point that when the Supreme Court arbitrates constitutional issues it is deeply involved in the political process; that the resolution of a constitutional question is often not only a question of the strict application of rules of construction. There is a high degree of subjectivity involved in many of these decisions. Mr. Langlois personally has a very high opinion of the court. He says in his letter:

> I have learnt from personal experience over my 17 years of practice, that the Court deals very seriously with all the issues put to it and that justice is rendered by that Court. I am not, therefore, one of those who criticize the Supreme Court and will certainly object to anyone who would impute political motivation to any of the judgments rendered by that Court. I have developed too much respect for the integrity, the intelligence and the competence of those who sat on that Court over my years of practice.

Having said all that, Mr. Langlois continues:

> There is no doubt in my mind that the Supreme Court of Canada has lost a great deal of credibility as an arbiter of major constitutional conflicts in Quebec. Whether this loss of confidence is justified or not is rather irrelevant in any political context.

If the Supreme Court has lost a great deal of credibility in Quebec, then that, of course, is relevant. I would not agree with him that the question of whether this loss of confidence is justified is rather irrelevant. I would say it is very relevant indeed, and will be considered to be relevant by the other provinces. Mr. Langlois, of course, refers to the cable television case. He then goes on to say, "Many other cases presenting similar problems could also be identified."

I telephoned Mr. Langlois and questioned him about this. He did refer to cases involving provincial rights generally which have been criticized in Quebec. He couldn't give me any case offhand where there had been the split between the anglophone and Quebec judges as there had been in the cable television case, and, if Mr. Johansen's analysis is correct, there was only the one other case of a highly technical nature, which Mr. Langlois conceded was not the type of case he had in mind.

I am prepared to accept Mr. Langlois' statement that the Supreme Court as presently composed has lost credibility among some people in Quebec. I would suggest, however, that unless it can be shown that there is at least some justification for this opinion based upon the court's record since 1950, then it is going to be difficult to get support outside Quebec for the proposals in the beige paper with respect to the composition of the court when considering constitutional cases. The cable television case cannot be used as an example of non-Quebec bias because it did support the previous unanimous judgment of the Quebec Court of Appeal.

Senator Lang, in his speech on May 6, referred to an article by Peter Hogg, whom I have already referred to, appearing in the December issue of the Canadian Bar Review entitled: "Is the Supreme Court of Canada Biased in Constitutional Cases?" I will make the same quotation from it as Senator Lang:

> My conclusion is that the Supreme Court of Canada has generally adhered to the doctrine laid down by the Privy Council precedents; and that where the court has departed from those precedents, or has been without close precedents, the choices between competing lines of reasoning have favoured the provincial interest at least as often as they have favoured the federal interest. There is no basis for the claim that the court has been biased in favour of the federal interest in constitutional litigation.

I would like to have discussed in detail the beige paper recommendations with respect to the division of powers. While I personally would favour the federal government's retaining control of some of these, no great harm will be done by transferring the jurisdiction to the provinces. The provinces can surely run penitentiaries just as well as they now run reformatories. Three provinces, namely, Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia, have recently set up their own parole systems. Appointment of judges, marriage and divorce laws, labour relations, control of Bell Telephone and B.C. Telephone, prosecution in narcotics and food and drug cases can all be handled by the provinces. There are other matters more controversial which can be negotiated if there is a spirit of compromise on both sides.

Senator Lang, in his speech, referred to Dr. J. A. Corry. Dr. Corry is Principal Emeritus of Queen's University, and very famous and respected in the field of constitutional law. Dr. Corry and I served together for some years on the Canada Council, and he was regarded by all council members with great admiration and respect as the sage of the council.

On February 8, 1980, Dr. Corry invited about 50 prominent Canadians from across the country in business, labour, the media, and public life for a two-day conference at Queen's designed to explore and develop a sympathetic response to the beige paper. In his letter to the provincial premiers advising them of the conference, he said:

> These proposals, whatever one's reservations on specific points, are a satisfactory basis for negotiation. Moreover, if English Canada does not respond with some generosity to Mr. Ryan's overture, we may have lost our last chance. At any rate, this civilized and carefully phrased document deserves something better of us than churlish rejection or wooden silence.

In his letter to conference invitees, he stated:

> Briefly, the merits of Ryan's proposal are that it is moderate in tone, conciliatory in spirit, and not phrased as a truculent demand. It recognizes the need for a strong central government and is quite remarkably like the Task Force proposal in essentials on that question. It invites comment from all of Canada. Above all, it is not presented as a take-it-or-leave-it proposition. I have not found anyone here who would be willing to buy it all: everybody will have some reservations. Ryan acknowledges that some adjustments and compromises may well be called for.

The very distinguished conference invitees did meet and did support Dr. Corry's views. Like Dr. Corry and other participants in the conference, I have some reservations on the proposals, some of which I have pointed out in this speech. Likewise I—and I am again quoting from Dr. Corry—"want to stimulate a warm, sympathetic English Canadian response to the aspirations of Quebec as represented by the Ryan proposals, and give Quebecers reasons to think that these aspirations can best be realized by full participation in Canada after negotiations on the Ryan proposals."

On motion of Senator Petten, debate adjourned.

CLERK'S ACCOUNTS

STATEMENT TABLED PURSUANT TO RULE 112

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, under rule 112 of the Rules of the Senate, the Clerk of the Senate must lay before the Senate on or before the thirty-first day of May a detailed statement of his receipts and disbursements for each fiscal year.

I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk of the Senate has laid this statement on the Table.

He has asked me to apologize on his behalf if the French version is not yet available. He was to receive it before the adjournment of the sitting. It will be tabled at the next sitting of the Senate.

[English]

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 3, at 8 p.m.

FOOTNOTES

(1) The cases comprise all constitutional decisions of which I am aware from the beginning of 1950 up to January 29, 1980. This includes the cases reported in the Supreme Court Reports up to the end of Part IV of [1979] 2 S.C.R. together with those cases decided but unreported in S.C.R. at that time, namely A.-G. Man. v. G. Forest, December 13, 1979; Dominion Stores v. A.-G. Ont., December 13, 1979; A.-G Que. v. Blaikie, Durand, Goldstein & A.-G. Can., December 13, 1979; In the Matter of S. 55 of the Supreme Court Act, December 21, 1979; Labatt Breweries of Canada v. A.-G. Can. & A.-G. Que., December 21, 1979.

(2) The term "unanimity" is used here to mean that all members of the Court reached the same decision concerning the constitutional issue, although the grounds on which they reached the decision may vary.

(3) The case of P.E.I. Potato Marketing Board v. H.B. Willis Inc. [1952] 2 S.C.R. 392 has been included in this category for statistical purposes.

Likewise, the case of Capital Cities Comm. Inc. v. C.R.T.C. [1978] 2 S.C.R. 141 has also been included in this category. The case affirms federal regulatory authority over cable television. The six common law Judges who addressed the constitutional issue held that the Broadcasting Act was intra vires the Federal Government insofar as it conferred jurisdiction on the C.R.T.C. to regulate cable distribution systems which receive and distribute television signals. The three civil law Judges made their decision on the basis of the statutory jurisdiction conferred on the C.R.T.C.

(4) In the two cases included in this category, the Supreme Court of Canada was evenly split on the constitutional issue.

In Johnson v. A.-G. of Alta. [1954] S.C.R. 127, three Supreme Court Judges took the view that Alberta legislation providing for the confiscation of slot machines was ultra vires; three Judges, including the civil law Judge, were of the opinion the legislation was intra vires; and another Judge held the provincial law inoperative under the paramountry doctrine without deciding the constitutional question.

Similarly in De Ware v. The Queen [1954] S.C.R. 182, three Judges held that the Slot Machine Act of New Brunswick was ultra vires; three Judges, including the civil law Judge, were of the opinion that the legislation was intra vires; and one Judge reached his decision without considering this point.

(5) Interprovincial Co-ops v. The Queen [1976] 1 S.C.R. 477. On the constitutional issue; the Supreme Court decided, by a four to three majority, that the Fishermen's Assistance and Polluter's Liability Act of Manitoba was intra vires.

(6) In the case of Batary v. A.-G. for Sask. et al. [1965] S.C.R. 465, the majority (6-1) ruled that s. 15 of the Saskatchewan Coroners Act was ultra vires. The dissenting Judge, however, reached his conclusions without considering the constitutionality of the impugned section.

(7) The case of Ross v. Registrar of Motor Vehicles [1975] 1 S.C.R. 5, has been included in this category although there was only a partial dissent in that case. All members of the Court held that s. 21 of the Ontario Highway Traffic Act and s. 238 of the Canadian Criminal Code were both valid legislation, and five of the seven Judges agreed that s. 21 of the Highway Traffic Act was operative legislation notwithstanding s. 238(1) of the C.C.C.

(8) Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union, Local 16-601 v. Imperial Oil Ltd. and A.-G. of B.C. [1963] S.C.R. 584. The Supreme Court of Canada, by a majority of four to three, dismissed an appeal from the B.C. Court of Appeal, and upheld the validity of certain provisions of the B.C. Labour Relations Act as being in relation to property and civil rights under s. 92(13) of the B.N.A. Act.

(9) Validity of S. 92(4) of the Vehicles Act, 1957 (Sask.) [1958] S.C.R. 608. The Supreme Court of Canada, by a five to three decision, dismissed an appeal from the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal, and upheld the validity of s. 92(4) of the Saskatchewan Vehicles Act.

(10) The case of Reference Re in the Farm Products Marketing Act (Ont.) [1957] S.C.R. 198, in which a number of constitutional questions were raised, has been included in this category for statistical purposes.

(11) R. v. Zelensky [1978] 2 S.C.R. 940. There was a partial dissent in this case. The Court upheld the validity of s. 653 of the Canadian Criminal Code with the three civil law Judges dissenting as to ss. 653(1) and (2).

Public Service Board et al. v. Dionne et al. [1978] 2 S.C.R. 191. The Supreme Court of Canada, by a majority of six to three, dismissed an appeal from the Quebec Court of Appeal and denied provincial authority over cable television.

(12) Reference Re the Anti-Inflation Act [1976] 2 S.C.R. 373.

(13) A.-G. Ont. v. Policy-holders of Wentworth Insurance Co. [1969] S.C.R. 779. In this case of the Court, by a majority of five to four, dismissed an appeal from the Ontario Court of Appeal, and upheld a federal law applicable to insolvent insurance companies.

Robinson v. Countrywide Factors [1978] 1 S.C.R. 753. In allowing an appeal from the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal, the Supreme Court of Canada, by a majority of five to four, held that the Fraudulent Conveyances Act of Saskatchewan was not ultra vires and ss. 3 and 4 of the Act were not in conflict with the provisions of the federal Bankruptcy Act.

(14) Labatt Breweries of Canada v. A.-G. Can. & A.-G. Que. (as yet unreported; judgment was pronounced by the Supreme Court on December 21, 1979). The Supreme Court of Canada, by a majority of six to three, allowed an appeal from the Federal Court of Appeal, and held that ss. 6 and 25(1)(c) of the Food and Drugs Act and certain regulations made thereunder were ultra vires Parliament insofar as they related to malt liquors.

(15) Saumur v. Quebec and A.-G. Que. [1953] 2 S.C.R. 299. This case concerned the constitutionality of a Quebec city by-law made under provincial legislative authority which forbade the distribution of books or pamphlets in the streets without the permission of the Chief of Police. The Supreme Court of Canada, by a majority of five to four, found the by-law to be intra vires.

Nova Scotia Board of Censors v. McNeil [1978] 2 S.C.R. 662. The Supreme Court, by a five to four decision, allowed an appeal from the Nova Scotia Court of Appeal, and held that the Nova Scotia Theatres and Amusements Act was intra vires the province as the legislation was not concerned with the criminality but rather its purpose was the regulation of a local trade.

Dominion Stores Ltd. v. The Queen (as yet unreported; the appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada was heard on March 15, 1979, and judgment was pronounced on December 13, 1979). In this case the constitutional validity of certain provisions of the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act were challenged insofar as they purported to regulate transactions taking place wholly within the province of Ontario. The Ontario Court of Appeal had held the provisions to be intra vires Parliament. On appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, a majority of the Court, in allowing the appeal, held that the disputed provisions had no validity in relation to purely intraprovincial transactions and were in that respect ultra vires.

(16) Lyle Smith v. The Queen [1960] S.C.R. 776. The constitutional issue to be resolved in this case was whether s. 63 of the Ontario Securities Act was intra vires the province or whether it trespassed on Parliament's criminal law power under s. 91(27) of the B.N.A. Act. A majority of the Court (6-3), in dismissing the appeal from the Ontario Court of Appeal, held that the provision was intra vires the province.

Attorney-General (Que) v. Kellogg's Co. et al. [1978] 2 S.C.R. 211. In this case, the Government of Quebec had adopted a regulation, passed under the province's consumer protection legislation, aimed at regulating advertising intended for children. The Supreme Court of Canada, by a six to three decision, allowed an appeal from the Quebec Court of Appeal where the majority had taken the view that the regulation in question was an attempt to legislate on the content of broadcasting, a matter falling within federal jurisdiction. The Supreme Court, however, held the regulation to be valid on the ground that the province had a general power to exercise control over advertising in Quebec for children under ss. 92(13) and (16) of the B.N.A. Act.

Attorney-General (Canada) and Dupond v. Montreal [1978] 2 S.C.R. 770. In this case, the constitutional validity of certain sections of a Montreal city by-law and an ordinance passed under the by-law were challenged. The Supreme Court of Canada, in dismissing an appeal from the Quebec Court of Appeal, upheld the constitutional validity of the by-law and ordinance as being enactments dealing with matters of a local and private nature in the province under s. 92(16) of the B.N.A. Act.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 3, 1980

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. John Morrow Godfrey, Joint Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, presented the following report:

Tuesday, June 3, 1980

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has the honour to present its first report as follows:

(STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS NO. 9)

Your committee submits again to both Houses of Parliament the criteria it will use for the review and scrutiny of statutory instruments:

Whether any regulation or other statutory instrument within its terms of reference, in the judgement of the committee:

1. (a) is not authorized by the terms of the enabling statute, or, if it is made pursuant to the prerogative, its terms are not in conformity with the common law; or

(b) does not clearly state therein the precise authority for the making of the instrument;

2. has not complied with the provisions of the Statutory Instruments Act with respect to transmittal, recording, numbering or publication;

3. (a) has not complied with any tabling provision or other condition set forth in the enabling statute; or

(b) does not clearly state therein the time and manner of compliance with any such condition;

4. makes some unusual or unexpected use of the powers conferred by the enabling statute or by the prerogative;

5. trespasses unduly on the rights and liberties of the subject;

6. (a) tends directly or indirectly to exclude the jurisdiction of the courts without explicit authorization therefor in the enabling statute; or

(b) makes the rights and liberties of the subject dependent on administrative discretion rather than on the judicial process;

7. purports to have retroactive effect where the enabling statute confers no express authority so to provide or, where such authority is so provided, the retroactive effect appears to be oppressive, harsh or unnecessary;

8. appears for any reason to infringe the rule of law or the rules of natural justice;

9. provides without good and sufficient reason that it shall come into force before registration by the Clerk of the Privy Council;

10. in the absence of express authority to that effect in the enabling statute or prerogative, appears to amount to the exercise of a substantive legislative power properly the subject of direct parliamentary enactment, and not merely to the formulation of subordinate provisions of a technical or administrative character properly the subject of delegated legislation;

11. without express provision to the effect having been made in the enabling statute or prerogative, imposes a fine, imprisonment or other penalty, or shifts the onus of proof of innocence to the person accused of an offence;

12. imposes a charge on the public revenues or contains provisions requiring payment to be made to the Crown or to any other authority in consideration of any license or service to be rendered, or prescribes the amount of any such charge or payment, without express authority to that effect having been provided in the enabling statute or prerogative;

13. is not in conformity with the Canadian Bill of Rights;

14. is unclear in its meaning or otherwise defective in its drafting;

15. for any other reason requires elucidation as to its form or purport.

Your committee also reports that in relation to its permanent reference, section 26 of the Statutory Instruments Act, 1970-71-72, c. 38, it was empowered during the Fourth Session of the Thirtieth Parliament and during the First Session of the Thirty-first Parliament "to conduct a comprehensive study of the means by which Parliament can better oversee the government regulatory process and in particular to enquire into and report upon:

1. the appropriate principles and practices to be observed,

(a) in the drafting of powers enabling delegates of Parliament to make subordinate laws;

(b) in the enactment of statutory instruments;

(c) in the use of executive regulation—including delegated powers and subordinate laws; and the manner in which Parliamentary control should be effected in respect of the same;

2. the role, functions and powers of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments."

Your committee was unable to complete its study and therefore recommends that the same order of reference together with the evidence adduced thereon during the last two Parliaments be again referred to it.

Finally, your committee recommends: That its quorum be fixed at five (5) members, provided that both Houses are represented, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, and that the joint chairmen be authorized to hold meetings to receive and authorize the printing of evidence so long as three (3) members are present, provided that both Houses are represented:

That the committee have power to engage the services of such expert staff, and such stenographic and clerical staff as may be required; and

Your committee further recommends that it be empowered to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate.

Respectfully submitted,

John M. Godfrey,
Joint Chairman.

Senator Godfrey moved that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, presented the following report:

Tuesday, June 3, 1980

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to which was referred Bill S-2, intituled: "An Act to implement conventions between Canada and Spain, Canada and the Republic of Liberia, Canada and the Republic of Austria, Canada and Italy, Canada and the Republic of Korea, Canada and the Socialist Republic of Romania and Canada and the Republic of Indonesia and agreements between Canada and Malaysia, Canada and Jamaica and Canada and Barbados and a convention between Canada and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax", has, in obedience to the order of reference of Wednesday, May 28, 1980, examined the said bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

Salter A. Hayden,
Chairman

Senator Hayden moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

CLERK'S ACCOUNTS

The Clerk of the Senate laid on the Table a detailed statement of his receipts and disbursements for the fiscal year 1979-80 (French text).

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. William J. Petten moved:

That the Clerk's Accounts be referred to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES FOREIGN POLICY—REPORTED CRITICISM BY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I had a question for the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, but in his absence I suppose I should put it to the Leader of the Government.

I would have asked the chairman whether it was his intention to invite the Secretary of State for External Affairs to appear before his committee, which is currently dealing with Canada-U.S. relations, to explain the criticism he recently levied against U.S. foreign policy. But maybe I should ask the Leader of the Government if it is his intention, because I understand that Mr. MacGuigan was expressing the government's opinion and views, to invite the chairman to call Mr. MacGuigan before his committee.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee is not in the chamber at this moment. He may arrive momentarily. I know he is in the building. May I take this opportunity to clarify, insofar as I am able, certain accounts pertaining to the television interview given a few days ago by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

During that interview the minister was replying to a quick question at the end of the long television appearance and, had there been more time, without question, he would have expanded on his views. It is saddening to hear the cynical laughter of the opposition, the cynicism of the opposition.

Senator Flynn: You should see the smiles behind you.

Senator Perrault: In any event, the government's position is that the west needs the leadership of the United States. We only become concerned when that leadership is lacking. We have always stressed as well that we want to be consulted about matters affecting our vital interests. While we have to try, of course, to limit disagreement to matters of real substance, a certain amount of it is normal and even healthy—indeed, I am sure the opposition will admit this is a good thing. The New England poet, Robert Frost, once said that honest fences make honest neighbours. There must be honest differences of opinion from time to time.

Senator Flynn: There is a difference between being honest and being stupid.

Senator Perrault: Well, the Leader of the Opposition can say that that view is stupid, but opinions held strongly by two nations are not necessarily always in concert. There are divergences.

● (2015)

The Leader of the Opposition has not made reference to statements made regarding the French government during that interview. I presume his reason for wanting to hear the Secretary of State for External Affairs on foreign policy relates mostly to the statements which were supposed to have been made with respect to the relationship between Canada and the United States.

Senator Flynn: It would be interesting to compare the statement made by the Leader of the Government with that made in the other place yesterday by the Prime Minister, because it seems to me that he was endorsing what the Honourable Mark MacGuigan had said practically in every respect.

In any event, I think that if Mr. MacGuigan feels that he should correct, explain, clarify or expand upon his statements, possibly he should appear before the Senate committee chaired by Senator van Roggen. My suggestion to the Leader of the Government would be that he recommend to that committee that they invite Mr. MacGuigan to explain his statements.

Senator Perrault: I know, that as an ex officio member of that distinguished Senate committee, the Leader of the Opposition may well wish to advance this proposal at the next meeting of the committee.

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator Perrault: If he is able to enlist the support of enough allies in that committee, they will undoubtedly issue an invitation to the minister to appear.

Senator Flynn: Because the Leader of the Government can enlist so many allies, I suggest that he do it. I am willing to do it, but if the Leader of the Government tells his troops not to support my suggestion, it will not go very far.

Senator Perrault: I think the Leader of the Opposition underestimates his persuasive and eloquent abilities.

Senator Flynn: I don't underestimate the strength of your directives.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

FISHERIES—EAST COAST BOUNDARY CONTROVERSY

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. Would he produce to this chamber a report on the Canada-U.S. east coast boundary controversy, and would he do so as soon as possible so that a problem which is very detrimental to Canada-U.S. relations might be resolved at the earliest opportunity?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): That question will be taken as notice.

FINANCE

STATEMENT BY DEPUTY MINISTER TO NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. The Deputy Minister of Finance appeared before the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance last week. At that meeting he stated:

> Indeed, the deficit problem is going to have to be solved by generalized tax increases ultimately across the board.

Does the Minister of State for Economic Development associate himself with this expression of government policy?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I must say that that is a novel way of putting the question, and I commend my honourable friend's ingenuity for putting it that way. My reply to him is, when statements of that kind are made for and on behalf of the government, they usually are made by the Minister of Finance and not by the Deputy Minister of Finance. He may have been expressing a personal opinion rather than government policy. I am sure my friend would recognize that he has a right to do so.

Senator Flynn: There is no answer yet.

Senator Charbonneau: The deputy minister went on to state that it was his belief that the deficit problem was not going to be solved by major reductions in federal expenditures. Assuming, perhaps incorrectly, that reducing the deficit is a priority of the government, would the minister please tell us what particular tax increases are being considered, given that no major reductions in federal expenditures are envisaged?

● (2020)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators will recognize that the deputy minister said, as I understood the previous quotation, that it would be a broad range of tax increases. In expressing his opinion on that matter, I think it is fairly simple and quite straightforward to suggest that if the deficit problem is to be reduced, obviously there is a need for some increased revenue. I do not think he was any more specific than he could be, in that he looked at the revenue side, and in matters of taxation that is obviously important. If the honourable senator wants to draw me into a more specific definition of which taxes, by how much and that sort of thing, I should caution him that that would be a rather futile exercise.

Senator Flynn: We tried that during the election campaign.

Senator Olson: The Minister of Finance will be making those announcements if and when such announcements are to be made.

Senator Charbonneau: I was not asking the minister to tell us of any particular taxes or any particular points. I was wondering whether he associates himself with that policy, which is completely new to all of us on this side.

Senator Olson: Only to the extent that there is only one of two ways to reduce the deficit, and that is either to cut spending or to increase revenue, so it is not hard to be associated with that very simple approach to dealing with the problem that the deputy minister was dealing with. He may have come down more on one side, to increase revenue rather than reduce expenditures. I do not think that is anything new in this respect, in that we announced before we were elected, and have maintained since, that a policy of restraint on expenditures would be part of our program.

Senator Asselin: When will that be?

Senator Olson: But we were not going to have that as such a high priority that we forgot there were some people out there who needed help. We stand by our position that we are going to help those who need it most, and that is why Parliament has before it now an increase in the guaranteed income supplement, and so on.

Senator Flynn: We will see that in due course.

Senator Charbonneau: Am I to interpret the minister as saying that he disassociates himself from what was said as far as cutting expenditures is concerned? That is exactly what the deputy minister said the other day, that nobody was suggesting that government expenditures should be cut.

Senator Olson: That is an interpretation the honourable senator can put on it. I don't know exactly the context in which that reply was made, but the honourable senator will remember the passage in the Speech from the Throne in which we said we are advocating not less government but more efficient government than we had prior to February 18.

Senator Flynn: Great praise of the Speech from the Throne.

Senator Roblin: I should like to follow up on the question my honourable friend has just asked. The minister has made it quite clear to us that we are probably going to have higher expenditures, a larger deficit and higher taxes, all three.

Senator Olson: That is a wrong interpretation.

Senator Roblin: I think I will hang my hat on that one until I know something better. In view of the fact that the minister is reluctant, and indeed I suggest unable, to tell us what the government policy is on this matter, would he inquire of his colleague the Minister of Finance when he expects to present the country with a budget?

• (2025)

Senator Olson: Yes, honourable senators, I shall give that undertaking, but I shall not give any guarantee as to a specific answer coming back, because normally the Minister of Finance, when he is ready to announce the date of a budget, does so whether he is asked a question or not.

Senator Roblin: Could my honourable friend tell us what answer the minister does give him, whatever that answer may be?

Senator Olson: Yes, I will give that undertaking.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—CANADIAN PEACE INITIATIVES

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I would like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government, and I must confess disappointment in him for the first time in the many years I have known him.

Senator Flynn: You are lucky.

Senator Macquarrie: He seemed not to be sufficiently defensive of the Secretary of State for External Affairs in this government whose statement on Sunday struck me, as a long-time internationalist, as one of the finest and most articulate utterances of any Canadian minister in charge of our external affairs. Apparently that view is not shared by the leader opposite.

I would like to say as one who believes that, despite our high regard for the United States, we do not have to sing "Yankee Doodle Dandy" at every mistake they make. I would like to ask the leader if he can say in the terrible, urgent, painful exigencies in the Middle East at the present time, where mayors of important cities on the West Bank are being the victims of bombs, the victims almost of murder—

Senator Hays: What is the question?

Senator Macquarrie: My dear friend, I remember you in the House of Commons and the greatest claim you had to fame was that you were rarely there. I would suggest that if you know much about parliamentary assemblies, and if you will contain your rudeness and crudeness, the usual thing is to listen to people who are on their feet and then you get to your feet and make whatever comment you wish to make.

Senator Hays: What is the question?

Senator Macquarrie: You are obviously not sensitive enough to know what I am saying. So I would like to ask the government leader—

An Hon. Senator: Get to the question.

Senator Macquarrie: If these people want to make light of a very serious international situation, that is fine by me. If you feel that the Speaker should ask me to sit down and you two gabble away between yourselves, that is fine.

Senator Hays: What is the question?

Senator Macquarrie: You are not listening. I never thought you did listen.

Senator Hays: But this is the Question Period.

Senator Macquarrie: You are not an expert on this. I prefer to listen to the Speaker. I am asking a question about a problem that could engulf the whole world. You can drink your syllabub any time you like. You are very rarely in these parliamentary chambers. You can do what you like. I would like to direct my question to the Leader of the Government who is a man of compassion and understanding. I would like to ask him if in these very, very trying circumstances, in an area so crucial to the whole future peace of the world, and when the turmoil is increasing not only by the day but by the hour, he can tell me as a man who has assessed the whole world situation what Canada is doing, since it is in close relationship with the State of Israel, to try to ameliorate the tensions and to diminish the terrible animosity which could bring upon us what he as a great Christian scholar believes could be Armageddon in our time.

• (2030)

Senator Hays: What is your question?

Senator Macquarrie: You would be smart to keep quiet, Senator Hays. I never heard you say much in the other place, and I do not think you say much in this house.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would like to launch a personal peace initiative at this moment in the Senate. Certainly, I shall use my good offices to achieve understanding among the dissident factors here.

I would say at the outset, honourable senators, that I agree with Senator Macquarrie's view that the Secretary of State for External Affairs made a very eloquent statement on television the other evening. My admiration for the Minister of State for External Affairs has always been of the highest order ever since we were both first elected to the other place in 1968.

Certainly, differences do occur from time to time between neighbours. That is normal. Honest differences form part of our history and our relations with the United States. For example, the fact that we have a fisheries disagreement with the United States does not in any way diminish our fundamental friendship with that country. Yet the lack of an agreement in the fisheries area continues, as Senator Marshall mentioned earlier, to be an outstanding source of difficulty between our two countries.

I think most Canadians, regardless of party affiliation, admire the forthright statement made the other evening by the Secretary of State for External Affairs with respect to our relationship with the United States and other nations. He also made statements relating to one of the leading aspirants for the office of the Presidency of the United States and other matters. Many of his statements were franker and considerably more candid, perhaps, than has been the case, at times, in the past.

So in no sense did I intend to extend only faint-hearted support for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

As far as the Middle East is concerned, Canada, as Senator Macquarrie, having studied this problem for many years, is aware, has a long history of attempting to ameliorate the situation in that area. Senator Macquarrie himself has made an important contribution to the Canadian dialogue with respect to the difficult problems there. In addition to our efforts through the diplomatic channels, we have been paramount in our efforts to provide peacekeeping forces for the Middle East, and that is something of which all Canadians can be proud. As well, I think most Canadians are unaware of the fact that Canada, of over 150 nations in the world, for many years has been among the top dozen contributors to Palestinian refugee relief. This is something not known to many Canadians. Canada has been unsparing in its generosity and its efforts to alleviate the misery of these people, who find themselves in very difficult circumstances. That same approach has been taken by this nation in many other of the world's trouble areas. Canadians can take pride in that fact.

I know honourable senators will understand that, because of the fast-moving situation in that area of the world, it will be necessary for me to take the essence of that question as notice. Hopefully, an answer can be provided tomorrow.

Senator Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I rarely ask a supplementary question—and I do not want any rude interjection from Senator Hays—but I would like it to be clear that the Government of Canada does not regard the candid utterances of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the people of Canada as being improper or inappropriate at this very critical time in our history—a time when, as that great and distinguished American, Harrison Salisbury, said, perhaps the best thing that America's allies can do is to speak frankly to it.

Senator Flynn: That is a new kind of supplementary.

Senator Macquarrie: It is my kind.

Senator Flynn: Yes, and you can have it.

THE CABINET

SENATORS WITH MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITIES—APPEARANCE BEFORE HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMITTEES

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate relating to a motion put pursuant to Standing Order 43 of the other place. By this motion, a member of Parliament requested that the Prime Minister of Canada consider the possibility of having members of the cabinet who are also members of this house appear before appropriate committees of the House of Commons in respect of the actions they take in connection with their respective responsibilities. I wonder if any consideration has been given to that problem.

● (2035)

The motion I refer to brings to mind the possibility of members of the cabinet in the House of Commons appearing before committees of this house for a discussion of how they are carrying out their responsibilities to the people of Canada, so that we can determine the direction our efforts should take.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if I recall correctly, that matter was dealt with during the time when the distinguished Leader of the Opposition was the government leader in this chamber. The question arose, as I recall, with regard to the same matter; that is to say, whether or not ministers from the Senate might appear before committees of the House of Commons. It may be recalled that an understanding was reached and a solution was found to that particular question, which may well be enshrined in the revised rules of this chamber. The honourable senator, of course, may not have been in the chamber at that time.

There has never been any difficulty as far as members of Parliament or members of the cabinet from the other place testifying here is concerned. They have spoken in committee of the whole, and have certainly spoken before Senate committees from time to time, on invitation from the Senate. Therefore, I do not consider that there are any real impediments in either chamber of Parliament.

There have been opinions offered that from time to time ministers from the Senate should be called upon to answer questions during Question Period in the other place. I have sought some legal opinions on this subject. It would be a rather unusual and exotic procedure, perhaps, but there may be circumstances under which it could be desirable.

GRAIN

CANADIAN GRAINS COUNCIL—STATEMENT BY SECRETARY-GENERAL

Hon. Martha P. Bielish: Honourable senators, my question is addressed to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. I regret that he is not here today, but perhaps the Leader of the Government can take the message to him, or give me the appropriate response himself.

In an article in the Toronto Globe and Mail, the Secretary-General of the Canadian Grains Council, Donald A. Dever, is reported as having announced that the Canadian Grains Council seeks the abolition of the Crowsnest Pass rate. Would the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, or, in this case, the leader, please comment on this statement. This is a matter of great concern to Canadian farmers.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would not presume to offer a personal opinion on this subject, which is complicated and very controversial. I would be very pleased, however, to convey the question to the minister, who because of his responsibilities cannot be here this evening.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CUBAN REFUGEES—CANADIAN INVOLVEMENT

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

It is my understanding that 32 of the 70 Cuban persons who have been able to get out of their country, and who have applied for and received permission to come to Canada, have indeed arrived today. Would the Leader of the Government please undertake to confirm for us that only 70 people out of the quota of 300 have in fact applied to come.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I checked approximately thirty minutes ago with regard to the current count. The information, however, was not available, though I think it should be available by now, and I hope we can have an adequate reply tomorrow.

Senator Nurgitz: I have a supplementary question. Would the Leader of the Government also inform this chamber as to whether the policy is that Canada is limiting its acceptance out of only the approximately 10,000 who applied for refugee status—that is, those who applied to the Peruvian embassy in Havana—or is Canada also prepared to accept some of the many thousands who have been attempting to flee by ship from Cuba?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I understand that the normal criteria applied to refugees will apply in the case of these refugees from Cuba. It is a continuing challenge to our immigration authorities to determine who from any nation constitutes a valid refugee; who among them would face imprisonment or political persecution should they return to their country of origin. So the normal criteria are being applied to those people from Cuba.

There have been a number of statements in the United States that at least a portion of those refugees have been turned out of Cuban prisons, have been forced to leave Cuba, and are, in effect, being shipped out. It is alleged that the refugee flow includes certain mental incompetents and others. Whether these reports are true, I believe the honourable senator would agree that we should apply our standard Canadian criteria to those refugees who wish to come to Canada.

GRAIN

TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES AT PRINCE RUPERT, BRITISH COLUMBIA

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government arising out of his kind invitation to us some time ago to attend the opening, when it takes place, of the Prince Rupert grain terminal.

In view of that invitation, could the leader inform us as to the status of that project, in light of the statement by the project manager to the effect that procrastination by the federal Treasury Board is making it difficult to meet the completion date for the grain terminal?

He says that delays in awarding contracts for site preparation are throwing the construction schedule for the terminal out by some months, and that if there are any more delays the bad weather season will cause construction to be set back by a full year. Could the Leader of the Government give us a report tonight on the status of the project; if not, could he give us one later in the week?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the government remains optimistic about the project. The major negotiations have been completed.

I wish to say that those interested in the project should still plan to be present at the opening. With respect to delays, I understand that a principal delay in the project was caused when the Minister of Transport under the previous government delayed the project many months in order to review the project. I suggest that had it not been for that unfortunate eight-month delay, an opening ceremony might already have taken place.

Senator Flynn: Shall we have a report tomorrow?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I am tempted to get into the Prince Rupert debate, because I believe the impression my honourable friend has left is quite inaccurate, in that the reason for the delay was hiking the amount of money that was to be spent by two or three times. If the Leader of the Government checks the record he will find that that was the reasonable and acceptable excuse for the delay.

TRANSPORT

CHURCHILL, MANITOBA—RAILWAYS INTERCHANGE AGREEMENT—ICEBREAKING FACILITIES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I rise to ask the Leader of the Government a more regional question affecting my part of the world. It has to do with the progress that may or may not have been made in respect of an interchange agreement between the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific Railway on the Churchill grain subdivision to northern Manitoba.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that question will be taken as notice. I have no reply at my desk at this moment.

Senator Roblin: I quite understand. It is a detailed matter.

While my honourable friend is looking into the interchange agreement, would he be so kind as to ascertain when the first federal icebreaker will arrive at Churchill. I believe that the motor vessel Arctic has been nominated for this task. There is some disappointment because of the fact that it does not appear to be arriving as early as it did last season, with the obvious result on the length of the shipping period in Churchill. I would appreciate knowing what the plan was with respect to that.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that information will be included in the reply to be given to the previous question.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Florence B. Bird moved the second reading of Bill C-16, to amend to Old Age Security Act.

She said: Honourable senators, it gives me great satisfaction to introduce Bill C-16, to amend the Old Age Security Act. It will increase the guaranteed income supplement by $35 a month for every "household".

This is essential legislation because it will help to alleviate the suffering of many Canadians who are the victims of the cruel pinch of poverty as well as the passage of time. Because it deals with an immediate and crushing need, this bill quickly received unanimous approval in the other place. I hope that will also happen here.

Honourable senators, as we all know, the ravages of inflation inflict the greatest hardship on the old and the poor—those who are least able to take care of themselves.

Our responsibility, as members of this house, is clear and undeniable. We must do what we can to help them. At the same time, our efforts to provide increased financial help must be guided by our equal responsibility to manage Canada's limited economic resources wisely and prudently. Bill C-16 meets both of those national objectives.

The history of Canada's old age security legislation is relatively brief, but it is impressive because we have moved forward so quickly in such a short time. The bill before us today is one of many progressive steps taken by the federal government during the last 30 years.

An Hon. Senator: Which government?

Senator Bird: The Liberal government. In 1927 the first Old Age Pension Act provided a means-tested benefit of up to $20 a month for long-term Canadian residents who had reached the age of 70. The cost was shared by the federal and provincial governments. That princely sum was better than nothing during the dirty thirties.

However, it was not until after the Second World War that any drastic change took place. During the post-war period Canada became a rich, industrialized nation, and so we could afford to listen to the dictates of conscience. Even so, it was not until 1952 that a new Old Age Security Act raised the benefit to $40 a month. Every Canadian who had reached the age of 70, and who had met the residence requirements, was entitled to receive an OAS pension as a matter of right.

In 1957, the act was changed again to reduce the residence requirements, and later on, in 1960, provision was made for the payment of benefits outside of the country.

Since then the amount of the OAS benefits has been raised steadily over the years. By 1965, the pension level had increased to $75 a month. After that, there were really dramatic improvements in our social security system. In 1966, the retirement age for an OAS pensioner began to be reduced, one year at a time, so that by 1970 the pensionable age had been reduced from 70 to 65.

[Senator Roblin.]

The major break-through in the mid-sixties came with the introduction of the Canada Pension Plan and the guaranteed income supplement. The Canada Pension Plan is a social insurance program designed to provide workers and their families with a basic level of earnings-related protection against the contingencies of retirement, disability and death. The GIS provides an income-tested supplement to OAS pensioners who have little or no income apart from their basic pension.

In 1968, provisions for adjusting benefits in accordance with the consumer price index were introduced, in order to protect pensioners from the escalation in the cost of living. Less than a decade later, the spouse's allowance, the SPA program, was introduced. Its indexed benefits are equal to the basic OAS and an amount equivalent to the maximum GIS at the married rate, and are given to the spouse aged between 60 and 65 years of a pensioner who is in receipt of the GIS.

More recently, we gave our approval to several amendments to the Old Age Security Act. In the fall of 1978 provision was made for the continued payment of the spouse's benefit for up to six months following the death of the pensioner spouse. The GIS benefit level was increased by $20 a month, effective January 1979.

Last year we approved the extension of the allowance even further. An SPA recipient, whose spouse has died, now continues to receive a benefit until the age of 65 when he or she becomes eligible for the OAS pension and the GIS. Furthermore, allowance recipients who have been widowed prior to this date become eligible to apply for the reinstatement of benefits.

What, in detail, does Bill C-16 do? It proposes an increase of $35 a month for each household. If both a man and wife are receiving the guaranteed income supplement, or if one is receiving the GIS and the other is receiving the spouse's allowance, each will receive a cheque for $17.50 extra a month. All GIS recipients who are single, divorced, separated or widowed, or who are married to persons who are not yet eligible for OAS or SPA benefits, will receive an increase of $35 in their pension cheque. This increase will be added to the regular quarterly cost of living increase in July.

Approximately 1.3 million elderly Canadians will be eligible to receive these income-tested benefits in July. Of that number, an estimated 740,000 persons, 60 per cent of them women, will receive a benefit at the single rate; 595,000 persons will receive a benefit at the married rate. Honourable senators, these are shocking statistics, especially when we stop to consider that this represents over half of all Canadians over the age of 65 who are eligible for OAS benefits.

Even though benefits are indexed every three months to ensure that their purchasing power will not be eroded by inflation, GIS and SPA recipients are still having a very tough time.

All those unattached, old people are having the worst time because the combined OAS-GIS income level comes to less than 80 per cent of the Statistics Canada revised low-income cut-off level. In other words, in spite of all the progress we have made, our social security program still does not guarantee single persons an income adequate to maintain a comfortable, healthy way of life. Concern over the plight of these people has been mentioned a number of times on both sides of the Senate. This is, of course, not a matter of party politics but of simple human decency and compassion.

Let me focus for a minute on the situation of the single, divorced, separated or widowed GIS pensioners, since it is they who will benefit most from this bill. At the present time, it is estimated that they are guaranteed an annual income in combined OAS and GIS benefits of $4,240 in the 1980-81 fiscal year. The $35 a month provided in Bill C-16 will increase the guaranteed income to $4,564, or about 83 per cent of the Statistics Canada low-income cut-off level during the fiscal year 1980-81. In 1981-82, when the increase will have been payable for a full 12 months, this percentage will rise to approximately 85 per cent of the cut-off level.

Honourable senators, the Statistics Canada low-income cut-off level is the poverty measure being used at the present time. It is possible that some more appropriate measure may be adopted in the future, but right now this is the yardstick being used.

Some of those pensioners may have an income slightly above the poverty level because, if they have some income from savings or can do a small amount of work, they keep $1 of the GIS for every $2 that they earn. Even so, with the $35 increase, 680,000 of these single pensioners will be living below the poverty level.

Married couples who are both receiving the GIS or the GIS plus the spouse's allowances are slightly better off than single persons. They are guaranteed an annual income of about $7,840 in the 1980-81 fiscal year, which is about 100 per cent of the low-income level. With the increase of $35 in the GIS, the yearly income of an eligible couple will go up to $8,162, which is about 3 per cent over the Statistics Canada low-income level. This is why Bill C-16 proposes a proportionately greater increase for single, unattached GIS pensioners than for pension couples.

We know that the basic living costs for people living alone are close to two-thirds of those of a couple. In order to provide extra assistance in the most equitable way possible, Bill C-16 has taken this proportional factor directly into account.

We have come a long way from the first pension of $20 a month. Even so, the statistics tell a story of old people and poverty that is intolerable in Canada today. That is why I am asking honourable senators to give their unanimous approval to Bill C-16. I assure them that the government would like to provide a guaranteed income above the poverty level for all of those poor people. Unfortunately, right now our limited economic resources do not make it possible for us to do that. Certainly we all look forward to the day when it can be done.

What about the cost of Bill C-16? For the balance of this fiscal year 1980-81, the cost of implementing the $35 GIS increase will be about $345 million. In 1981-82, the first full fiscal year for which the increase will be in effect, the additional costs are estimated at $525 million. This is in addition to the regular, ongoing costs of the OAS-GIS program. This is a substantial sum of money, and we are most anxious that it reach the hands of those eligible to receive it as quickly as possible.

In order for this increase to be passed on directly to pensioners, some provincial financial assistance programs must be modified. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has written to her provincial counterparts to enlist their support. In provinces which have so-called "top-up" payment programs, the minister has asked that the full $35 increase be passed on. She has also urged that, whenever feasible, the full increase be added to the comforts allowance available to pensioners in institutions. We are hoping for co-operation from all provincial governments, but so far, only Nova Scotia and British Columbia have agreed not to deprive pensioners of this necessary increase.

Bill C-16 is designed to provide immediate short-term relief to elderly Canadians facing economic hardship today. At the same time, the government is looking beyond short-term answers to the well-documented problems apparent in Canada's retirement income system. The Minister of National Health and Welfare hopes that a national conference on pensions may be convened this autumn which would focus national attention on the options for fundamental change in the long term, and lead to necessary improvement in our whole system of private and public pensions.

Honourable senators, in conclusion, let me remind you about what life is like for the people which Bill C-16 is trying to help. Up until two years ago I lived in a large apartment in an old apartment house which was built in 1912. Along the corridors outside the big apartments a row of small rooms was reserved for staff—the cooks and maids which many people employed before World War I. Those rooms have been turned into apartments. Seventeen years ago, they rented for $50 a month; today they are renting for between $175 and $200 a month. There is a refrigerator in each small room and a cupboard which contains a couple of hot plates. There is a small oven in the more expensive apartments. There is a separate bathroom with a shower. Most of these small apartments are occupied by elderly women.

From time to time, on my way home from work, I used to drop in to say hello, because the days are very long and lonely for the old and poor. At around 6 o'clock I would find a pensioner sitting at a small table covered with a clean cloth having her evening meal of tea, toast and jam. I hope that this bill will give them an "egg to their tea," or perhaps a slice of fish or chicken. In that way, they may get a bit of protein into their bodies, which may keep them out of a nursing home or a hospital bed from which there is no return.

• (2100)

It is because of these poor people, honourable senators, that I hope you will give prompt and unanimous approval to Bill C-16.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, before Senator Croll speaks may I ask if Senator Bird is taking into consideration the fact that, despite the $35 increase per household and despite the fact that the government has introduced legislation to allow widows of married pensioners to take advantage of the increases in old age assistance, there are still thousands of widows, single widows, who have not been able to take advantage of the increases in the GIS, and who are still restricted and not able to get any benefits—single widows who did not come into their own as a result of legislation which was passed by governments in the past; single widows who have to bring up families and who are not able to take advantage of the increases in old age security under the GIS, and who are still relegated to getting benefits under social assistance. Isn't it time that we in the Senate stood our ground and said to the government, "Let us protect those single widows who are discriminated against under human rights and any other type of legislation." Let us stand our ground and say that we want those people protected. Isn't it time that we stood our ground and presented that to the government?

Senator Bird: I think Senator Marshall is alluding to widows under 60 who are not eligible for the widows' allowance. I suppose there is no such thing as perfect legislation and, of course, the government is well seized of the importance of looking after all the old widows. The government would certainly like to make it easier for them not to be put on public assistance, but if you are not going to realize that at the moment we do not have the funds we would like to have, and that we cannot at the moment reduce the entire amount by another five years, where will it end? But certainly I take their plight into consideration and I am always concerned about the plight of the poor.

Senator Denis: I have a short question to the honourable senator. Do I understand that the $35 increase is for a household, and that if there is only one who is entitled to it, he or she will receive only $17.50 per month?

Senator Bird: If there is a husband and wife living together, they will get $35 a month; but if there is a person living alone, he or she will get $35 a month.

Senator Thompson: Was there any rationale for deciding on the amount of $35. Was that the most the minister was able to get from treasury, or was it based on a percentage of the rise in the cost of living, or was there any rationale at all for choosing $35?

Senator Bird: There was certainly a rationale and that was the money that was available at the time. As the Minister of State for Economic Development answered earlier, we are trying to give as much as we can to those who need it most but, of course, our funds are limited.

• (2110)

Senator Thompson: Is it computed on any basis? Can we see a principle in it, apart from the fact that it is the only money available? Is it based on the cost of living for so many years?

Senator Donahoe: It is computed on the need for votes.

Senator Bird: I will take notice of the question.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I have spoken so often on this subject that I have started talking to myself about it—and the way I explained the proposition to myself was very interesting. But I had little thought in 1927, when I was active in support of the original bill, that I would find myself on this occasion and in these circumstances. The only thing that I can say about what is being done today, of course, is that I support it, because it is the only ball game in town. It is a matter of choices, and this is it. However, I do not agree that it is the answer to the problem.

Starting with a pension of $20 at the age of 70, with a means test which was a real mean one, we now have a pension of $186 a month, payable to everyone in Canada, 65 years of age, who meets residency requirements. We have a guaranteed income supplement, and sometimes I wish that the country would remember where that came from and the part the Senate played in bringing it about.

Senator Haidasz: That came from the Liberals.

Senator Croll: We also have the Canada Pension Plan.

Senator Haidasz: That came from the Liberals, too.

Senator Croll: In addition to that, we have special provision for our veterans.

Senator Haidasz: That came from the Liberals, too.

Senator Croll: Our senior citizens, for the most part, are still living below the poverty line, no matter which line you use, and we are not content with that. What we are offering today still does not improve their situation to any extent.

It is hard for me to stand up here and say what I am saying, because sometimes I can hardly believe what I am saying. To be more specific, our senior citizens, a great number of whom are single, are all below the poverty line. It is hard to believe that most of the older people are living below the poverty line in this country.

Senator Marshall: Are you prepared to hold up this bill because of that?

Senator Croll: So we have to do something about that. That is particularly applicable to those who live in metropolitan areas. They do a little better than that in the rural areas.

We are here applying a kind of a band-aid. We have been doing this from time to time, never wanting to really come to grips with the problem. We somehow do not realize that the supplementary assistance list grows and grows and grows. It is now one half the size of the old age security list. That leaves approximately 2.2 million persons in receipt of old age security, and 1.1 million in receipt of the supplement. That is a large number of people. This will perhaps permit it to grow a little slower, but it does not solve any problem.

We presented to this Parliament a method of dealing with this problem in order to try to do away with supplementary assistance, and I intend to enlarge on that because it is the only course of action that I can possibly see, and because no one else has suggested anything better. The older people in our country are no longer a small homogeneous group. They are now divided into the young-old, those between the ages of 65 and 70, and the old-old, those who are over the age of 75. They represent the fastest growing group in the entire population. When you realize that women are living 18 years beyond 65, and men are living 14 to 15 years beyond 65, according to statistics, we are adding a whole new generation of living people. That is a social achievement on our part. It is not a deficit of any kind.

The new generation of elderly Canadians also presents opportunities. Perhaps for the first time most people will know their grandparents, and even their great grandparents. With the gift of time and good health, older people now have more of a chance to change jobs, learn new skills and take up new interests. Life for many of those people really begins at age 60. So we have to do whatever we possibly can to make sure that the terms of "pension" and "retirement" are not interchangeable.

Let me say just one more thing, because there has been some misunderstanding. Has it ever occurred to you that we presented a report to this house recommending the imposition of taxes. This is not the most popular legislative chamber in the country, I am told, and sometimes some people do not think too much of us, but we have not heard a word from a worker protesting that. I have not heard a word of protest on that, and you have not either. Give that a thought. A non-elected body asks for the imposition of a tax, with no fooling around about it, and the small business groups have not said anything. We usually hear from them. Just try to put a tax on them and you will hear from them. Some members questioned that group regarding a pension plan and they said that they could not possibly afford it. That is a matter of record. They spoke not a word.

You have to reach some conclusion about that. There is some reason for it. The reason is that they realized there was a lot to the suggestions that we made, that something needs to be done. Perhaps we have got the best possible solution that they can foresee at the present time. It is worth a thought. Some of the contributions that have been made by members of the Senate—and others will be made in the future—are excellent, and they are going across the country and being thought about. However, there has been some misunderstanding, and I should like to take another minute or two to point it out.

A report made by a committee presents ideas, concepts and principles in general terms. The simpler it is, the better. If a report can be written that is suitable for discussion at the dinner table you have got it made. If a 10-year old sitting around the table questions his or her father or mother, or both, about this report or this news, then you have got people who are interested. They may not understand it perfectly, but they are interested and concerned enough to talk about it.

The second stage is different. The matter comes before Parliament. Parliament deals with it; it spells it out, and it must be specific. It can be rejected, accepted or improved upon, and the recommendations may or may not go down well. What I say is that the report points the direction. The bill has the details in it.

Some objection was taken in this chamber to compulsory retirement, which is a necessary part of the bill. The recommendation made by our committee was for flexible compulsory retirement—retire at 65, retire after 65, retire before 65; it doesn't matter. Something had to be done about it.

In 1898, compulsory retirement was first brought in, and it has remained since then. It has been accepted. In 1934, the Americans incorporated it into their Social Security Act. They wanted age 70. At that time, in the light of unemployment, the only way they could get it through Congress, the record shows, was by taking the age of 65. They regretted it then and have regretted it ever since. However, they brought an end to it in 1979, when they did away with it because it was a discrimination according to age. Dismissal by the calendar was something that was resented and not acceptable. It did not give a person an opportunity to rebut; he had to accept it whether he wanted to or not.

In the main, the opposition comes from the personnel directors and the public relations people whom they have been able to interest in this matter. However, if you read the House of Commons debate on this subject last week you will see that the Liberal government is in favour of flexible compulsory retirement, the Conservatives are in favour of it, and the NDP are in favour of it. Everyone has agreed with it.

We have done as much as we can possibly do at the present time. We have now tossed the ball into the other court. It is up to the other place to do what they ought to do. They can do it. I think we ought to make it clear to the people who are concerned that the House of Commons now has the matter before them, and they ought to do what is necessary as quickly as possible. We have done our share, and we will do our share when we get it back.

Another thing that was somewhat misunderstood was the question whether raising the premiums doubles the benefit. This was a matter that was raised earlier. With respect to raising the premiums, the Economic Council of Canada in its latest report, and every other report, has talked about raising them. As to doubling the benefits, what we said was not quite what we were alleged to have said. On page 67 of Retirement Without Tears we said:

> If no other changes were made in the structure of the Canada/Quebec Pension Plan it may be assumed that the approximate doubling of the contribution levels would yield a pension of roughly twice the size of present levels, or about $450 a month.

We were giving a general impression. We did not have actuarial figures. It would have been very hard to have injected an actuary into producing this report, which was being made by laymen. The ordinary man does not know who an actuary is, and I presume that 90 per cent of those in this house don't know what an actuary does anyway.

Senator Marshall: He doesn't know himself.

Senator Croll: One might say he is one of the fellows who fiddles with figures, and when you get the answer you always find you are on the wrong end of the answer. There is something that has to be taken into consideration. It is true that the economists have views, but their views have not been accepted, because there are human values involved. Consequently, what we said was said to the best of our ability, and it is for the people who deal with it to come to the conclusion finally on what the actual figures involved are.

One honourable senator said he had discussed the matter with the vice-chairman of the committee and myself, which was quite true, and he left an inference that he wanted to write a minority report but there was no provision for that. There is no provision for a minority report, but it is the practice and it is well known, and if he had asked me or anybody else he would have been told that all he had to do was to write a letter to the Clerk or to me and it would become part of the record. I have never seen it done in this house although I saw it done in the House of Commons on one occasion. But I have sat on a lot of committees in my lifetime, and I cannot remember one occasion when I agreed with everything that was said by the committee, and many times I disagreed, but it never occurred to me that it was a case for a minority report. That may appeal to some, but it is something that is not often practised.

● (2130)

There was another observation that troubled me somewhat. The honourable senator mentioned some major omissions from the list of witnesses. The first omission was the Canadian Congress of Labour, and then he mentioned the Ontario government and the Quebec government. The Canadian Congress of Labour was invited on June 15 and accepted. Then came the election, and after the election they called up and said they did not want to appear. It appeared there was some difference amongst the members as to compulsory retirement and whether or not they could support it totally.

The Province of Ontario was invited, but they replied that they had just ordered an inquiry into pensions and that it was just going on at that time. It is not finished yet. The report is due in a couple of days or a couple of weeks. The Quebec government said the very same thing, that they had just finished such an inquiry.

To indicate how the people are searching for an answer to this problem that is confronting us today, and on which we are still putting band-aids, I will point out that there are eight separate studies being done in this country today. Some of them have been completed already on this very subject.

There is the one by the Department of Finance Task Force under the chairmanship of Harvey Lazar—and he is a brilliant man. The second one was done by the Economic Council of Canada, and you have all seen that. The Province of Quebec had one and the report of the Ontario Royal Commission on the Status of Pensions is still in the making. The New Brunswick Commission on Mandatory Retirement is just about finished. Then there are the Conference Board in Canada study, the insurance companies' portability pension study, and the Senate study. There are eight of them, all trying to find some solution to the problem we are faced with at the present time.

I have drawn up a comparison between the Canada Pension Plan and the private pension plans and I have asked that copies be delivered to each one of you. At the outset I have something here which will take a minute or two to read but it is worth reading. I am reading from the Toronto Star of May 29, and the heading is "Industry told it may lose pensions trade."

> Insurance companies must move quickly to improve private pension plans or the federal government will take over more of the pension field, says David Pretty, retiring chairman of the Canadian Life Insurance Association.
> "If we don't want to see this (pension) segment of the insurance business change for the worse, we are going to have to offer some bold and innovative solutions," Pretty told delegates to the association's annual meeting.
> Many pension plans offered by private companies are not adjusted to reflect increases in the cost of living and are not portable, meaning that employees lose their private pension benefits when they change jobs, said Pretty, President of North American Life Assurance Co.
> "We all know the serious implications of further government funding to the capital market and therefore our economic system," he said. "Without an adequate supply of private capital, the market as we know it cannot function adequately."
> The coverage of the federal government's Canada Pension Plan—a maximum of 25 per cent of previous earnings—was designed to preserve a place for the private pension industry. Pretty said if private plans don't improve, the Canada Pension Plan might be expanded.

There are three witnesses in the chamber at the present time—Senator Flynn was there, Senator Denis was there, and I was there when the plan was deliberately kept at a low premium and low repayment in order that the private pension plans would come in and fill in the vacuum. Here we are 14 years later and they admit that nothing has been done. I read on:

> "Various reports that have been published recently have brought out forcibly the inadequacies of the private pension system."
> Pretty said private companies have resisted improvements that will cost them money and, as a result, the federal government will probably pass laws to make improvements compulsory.

"Our industry does not like compulsion, but I question if business will act quickly enough to improve pensions without legislation."

Pretty said the industry must live with the reality of inflation and "this means responding to the needs of the aged, the main victims of inflation."

While Pretty said he isn't advocating that private pensions go up with every increase in the cost of living index, there should be some form of adjustment.

Then we come to Donald Coxe, a member of the Royal Commission on the Status of Pensions in Ontario, who said:

—private companies should make their benefits more equitable—"there is a growing awareness that women are losers under the current plan design"—and should also disclose more information to policyholders.

"The stonewalling about investments, performance and funding that has been characteristic of many private plans will have to disappear," said Coxe, who is Vice-President of Mu-Cana Investment Counselling, a pension fund counselling group.

There you have it. You have in your hands at the moment a comparison table. I drew it up and I ask permission to put it on the record. I will take the responsibility for it.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed; honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

EXISTING PENSION PLANS—A COMPARISON

Essential Elements	Canada Pension Plan	Private Pension Plans
